that proviso has been read. I desire to raise a point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read the entire paragraph, beginning with line 3 and concluding with line 17.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to raise a point of order upon the proviso beginning in line 15.

Several Members. Too late!
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order comes too late. That proviso was read when the bill was last under consid-

Mr. BLAND. The amendments offered have all had relation to other portions of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire paragraph was read when the bill was last under consideration, and when its consideration was resumed to-day was read again at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. Therefore the Chair is of the opinion that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I wish to move an amendment to strike out that proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain that motion at the proper time. Is there any objection to permitting the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Outhwaite] to modify his amendment by inserting after the word "notes" the words "silver certificates?" The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio so far as I am concerned. It merely provides, as I understand, that the names of persons whose portraits are printed on notes, bonds, etc., shall be placed below such portraits.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is all; the amendment contains no other provision.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. OUTHWAITE as modified, it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now effer the amendment which has already been read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the paragraph add the following:

"Provided, That unless the patentees of said steam-presses shall accept the $500 already paid as royalty on each press, and the rate per thousand sheets herein provided, the said presses shall not be used by the Government after the close of the present fiscal year."

Mr. LONG. I raise a question of order on that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Long] raises a question of order, which he will state.

Mr. LONG. I submit that this proposition is very clearly a change of existing law. Under the law as existing to-day, the Secretary of the Treasury has a right to contract with the owners of this patent for its use; and he has done so. If this amendment should be adopted the law will be so changed that the Secretary can not contract with the owners of this patent unless he contracts at the rate of 1 cent per thousand impressions. To-day under the law, or under some provision of law, he has power to contract with the patentees at any price.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman if there is any general law aside from that referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES] covering this point?

Mr. LONG. I am not familiar with the law myself, but under the general law as it stands this contract may be made, and the very best evidence of the existence of the law is that the contract has been made and recognized.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is no evidence; there may have been no authority to make it.

Mr. LONG. And now you propose to pass a law forbidding the execution of that contract.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman refer the Chair to the law? Mr. LONG. I have said that I am not familiar with the law, but that the best proof of its existence is that the contract has been made and is recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directed his inquiry to the point as to whether or not the law under which the gentleman from Massachusetts makes his point of order was that referred to by the gentle-man from Illinois [Mr. Landes], who submitted a point of order when this bill was last under consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that there is no law except the law of the appropriation bill which authorizes the use of these steam-presses. There is no law authorizing the Secretary to make the contract.

Mr. FARQUHAR. None whatever.
Mr. RANDALL. And it is a matter that rests with Congress and arose out of an appropriation of money in an appropriation bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is all.

Mr. LONG. But, Mr. Chairman, admit for the sake of argument that there is no law—you are now making a new law, one which restricts the Secretary of the Treasury. That is necessarily new legislation; and it is a familiar principle in the application of our rules here that new legislation is not permitted upon appropriation bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to clause 3 of Rule XXI, which provides as follows:

That no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Now, sir, is it possible that with regard to the matter of printing the bonds, notes, and securities of the United States, a matter of such vital importance, that it is not competent for this House to say in an appropriation bill whether it shall be done by machines or how it shall be done? Why, sir, that exception was put into our rules for the very purpose of allowing some latitude to the Committee on Appropriations in the preparation of such bills and in providing for objects already in progress. This is an object already in progress. It is not questioned, I think, by any intelligent person that the printing of the notes and securities of the United States should be executed in the best manner. Why, suppose the use of the plate-printing presses was authorized by law, suppose there was authority of law for this contract, and we should understand that under that particular process we were having the bonds and the notes of the United States counterfeited in a most notorious manner, would it be held for an instant that under that condition of things we would be powerless here to help ourselves?

Mr. HOLMAN. Besides, this is simply a limitation on the expenditure.

Mr. BLOUNT. And, as the gentleman from Indiana suggests further, it is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the money. It has been done in this way over and over again under our rules; and the right to do it, it seems to me, can scarcely be questioned.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the fact also that this contract was made under an appropriation bill, and an examination of that law shows that this was the Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for the purchasing and operating of new and improved plate-printing presses.

Now, that applied of course to the appropriations contained in that particular bill, or that portion of the appropriation that might be expended for this purpose, and under that this payment was authorized.

Mr. BLOUNT. And it only related to that single appropriation

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is all.

Mr. RANDALL. Only to that particular case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia whether or not the only law upon this question is that found on page 515 of the Statutes at Large, volume 24, in the sundry civil appropriation bill of the last fiscal year, in which it appears as a proviso, as fol-

That any part of this sum may be used for the purchasing and operating of new and improved plate-printing presses.

Is that the only law?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to which he has just called attention.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the only law that I know of, and I do not think it sets out the power to make a contract such as has been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks—

Mr. LANDES. In connection with the question submitted by the Chair, I understand that since 1878 the appropriation bills have provided for the payment of royalty for the use of these steam printing-presses, and this has been embraced in each succeeding appropriation bill without any limitation. I understand further, Mr. Chairman, that a contract was made in 1878 between the patentees and the Government under which this royalty has been continuously paid from that time to this.

The law referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the appropriation bill was passed two years ago, I believe, and a contract was made between the Government and the patentees for the payment of $1 per thousand perfect impressions made on these machines as a royalty. The original contract, I think, was made with regard to the first presses, and it has never been renewed, but has been recognized by the Congress as being in force year after year, and has been accepted as the law governing this particular payment of royalty. Therefore, I submit, in view of these circumstances, that the contract is a continuing one, and that it was so recognized by the Congress of the United States, an implied contract, and was accepted by Congress and is now in force. Otherwise it would become the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make a new contract every year for the use of the machines, which construction I insist would be ridiculous.

The CHAIRMAN. A question involving a contract under existing law is not a matter which the Chair feels called to pass upon. The Chair is unable to ascertain whether there is any other law than this provision in the sundry civil bill of last year. If that be true—and no gentleman has suggested that there is any general law—the Chair will be compelled to overrule the point of order; because it is in the power of the House, under the rules, to place a limit upon this appropriation unless there be a general law to the contrary.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not like the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Landes] to go without any expression of difference of opinion as to binding of the Government by these contracts. The difference of opinion between that stated by the gentleman from Illinois and the one I conceive to be the condition of things is wide and radical. I would never consent to that construction without dissent as to the power which is claimed as resulting from the legislation of 1878, that it was a continuous contract. I maintain that the statute law does not provide for a continuous contract, and that it is not within the power of any Government officials to bind this Government in that way beyoud twelve months.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engravers', printers', and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, $174,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FORAN. I move to strike out the last word. I rise, Mr. Chairman, more for the purpose of making a correction in the RECORD of last Wednesday's proceedings than for the purpose of addressing the committee on this proposition. I desire the Clerk to read what I send to the desk

The Clerk read as follows:

A committee was appointed to look into the character of this work, and I have been solicitous to know, and I ask the question in all candor, whether all the printers in the bureau felt absolutely free to testify over there, as they would have done had it not been for a reign of terror established, if there was a reign of terror, and I do not say there was?

Mr. FORAN. By Mr. Graves or by the Knights of Labor, which?

Mr. Butterworth. Oh, my friend—
Mr. Foran. Who has the right to discharge over there?
Mr. Butterworth. We have nearly reached a condition of things in this country when nobody has the right to discharge and no individual the right to employ an American freeman without permission of some society. [Applause.]
Mr. Foran. I am glad of it.

Mr. FORAN. I now ask that the Clerk read the transcript of the original official notes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORAN. Who has the right to discharge over there?
Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We have reached nearly a condition of things in this country when nobody has the right to discharge.

Mr. FORAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that in this colloquy my colleague simply says this:

We have nearly reached a condition of things in this country where nobody has the right to discharge.

And to that I replied:

I am glad of it.

As this colloquy appears in the RECORD, however, there is this interpolation:

And no individual the right to employ an American freeman without the permission of some society.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FORAN] if he is aware of the fact that Mr. BUTTERWORTH is absent?

Mr. FORAN. I informed Mr. BUTTERWORTH yesterday that I intended to call attention to this matter.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Would it not be better to wait until he is present?

Mr. FORAN. I am not going to say anything derogatory of Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The interpolation was no doubt made inadvertently and without design to place me in a false position.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Why not wait until this afternoon or to-morrow?

Mr. FORAN. I desire to correct the RECORD now.
Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Does the gentleman think he can succeed better now than if Mr. BUTTERWORTH were present? If he does, then I would suggest that he can go on.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. FORAN. I decline to be interrupted. I desire to be placed right on the record.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Iam informed that Mr. BUTTERWORTH is before the Supreme Court and unable to be here, and I think it is unfair to call it up at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If the gentleman declines to be interrupted I suppose he will have to go on.

Mr. FORAN. The only fault I find is, what is here stated, to wit, "and no individual the right to employ an American freeman without permission of some society" was not uttered by my colleague, and of course my reply could not apply to it. No such colloquy occurred, and all that I desire is that what my colleague did say shall appear. What I said was, that I was glad to see that we have nearly reached a condition of things in this country in which employers had almost lost the right to discharge men. What I had reference to was the fact, the notorious fact, well known everywhere, that employers do discharge men because they are American freemen, and because they exercise the rights of American freemen; because they belong to labor organizations, and because, frequently, they exercise the rights of American freemen as to how they shall vote. That is all I said. Of course I never meant to say that I was glad we had reached a condition in which no individual had the right to employ anybody except by permission of some society.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs of light-houses: For repairing, rebuilding, and improving light-houses and buildings, for improvements to grounds connected therewith; for establishing and repairing pier-head lights; for illuminating apparatus and machinery to replace that already in use, and for incidental expenses relating to these various objects, $300,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Page 13, line 6, after the word "therewith," insert "including the erection of oil-houses and other inexpensive structures that may be required for the storage and care of public property at or near light-houses; and in line 9 strike out "$300,000" and insert "$400,000."

Mr. RANDALL. Upon that I make the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.
Mr. RANDALL. That amendment proposes to authorize the contruction of oil-houses not now authorized by law. If any one will read the estimates, he will find that of the four hundred thousand there included, $50,000 was intended to be used for the erection of oil-houses at light-houses.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not a point of order. I am perfectly willing to modify the amendment so as to reduce the amount to $350,000, but I hope the point of order will not be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to make the point of order against this proposition, because I wish to fairly consider what amount of money is really necessary for this purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. For oil-houses?

Mr. RANDALL. Both as to oil-houses and as to repairs to light-

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to state my impression, which may perhaps bear upon the point of order. I understand that for several years last past we have been trusting to mineral oils in place of lard oil for our light-houses, and that these oil-houses are greatly needed because the mineral oil is more bulky and more dangerous than the other, and ought not to be kept in the lighthouses. Now, my information is that this plan of constructing these houses is not new; that about fifty such oil-houses have been already constructed, and that nearly five hundred of them will be needed in the course of years to complete the system.

Mr. RANDALL. In that connection I want to say that whatever houses of this kind may have been heretofore constructed have been constructed out of a general fund, if I am correctly advised. Last year, however, the appropriation bill contained a clause appropriating $15,000 for the construction of oil-houses, at a cost not to exceed $500 each.

The estimate was that the necessary structures would cost about $1,200 each, but upon examination the committee determined that $500 was adequate to erect a suitable building for this purpose. I am advised that the amount, $15,000, so appropriated, would have constructed about thirty oil-houses, and also that none of that $15,000 has been expended.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the gentleman that so far as the proper cost of these oil-houses is concerned, if the committee really think it ought not to exceed $500, they may know better than I. That is a question, however, which relates to the merits of the proposition.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and a message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the adoption of the following resolu-

Resolved. That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. James N. Burnes, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Missouri.

Resolved. That the Senate concur in the resolution of the House providing for the appointment of a select committee to take order for superintending the funeral and escort the remains of the deceased to the place of burial; and that the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore. pore.
The President pro tempore appointed Mr. Vest, Mr. Coke, and Mr. Teller.

The message also announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 11604) to amend an act approved March 3, 1885, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, in Tennessee, with amendments; requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. Vest,

Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. HARRIS. The message further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 9061) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, with an amendment, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. Dockery in the chair.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have here a copy of a letter from the Light-House Board to the Secretary of the Treasury, which, if I were to have it read now, would perhaps be regarded as discussion upon the merits of the proposition rather than upon the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Ido not object to its being read. I have received

Mr. KANDALL. I do not object to its being read. I have received so many communications from that board that I do not think the reading of one or two more will hurt. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir, I do not withdraw it until I ascertain whether we can arrive at an harmonious arrangement. Perhaps that is possible.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, January 23, 1889.

Str.: The board desires to call your attention to the following item contained in H. R. bill No. 12008, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes:

The amount asked by the board for this purpose (see Estimate Book, page 197) was $400,000, but there was included among the detailed objects to which it was intended to apply these funds "the erection of oil-houses and other incrpensive structures." It is noticed that the bill as presented by the House Committee on Appropriations makes no provision of this kind, and it appears to have been the opinion of the framers of the bill that by removing this item they might reduce the amount asked for by one fourth. This is not by any means the case, and the amount that it is now proposed to appropriate is far below the actual needs of the service.

It should be remembered that the appropriations for this object have for several years past been inadequate. It has been with the greatest difficulty that the board has been able to get through the year without serious accidents and losses, because of the crippled condition in which important structures are left. It is true that repairs can be delayed, but this is invariably bad economy, as it leads to the rapid deterioration and destruction of the buildings. The amount asked for this purpose has constantly increased for several years past, not only because of the natural increase in the service (amounting to from twenty to fifty new structures yearly), but also from the neglect which has been caused by the failure of Congress to make adequate appropriations.

It may be said that there has been stored up an annual deficiency of a considerable amount and of an alarming character, bearing compound interest.

The result of this policy has been that the board has found it necessary to ask for an appropriation of $639,439.40 to complete the service for the present year. (See Estimates for Deficiencies, Ex. Doc. No. 71, Fiftieth Congress, second session, page 5.)

The situation at present is even more embarrassed than it was at the time the deficiency was asked for. There is now in the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation the sum of $129,873.28, while against this are requisitions of officers still to be filled amounting to more than $220,000. A deficiency appropriation is therefore urgently needed and should be made at the earliest possible moment. In case this is made the total appropriated for the present year will be $88,-439.40. It is hoped that this will put the buildings and grounds of the Light-House Establishment in a fair condition, and that the amount then required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, can be reduced to $350,000, exclusive of oil-houses and similar structures. Should Congress conclude to allow the building of these much-needed structures, the sum of $400,0.0 originally asked by the board will be required.

The board earnestly requests that you will call the immediate attention of Congress to the importance not only of appropriating the sum of $400,0.0 originally asked by the board will be required.

The constant expansion of the Light-House Establishment makes it necessary to increase year by year this appropriation, which is the sole means for keeping the buildings and grounds of an extensive service in order. Yet the sum which it is now proposed to appropriate is actually less than that appropriated five years ago.

years ago. Respectfully, yours,

S. C. ROWAN, Vice-Admiral United States Navy, Chairman.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. ADAMS. Perhaps if this proposition was modified so as to limit the cost of each oil-house, the gentleman from Pennsylvania would withdraw his point of order. I understand that the normal cost of a structure of this kind is $1,500; but if the Committee on Appropriations has a definite opinion on that point, I do no. know enough about the matter to put my opinion against theirs.

Mr. RANDALL. The Senate and the House agree, I think, without any controversy whatever, that $500 is fully sufficient for the construction of one of these oil-houses; in some cases the cost ought to be less, in no case greater. On behalf of the committee I make this point of order against entering upon any new structure, because the provision, when offered on a bill of this kind, comes in conflict with the rules of the House. It should properly emanate from some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations. There are already provided for by law thirty of these structures; and we are told that their erections in the committee than the committee of the structures of the committee of the structures of the committee of the c We have thought, therefore, it would be proper to see what the plan is before making any appropriation beyond the $15,000 already appropriated. It seems to me there is reason in this view.

Now, I want to be understood that this is a separate and distinct matter from the question of repairs, which will be entered upon afterward.

I understand that. But although I think it perfectly competent for the gentleman, when we come to the merits of the proposition, to move to modify my amendment, yet if he says that provision was made last year for the construction of a number of these

Mr. RANDALL. Fifteen thousand dollars was appropriated for thirty oil-houses. Mr. ADAMS. I am curious to know under what clause of the rules he now makes this point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. My point of order is that there is no law for entering upon the construction of these oil-houses.

Mr. REED. Did not the other bill so provide?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not remember whether the point of order was made in that case or not.

Mr. REED. Why should the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of order now if he did not make it then?

Mr. RANDALL. I have said that I did not wish to make the point of order if I could avoid it. I only wish to have the position of the committee thoroughly understood—that we should not give $65,000 for this purpose when $15,000, already given for a similar purpose, is unexpended.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. REED. I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state what his point of order is.

Mr. RANDALL. That this amendment proposes in specific language to enter upon various structures not now authorized by law.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the gentleman point out the particular clause in the rules with which he thinks this proposition comes in conflict.

Mr. RANDALL. This is not a public work authorized by law.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the gentleman refer to the clause and the paragraph.

Mr. REED. If the construction of oil-houses is contrary to law, how have these others been built?

Mr. RANDALL. The others are specifically provided for. This is a proposition to make a general law which would permit any part of the sum of $400,000 embraced in the gentleman's amendment to be expended in this way. These are entirely new structures.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is conceded that there is no law authorizing the construction of oil-houses the Chair must, of course, sustain the point of order.

Mr. REED. I do not concede that by any means. A light-house is a public work, and requires certain appurtenances. Among other things it requires oil; and if for purposes of economy or superior efficiency the mode of furnishing oil and the kind of oil are at any time changed, surely the right to provide suitable receptacles for the use of the new substances employed would be included in the right to maintain the lighthouse in its highest state of efficiency. There can be no doubt about that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania admits that other oil houses have already been built; and if they have been built in defiance of law, it is very singular, because I have found that the Departments of this Government, instead of acting in defiance of law in the expenditure of money, are in most cases unwilling to go to the extent of the law in

Mr. RANDALL. These structures have not been built. If the Chair will permit me, I will illustrate just exactly what I mean.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that several oil structures had been constructed?

Mr. RANDALL. Specifically, the number and amount to be expended. It is true we have a Congressional Library, and suppose it is universally conceded further accommodations are necessary in that connection. It will not be pretended it is necessary to pass a separate act to allow that additional accommodation.

Mr. REED. I will take that same example. There could not be a better one. We have a Congressional Library, and a certain sum is apprepriated for that Library. Does he mean to say we could not have extra service if a more advantageous system of shelving was discovered, and if money was appropriated for it it could not be expended for Here is the main thing, something plainly authorized by law—that is, a light-house, the object of which is to give the most efficient protection to sailors. Does he mean if a better light will do that more satisfactorily than a worse light where the light-house has been using a particular material, not by operation of the statute, but in the exercise of a wise discretion, if they purpose now to use a different material, in order to use that different material they have to build a different receptacle when this use of another material will increase efficiency? Surely that is not within the meaning of the rules of this House.

Mr. ADAMS rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I admit something might be added to and expended in that connection which would require additional accommodation in the Congressional Library. But here is a different structure proposed.

Mr. ADAMS. Not necessarily.
Mr. REED. And it becomes absolutely necessary to accomplish that result to authorize these oil structures

Mr. ADAMS. If the gentleman refers to my amendment he will

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, in order we may understand this matter I ask the Clerk to read the clause which provides for the erection of these thirty structures for which money was given, and it will be seen the law did not provide for any general system of structures

The Clerk read as follows:

Oil-houses for light-stations: For establishing isolated houses at light-stations for the storage of mineral oil, $15,000; Provided, That no oil-house erected hereunder shall exceed $500 in cost.

Mr. REED. That shows conclusively there is no law against this, otherwise the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in pursuance of that stern sense of duty which actuates him at this session, would have it put out

Mr. RANDALL. I say the language which the gentleman seeks to insert necessarily involves new legislation and the entering upon a new plan for the construction of these oil-houses, which should come from some other committee.

Mr. REED. It is impossible the Committee on Appropriations would have attempted to sanction in this way a proposition contrary to the rules of the House.

Does the gentleman make the point of order The CHAIRMAN. against the amount?

Mr. RANDALL. Against the language itself.
The CHAIRMAN. In what respect?
Mr. RANDALL. It is new and different from that for the current

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will pass upon the question, unless the gentleman from Illinois wishes to be heard further.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Chair will not be misled by the use of the word "house." "Oil-house" is no more than the use of the word "house" with the word "powder" attached to it, for a powder-house is merely an appurtenance of a fortification. So it is with an oil-house, which is a necessity for a light-house, and just as necessary inside as outside of the light-house. It is simply a big building partly sunk in the ground for the storage of oil, and is a mere appurtenance to the main building.

Mr. REED. It is, in other words, a big oil-can.
Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no; but a large structure.
Mr. REED. Nothing but a big oil-can.
Mr. RANDALL. It is quite a different thing; it is a structure for the storage of oil-cans.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, every one of these light-houses was established by authority of law. A light-house establishment consists not only of the tower which contains the light itself, but also, and necessarily, a keeper's house and a boat-house at least. There is not a necessarily, a keeper's house and a boat-house at least. There is not a single light-house now in existence but which was when authorized by law simply authorized as a light-house, and there is not one of them which does not contain, as I have said, at least the keeper's house and the boat-house.

Now an oil-house is simply an appurtenance to a light-house estab-Now an oil-house is simply an appurtenance to a light-house establishment, and as much, certainly, a part of the light-house as the keeper's house and the boat-house; and it seems to me that by the decisions heretofore made under this rule this should be considered as a work already in progress under authority of law. It has been, for example, held here that the Committee on Naval Affairs could introduce in their appropriation bill under the rule a provision making an appropriation for the construction of a new payal vessel, and for the reason that there for the construction of a new naval vessel, and for the reason that there was authority of law for a naval establishment, the new vessel being a part of the naval establishment. This is a case of the same character.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of individual opinion, the Chair believes that the view presented by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is the correct view, and should be the practice of the House. But the Chair feels compelled under the practice of the House to sustain the point of order if insisted upon, although he does so with hesitation and doubt.

Mr. ADAMS. Now, with regard to the general features of the service, I have another letter to which I desire to call attention, and I ask to have it read.

Mr. RANDALL. In this connection I wish to say that I make no point of order on the question of repairs. I want to come to a right view and action in this matter because of subsequent information that came to the committee, and I really would not have objected to the proposition for the oil-houses if any of the thirty heretofore ordered had been completed or commenced.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman can amend the provision by a proviso.

I have no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Until we have begun work upon the thirty already authorized, I think such propositions as that suggested by the gentleman from Illinois should wait.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, of course

Mr. RANDALL. And I must insist upon the point of order. Mr. ADAMS. I understand the point of order is overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that in accordance with the practice of the House the Chair would be compelled to sustain the point of order, although with hesitation and doubt.

Mr. REED. I understand that the Chair sustained the point of order, but with reluctance, which is a very good beginning in the right direction, and shows that the Chair's head is nearly as good as his heart. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will imitate the Chair.
Mr. REED. I shall imitate the Chair, of course, in all good re-

Mr. REED. I shall imitate the Chair, of course, in all good respects, which is in almost all respects. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. The point of order being sustained, it would therefore strike out the first part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the point of order to be directed only to the first clause of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will withdraw the amendment and offer another which I and to the deal.

other, which I send to the desk.

Page 13, line 9, strike out "$300,000" and insert "$350,000."

Mr. ADAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have read a statement of expenses for the present year in this department, which I obtained a week ago from the Light-House Board.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement of expenditures made from the appropriation for repairs of light-houses, 1889, with estimates of amounts required for the remainder of the year.

The appropriation was $300,000, the same sum as that for next year in the sundry civil bill.

The board has asked for a deficiency appropriation this year, and, if no increase is made in the sum mentioned in the sundry civil bill, a still greater deficiency will be required next year.

From twenty-five to fifty new light-houses are added yearly, yet the appropriation allowed to keep them in order is actually less than was allowed six years ago.

Mr. ADAMS. It will be observed that there will be deficiencies this year and also next year, and in fact for every year, as there has been for several years past.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will allow a statement I think we can perhaps reach an understanding. When the amount was fixed at $300,000 by the committee the fact was recognized that there never had been a deficiency applied for.

Mr. ADAMS. That there never had been?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; for several years, with a single exception, the amount has been $300,000, and there has never been a deficiency applied for or given.

Mr. ADAMS. Up to the present year?

Mr. RANDALL. This year we had, subsequent to reporting the bill, a deficiency asking for $68,000. That, however, has never been considered by the Appropriations Committee at all, and it is not known that it is required, though the deficiency estimate was submitted. We were confronted with the fact that no deficiency had ever existed in the years past, but in view of the facts, part of which the gentleman has presented, and after a conversation with the individual members of the Committee on Appropriations, I feel authorized myself to propose an increase here to the amount of $25,000, which is a large increase over last year.

Mr. ADAMS. But the gentleman is aware that it has stood at $300,-000 for several years, and that every year we add twenty or twenty-five new light-houses.

Mr. RANDALL. I realize that fact, and the committee in view of it have suggested this quite large increase.

Mr. ADAMS. That means a deficiency next year.

Mr. REED. If the evidence on which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has acted is so good as to warrant him in raising this amount $25,000, it certainly ought to be good enough to induce the House to give $25,000 more.

Mr. RANDALL. Simply because the gentleman wants to adopt the rule of going a little better.

Mr. REED. There is a deficiency of $68,000.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no deficiency in fact.
Mr. ADAMS. There will be.
Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. They want $68,000 to spend.
Mr. REED. The gentleman says there was a deficiency asked for.
Mr. RANDALL. There is an additional amount asked.

Mr. REED. How could a deficiency be asked for if it does not

Mr. RANDALL. They want an additional $68,000. They could make new contracts. Not a dollar beyond that has been embarked in any particular. They can not go beyond the amount appropriated for the present year.

Mr. REED. What are the items?

Mr. RANDALL. That would have to go to a deficiency?

Mr. REED. I have a vague impression that a statement made to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania shows that there ought to be a decided increase this year.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, $25,000 is a decided increase.

Mr. REED. Six years ago it was $300,000. Since then this country has been erecting from twenty to fifty light-house buildings per annum, and a great many improvements are going on in the service.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has been growing and yet he has not required any more expenditure. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I do annually. And where they have asked for an increased expenditure of $68,000 over six years ago the increase ought to be more than $25,000 in all this time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been singularly unfortunate in his illustrations this morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I was, I thought, quite at home this morning.

[Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Whether the amount ought to be increased $25,000 or $50,000, I wish to show that the statement of the expenses here submitted is not unreasonable.

Mr. RANDALL. The expenditure of the $68,000 has not been en-

Mr. ADAMS. Let me read these items of the estimate for the remainder of the year, and let the gentleman from Pennsylvania say which of the expenses is unnecessary:

For repairs urgent and needed, one hundred and three thousand and odd dollars; for repairs not urgent, but necessary, $11,000; salaries, etc., $52,000; maintenance of tenders employed in transporting materials, $62,000.

Now, where is there anything that the gentleman can say is unrea-

Mr. RANDALL. I can not say what is unreasonable from the recital of the figures in that way. The subcommittee on deficiencies will hereafter investigate these necessities in connection with the work. I would not like to express an opinion now whether they are necessary

Mr. ADAMS. This is for the next fiscal year, which must necessarily be provided for. There will be an increase of $25,000 in this year. I think that we ought to have $350,000 at least for the next fiscal year. Mr. RANDALL. The expenditures for the first half of this year show that $300,000 is adequate. There has been an expenditure of one-half of it. Now, for the second half of this year there is half of the amount given, and yet they come in and ask for $68,000 deficiency, that they have in no way entered upon the expenditure of, and the Government is in no way involved. If the gentleman desires us to make this appropriation exclusively on the estimates I want to say that we do not ever do that, because if we did this Light-House Establishment in its original estimates asks for $2,200,000; and of the letters that are offered I may say that they would indicate a desire to persist in these expenditures.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that half of this appropriation was expended in the first six months. that he has before him is for five, not six months. One-half of this amount has been expended in five months.

Mr. RANDALL. Up to the 7th of December, and that included the summer—from July 1 up to the fall, when frost begins—which is about the time they would be likely to expend more money. And the estimates made for the balance of the year are $229,000? Mr. RANDALL. They have no contracts in excess of the amount appropriated.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman will remember that in the part of the country which I represent, which is the wintry part of the country, that work would cease from December until April. A part of the work of the winter months is to make contracts for the following year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. REED. I think a word ought to be said on this general sub-It is not what we ought to expend, but what has already been expended. During the time that I have been a member of this House here I have never at any time heard any complaint of extravagance made against the Light-House Board.

It is a board entirely divorced from politics in every way. There is no method by which any prejudice can arise with regard to those who have charge of these affairs. Now, the expenditures which they have already made for five months are $150,000, and at that rate they need at least $350,000 per year. As they very properly say, there can be no worse policy in the world than refusal to make necessary repairs; yet that is a policy which the Committee on Appropriations, it seems to me, have allowed themselves to large into to too great an extent. The me, have allowed themselves to lapse into to too great an extent. The me, have allowed themselves to lapse into to too great an extent. The result has been a saving of money in appearance, which has not been a saving in reality, and it seems to me very much like what is known in common parlance as "skinning" a railroad; the dividends look well and the accounts look well, but the road looks bad. [Laughter.] So buildings like light-houses, like court-houses, and other property of the United States in many instances have been allowed to deteriorate, and that has been called "economy." But it is a great mistake.

The complaints that are made all over the United States on this subject are of such a character that they ought to be heeded by Congress. Attention ought to be paid to the actual and real situation. Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has himself stated certain facts which are directly in the line of the argument that I am making. He admits that this amount which he appropriates should have been

He admits that this amount which he appropriates should have been appropriated six years ago. During that period of six years at least two hundred light-houses must have been built, and a certain other number of light-houses must have fallen into a condition demanding repair, and we have the statement of the parties in charge that $103,one is actually needed for repairs, and that $11,000 more ought to be expended. Is there anything except the necessities and exigencies of the service which would have induced the Light-House Board to make this appeal to Congress over the head of the Committee on Appropria-Then again the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by offering $25,-000, has declared, in a manner which must have impressed this House, the absolute necessity of increasing the appropriation, and if you are going to increase it, why not increase it in accordance with authentic igures instead of in accordance with the vague conjectures of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANDALL. According to the figures which are presented by the Light-House Board, the result of the six years' accumulation of repairs is that $68,000 is needed. That would show, according to my arithmetic, an average requirement of about $10,000 each year in excess of the amount given. Now, although that statement shows that these accumulated repairs not heretofore provided for average only about $10,000 or $11,000 a year, I have suggested an increase for the next fiscal year of $25,000.

Mr. REED. The argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is an argument which is necessarily suicidal. If he believes that the $68,000 deficiency is spread over six years, and that it indicates a need of only $10,000 a year, this House knows him too well to suppose that he would propose an increase of $25,000. Hence it is perfectly evident that his argument has not convinced himself.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to be protected to some little degree from this constant criticism about "illiberality" in giving away the money of the Government, as contradistinguished from giving away my own.

Mr. REED. And yet I am sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would not, for the purpose of getting himself a reputation for liberality—

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I lost that long ago and have never attempted to recover it. [Laughter.]
Mr. REED. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, even for that purpose, would not consent to appropriate $25,000, or $15,000, if he thought that only $10,000 was needed; so it is perfectly evident that his argument has not convinced himself, and if it has not convinced him ought it to convince the House?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the $25,000 is ample, and I have so ated. I say further that there has never been any illiberality on the part of this House in connection with the Light-House Service. contrary, there have been appropriations up to the point of making our light-houses, as far as human skill could make them, points of safety for the mariners of the world, and this Government, unlike most governments, has never adopted the system of making a charge for such service upon the shipping of the world. The very lake upon which the constituency of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] is situated is the best-lighted sheet of water in the world, to the credit of the gentleman himself and of others who have preceded him here. So, too, the river upon which my own district is situated, is, I am advised, the best-lighted river in the world; and in proof of that I may mention that captains of vessels assert that it is safer at night than in the daytime. Therefore, I do not want this House to entertain for a moment the idea that there has ever been in the Congress of the United States or in any of the committees of this House the least illiberality towards the Light-House Establishment.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to say to my colleague [Mr. RANDALL]—
Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Kausas.
Mr. RYAN. I wish to say to my colleague on the committee, in conception with the remarkle he had all the colleague on the committee. nection with the remarks he has already made, that all this department asked for this service for 1887 in the estimate two years ago, was $310,- 000. Now it is asking for $400,000, an increase of nearly 33½ per cent.

Mr. REED. They are asking $50,000 of that for oil-houses—a proposition which has been rejected by the House. The actual increase in the direction of which the gentleman speaks is only $40,000.

Mr. RYAN. But that is a most remarkable increase in two years. Mr. DINGLEY. It should be remembered that from twenty to forty new light-houses are established every year.

Mr. RYAN. I agree with my colleague on the committee that there ought to be an increase; and evidently, in view of the deficiency appropriations which are asked for, the amount as here reported should be enlarged. I am not certain that an increase of $25,000 is sufficient; but I do say that an increase of $50,000, making over $300,000 in two years for this service in its ordinary expenditures, is a little exorbitant.

Mr. ADAMS. Why? Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Kansas concedes that $25,000 is not enough, will he consent to $35,000?

Mr. RYAN. Yes; I will agree myself to $35,000.
Mr. REED. I simply want the House to understand the situation The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], yielding to the manifest weight of argument on this subject, has suggested that there should be an increase of $25,000-

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I was prepared to assent to that before I heard the weighty arguments of the gentleman on that point.

Mr. REED. Upon being asked his reason for preferring $25,000 rather than $50,000, the gentleman announces that it is because the figures show that only $10,000 should be given. Upon being further pressed, he announces that the reason why $25,000 should be given is that he is a liberal-minded man.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think I said that.

Mr. REED. On being pressed still further as to his reasons, the gentleman announces that he takes this position because the lake which the gentleman from Chicago represents is the best-lighted lake in the world. Being still further pressed, he states that his reason is because the Committee on Appropriations is generally liberal. Now, the result of all this, when you come to "simmer it down" to the exact proposition, is that he asks us to accept his idea that perhaps there ought to be $25,000 additional appropriated; and he gives no figures to support this view as against the recommendation of the Light-House Board, which has given definite figures as to the amount of money it wants and the subject for which it wants it. The Light-House Board proposes a certain sum, and gives the figures in support of it; the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes another amount; and upon the endeavor of the House to get his reasons, he has given reasons which I think the House will admit I have carefully and accurately and respectfully stated.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not at all agree that the gentleman's analysis of my reasons is either fair, or (if the gentleman will not take offense),

I will say, truthful. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. The House has heard both of us, and I must leave to it the question of accuracy as between us.

Mr. RANDALL. I have in this matter, as in regard to appropriations for charities and for works of science, overstepped what I would myself be disposed to do in the way of expenditure of the public money. I am satisfied that the House will be quite safe in fixing $25,000 as the amount of increase over the appropriations of the last five years for this item

Mr. REED. Suppose we should compromise on the amount sug-ested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], your colleague on the committee-$35,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not willing to compromise, because the gentleman always wants the larger part of the compromise.

Mr. REED. Certainly; that is the position of the righteous man always; he wants the earth.

Mr. RANDALL. In this matter I would prefer to proclaim my righteousness in the closet rather than in public places.

Mr. REED. I did not hear the last remark of the gentleman. But the gentleman from Kansas suggests $35,000; and he is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no authority from the majority of the committee to assent to any amendment in excess of $25,000; and I am here as the representative of the committee.

Mr. REED. Let us vote first on $50,000; and if that should be voted down, we will afterwards vote on $35,000. Perhaps we may compromise on that.

Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on this proposition is exhausted.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I wish to say that if the Northern lakes are the best-lighted waters in the world they ought to be, because—

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that. I have only cited the fact as proof that there has been no illiberality in this matter on the part of Congress

Mr. ADAMS. I want to remind the gentleman that in this very bill his committee has proposed appropriations for certain new lights on those lakes

Mr. RANDALL. In obedience to law.

Mr. ADAMS. That is true; but it shows that the demands of the Light-House Service are constantly increasing; and I believe they are increasing in far greater ratio than intimated by the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. As the necessities of the service have presented themselves from time to time the number of light-houses has been increased. If I remember aright, there are hardly 5 miles of coast on that lake that have not been lighted.

Mr. ADAMS. True; because a vessel navigating that lake must necessarily be near the shore; and there is greater danger of shipwreck. Mr. RANDALL. I only cite that as a contradiction of the assumption that there has ever been any illiberality on the part of Congress in regard to this service.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman overlooks the fact that the needs of the service are constantly increasing; and, as I believe, are increasing in more than arithmetical ratio.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to move the amendment suggested by the gentheman from Maine, to make this increase $35,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks on the subject of repairs of light-houses, which may apply not only to this appropriation, but to appropriations in the future for such repairs.

It should be borne in mind that the expenditures for light-houses must inevitably increase in a small amount from year to year. There are added to our Light-House Establishment annually from thirty to forty light-houses. Three years ago, if not four years, and if not four years, certainly three years ago, we reached an appropriation of $300,000 for light-houses. That was surely a sufficient amount at the time, but two years ago certainly the Light-House Board began to indicate in their report there were some repairs for the preservation of this establishment that ought to be made, and were being neglected, the appropriation notwithstanding for light-houses being put at the same figure.

In the last appropriation bill, notwithstanding the Light-House Board asked for $350,000, I think, for repairs, yet the amount was kept down to $300,000. And now the Light-House Board say in their reports they have neglected important repairs during the two years which are past because they had not sufficient means to do it with. During the last five months of the fiscal year they have expended $150,000, or one-half of the appropriation made in the last bill, and they are neglecting important repairs which ought to be made in order to secure these estab-

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, when they come in with such statements as this, and knowing the efficiency and economy of the Light-House Establishment, when they represent our light-houses are suffering in consequence of needed repairs, and in order to carry out these repairs in the remaining seven months of the present fiscal year they will need an appropriation of $130,000, I think it ought to be given to them.

Mr. RANDALL. When was this report made?
Mr. DINGLEY. December 1, and there are seven months remaining. They say they will require $120,000, and it ought to be given to them. We ought not under the circumstances to deprive the Light-House Board of the necessary funds to carry out the repairs necessary to the service.

If there had been made an appropriation of $325,000 or $350,000 it would have been sufficient. It is, of course, our duty in this matter to give what the House would deem fit after hearing all the facts, but it appears to me on a subject of this kind it is economy to give a sufficient amount to make the repairs necessary to the Light-House Establishment. I wish the amount could be made $350,000, for from my examination of our light-houses along the coast, when there are many lighthouses needing repairs—

Mr. RANDALL. How many have you visited?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have visited twelve in the last year, and in answer to my inquiry why these repairs were not made the reply was that they had not sufficient funds for that purpose.

Mr. RYAN. That is what the deficiency is asked for.
Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly; that is why the deficiency is asked, for the purposes of carrying on these repairs. From year to year there will be an increased amount needed because of the increase each year of the Light-House Establishment.

I am glad the committee raised the amount to $325,000. I am certain if $350,000 were appropriated it would be an economical expenditure of the public money. Less than that amount will result in increasing the expenses of the Government rather than in any economy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. RYAN'S amendment to Mr. ADAMS'S amendment.

amendment.

The question was put on Mr. RYAN's amendment to the amendment, and it was declared to be disagreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] to make it $325,000.

Mr. RYAN. There is some misapprehension in regard to the amendment offered by myself, and therefore I desire to have it submitted again to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is to fix the amount at $335,000 instead of $325,000.

Mr. KANDALL. That was voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. It was, but there was some misapprehension, and

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for tellers, as there was no quorum on the

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania indicate some gentleman to be appointed teller to act for him?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the appointment of the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. KEAN, sitting near me.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. Kean and Mr. Ryan as tellers.
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 55

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was adopted. Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the adoption of the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the paragraph insert:
"For connecting the Tillamook Rock (Oregon) light-station by telegraph cable and telegraph line with Fort Stevens (Point Adams), Oregon, the sum of $6,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I must make the point of order that that is not in order at this place. If it is in order at all to be adopted, it must come in at another point.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, I desire, in further explanation of the amendment, to have read this communication from the Treasury Department, Light-House Board—Mr. RANDALL. But, Mr. Chairman, I make the point that this is not the place where the amendment should come in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would prefer, if agreeable to gentlemen, that they should first address themselves to the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. In answer to the last objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will state that I have carefully examined the bill from the first to the last, and I could discover no better place than this to offer the amendment. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania can suggest a better place—

Mr. RANDALL. A better place is under the head of "Light-house beacons, fog-signals, etc."

Mr. HERMANN. I understand we have passed that now, however, and I will ask, as that is the proper place in the judgment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, unanimous consent to recur to that part of the bill for the purpose of presenting this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Under the circumstances, as the gentleman was under a misapprehension, I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania make the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. No; the gentleman supposed this was the proper place to insert the amendment, and as he states that he was under a misapprehension and that he had the amendment, as I understand it, ready to offer when we reached what seemed to be the proper place, I do not wish to prevent him from having the opportunity of submit-

Mr. HERMANN. But I prefer to have the amendment where it belongs, although we have passed from the consideration of the paragraph, and if the amendment is adopted I want it to relate back to the proper place. I will ask unanimous consent to recur, then, to that part of the bill, which would be on page 8, line 11.

Mr. RANDALL. No, you can offer the amendment now, and if adopted then I will ask consent to have it put where it belongs.

Mr. HERMANN. Very well. I desire to have read in connection with the amendment and to show its necessity the communications which I now send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to recurring to the line and page suggested by the gentleman from Oregon.

The Clerk will read.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman if this matter can not be printed? If all of these communications are to be read, I fear we will not get through with the bill.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to have this read, inasmuch as it bears upon the merits of the point of order, if the point should be made, as well as upon the importance of the amendment, so that the Chair may understand both, and because it is here presented in a much more accurate manner than I could present it, coming as it does officially from the proper Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order is made against the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the communications referred to by the gentleman from Oregon. The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD, Washington, January 18, 1889,

Washington, January 18, 1889.

Sir: The Light-House Board has the honor to inform the Department that the board, at its session held on January 16, 1889, had under consideration the matter of connecting the Tillamook Rock (Oregon) light-station with Fort Stevens (Point Adams), Oregon, by telegraph cable and a land telegraph line, when it was ordered that the proper steps be taken to have an item of $5,000 for this object included in the sundry civil bill now pending before Congress.

The Tillamook Rock light-station has no means of communication with the shore except by the light-house tender. At times there is no communication for six weeks or more. In case of accident at the station it might be days before any vessel came near enough to see a signal of distress.

The tender generally communicates with this station once a month. Much of her time is taken up in attending the station. Often the weather at Astoria seems favorable for making a landing at Tillamook Rock, but when the tender gets there it is too rough to land. The distance from Astoria is about 30 miles, so that in addition to the coal burned, going and coming, the day is lost for other work.

It is believed that the saving in time of the tender and of coal usually burned would be in two years equal to the cost of the telegraph line.

Besides the service it would be to the Light-House Establishment, the line would be useful also to the general commerce passing the mouth of the Columbia River, as vessels sighted from the advance station on Tillamook Rock could be telegraphed to Astoria, which at times would be a great convenience to the pilot and tug service on the bar.

Request is therefore made that the Department ask that the following item be included in the sundry civil bill making appropriations for the next fiscal year:

year;
"For connecting the Tillamook Rock (Oregon) light-station by telegraph cable and a land telegraph line with Fort Stevens (Point Adams), Oregon, the sum of $6,000." Respectfully, yours,

S. C. ROWAN, Vice-Admiral United States Navy, Chairman,

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Washington, January 18, 1889.

My Dear Sir: I transmit herewith a copy of a letter dated January 18, 1889, addressed by the board to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury, asking that the proper steps be taken to have an item of $5,000 included in the sundry civil bill, for connecting the Tillamook Rock (Oregon) light-station by telegraph cable and a land telegraph line with Fort Stevens (Point Adams), Oregon.

The board would be much obliged if you would use your influence to have this item included in the sundry civil bill making appropriation for the next fiscal year.

Yours very truly,

R. D. EVANS.

Hon. Binger Hermann, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Oregon that we had no estimates for this before our committee. If there were any estimates they must have gone to the Commerce Committee, where they properly belong.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if that communication is not in itself a sufficient explanation as well as an estimate coming from the Light-House Board, and specific as to the

Mr. RANDALL. The committee was entirely uninformed about the matter.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? In view of the urgent necessity of the case, at least permit me to present view of the urgent necessity of the case, at least permit me to present a few facts, of which no doubt the gentleman has himself ample knowledge, with regard to this work. Tillamook Rock is well known as one of the most salient and isolated objects, standing far out as it does on the Oregon coast and near the Columbia River. In fact it is one of the most isolated points on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts. There is a lighthouse upon the rock, but the light-house crew remain there often half a year at a time without seeing the light-house tender referred to in the communication, or even the face of a white man. This light is a very important one for the great commerce that flows daily in and out very important one for the great commerce that flows daily in and out of that river, and there is urgent necessity for the work proposed in this amendment, not only because of the health of the crew employed at this spot, but often in the interest of human life, and I appeal to the gentleman to allow the item to be inserted and that he forego the point of order, if he still seriously contemplates making it. I need not detain the House in illustrating how very valuable the telegraph service will prove to the commerce of the great Columbia region, and having a point of telegraphic observation so far out in the ocean where the passing sail or incoming ships can be advantageously observed and at once telegraphed inland. These benefits are officially adverted to in the communication addressed to me from the Treasury Department, and which is now before this Congress for examination.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not made the point of order against the

Mr. HERMANN. Then I trust the gentleman will not do so.
Mr. RANDALL. There may be the existing necessity, which the gentleman has so graphically described, for the work, but I submit that the Committee on Appropriations have no information on the subject, and that if there has been an estimate it went to the Committee on Commerce, where it belongs. Now, I strongly object to loading down this bill with every sort of extraneous matter in this manner.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the gentleman if, in view of the explanation given of the necessity for this work, it is fair to speak of it in connection with "every sort of extraneous matter?"

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I have spoken with great respect so far as I have reference to those engaged in defeading the amendment, and suppose if the Committee on Commerce should report favorably upon it, that the work should be entered upon, there would be no objection. But there is no more reason for undertaking this work than there is for the construction of every light-house suggested by the estimates which have come to the committee and which we have not been able to pass upon, there being no law for them.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman will concede that the facts which are set forth make good ground for this request.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it proper to say that the Committee on Appropriations ought not to have the bill loaded down beyond their recommendation in this way from every quarter on the private letters from the Light-House Establishment for the increase of their houses throughout the country

Mr. HERMANN. But this is on the recommendation from the De-

Mr. HERMANN. But this is on the recommendation from the Department. The amount is given.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let it go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HERMANN. The amount is set forth.

Mr. RANDALL. I have been quite willing to allow the gentleman to offer this amendment, but I do appeal to the House that they will not in this way permit additions to this bill; but let this matter go to the Committee on Commerce. Let that committee make an investigation with it and make a proportion and I amount to the committee and I amount to the committee on I amount the committee on I amount the committee of I amount the I amount th gation in connection with it and make a recommendation, and I assure the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations will recommend the appropriation of the money.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman will agree with me that at this late day in the session a remedy could not be obtained by sending this to the Committee on Commerce now.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not the fault of the Committee on Approriations. If this great necessity existed why has the Light-House Board been so late in making the recommendation?

Mr. HERMANN. For the reason that these facts as to the urgency of the requirement have only recently come to the knowledge of the

Mr. RANDALL. How long has there been a light-house there?
Mr. HERMANN. I think not exceeding four years.
Mr. RANDALL. Then it has been there long enough for the board to have found out whether this necessity existed

Mr. HERMANN. Oh, no, sir. The necessity has long been known, but in view of the economy practiced by your committee I presume the Department hesitated to submit an estimate.

Mr. RANDALL. And to have provided for it in an estimate. Mr. HERMANN. The recent great increase of the volume of commerce now justifies this improvement more than ever, though humanity has appealed to us ever since this rock was lighted by the Government and became so important. In view of these facts I ask the gentleman to permit a vote to be taken by the House.

A MEMBER. He has agreed to permit a vote.

Mr. HERMANN. I hope so; and now I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ROGERS. Let it be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the amendment agreed to.
Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have that put back under its proper heading on page 8, after line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries, fuel, rations, rent of quarters where necessary, and similar incidental expenses of not exceeding one thousand one hundred light-house and fog-signal keepers, $6,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I have an amendment to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 13 and 14 strike out "six hundred thousand dollars," and insert "six nundred and twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. ADAMS. That is the estimate of the board, and they say that that estimate does not represent the new light-houses which will be established according to law; and I ask to have read the letter which sent to the Clerk's desk on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, January 22, 1889.

SIR: The board desires to call your attention to the item contained in the sundry civil bill, page 13, making an appropriation of $600,000 for salaries of keepers of light-houses.

The amount asked for by the board was $625,000, and this is barely sufficient for the actual needs of the service. For the present fiscal year the appropriation was only $585,000, and in consequence the board has been obliged to ask for a deficiency appropriation of $33,520. The case is concisely stated in the remarks attached to the estimates for deficiencies (Executive Document No. 171, page 5), as follows:

"There are at present in the light-house service one thousand and twenty-four keepers who receive salaries amounting to $554,970; allowances of fuel amounting to $10,855; of rations, $12,585; and rent of quarters, where necessary, and travel when changing stations, $2,400.

"This number will be increased during the year ending June 30, 1889, by about thirty keepers for new lights, which, at the average of $600 provided for by law, will require $18,000. The salaries of employés of the Light-House Board, not provided for in the legislative bill, are payable from this appropriation, and amount to $19,700. These sums together amount to $618,520, which is $33,520-more than was appropriated for these purposes at the last session of Congress."

The deficiency appropriation is actually necessary to carry on the force as at present constituted; hence, the expense for the present year will be $618,520.

As the force for the year ending June 30, 1890, will be increased by thirty or more additional keepers for new lights, the sum of $625,000 asked for by the board will all be required.

If this sum is not appropriated, it will be impossible to put the new lights in operation after they are erected for the want of keepers.

An amendment should be immediately made to the sundry civil bill increasing the amount to the original esti

S. C. ROWAN, Vice-Admiral United States Navy, Chairman.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. ADAMS. The substance of that is that there will be an actual deficiency in the current year. The salaries being $600 a man, they can not hire and maintain such as are actually now in operation; but under the law there will be twenty-five or thirty lights more, and there will be actually not enough men to attend these lights unless we allow

Mr. RANDALL. There has never until this year, that I remember, been any deficiency. The committee increased the amount over last year $15,000—at least from $585,000 to $600,000; and it provides for other matters. As has been stated, it provides for fuel, rations, and various other matters, and incidental expenditures—that pernicious mode of expenditures. And now, after the Committee on Appropriations have made full examination, and after they have increased the amount for the number that they think to be adequate, shall they, in the absence of investigation by anybody, or of a committee of this House, on a deficiency clause, which has been alluded to, be asked to further increase the amounts?

Mr. ADAMS. It is the general belief that a number of lights will be or ought to be in operation next year, but can not be put in opera-

Mr. RANDALL. The amount that we do increase it was the amount that was estimated for the additional lights.

Mr. ADAMS. This is the language of the letter— Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I know. I have read these letters before. Mr. RED. Is this not a mere matter of mathematical calculation?
Mr. RANDALL. It does not give it in express terms. It includes these "incidental expenses."
Mr. DINGLEY. But does it not follow that as there are a certain number of lights authorized by law specifically, it is a mere matter of mathematical calculation as to how much it will require?

Mr. ADAMS. Here is what is stated as to the number of men who are employed in the various departments:

There are at present in the Light-House Service one thousand and twenty-four keepers, who receive salaries amounting to $554,970; allowances of fuel amounting to $10,855; of rations, $12,585; and rent of quarters where necessary, and travel when changing stations, $2,400.

So that the great bulk of this sum makes up the $600,000 a year.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think that if the statement in the estimate of deficiencies is correct the chairman of the committee must be mistaken as to there being miscellaneous matters included.

Mr. RANDALL. The deficiency, if I remember right, is put at $33,000, but that has not been investigated at all by the committee, because the figures only recently came to them, and for that reason I can not say whether $33,000 is right or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. According to the statement which I have here, which is presented by the Secretary of the Treasury, the salaries of these officers, with allowances, commutations, etc., provided for by law as they exist to-day, amount to $618,000, and certainly there will be additions during the next fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know, but I am afraid there has been 'pernicious activity" on the part of this Light-House Board in on the part of this light reasons activity of the part of this light reasons.

Mr. REED. I wish that in the way of explanation there had been some activity not pernicious on the part of the Committee on Appropriations.

[Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Well, any lack of activity on the part of the Committee of the Com mittee on Appropriations has been fully compensated for by the activity of the gentleman from Maine, so that the country has not suffered.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, that is true. To the extent of $35,000 something is due to the activity of the gentleman from Maine and the activity of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] and the activity of several other gentlemen. Now, to make that activity more effectual I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania what item of this $635,000 he objects to. He has given us thus far only vague generalities which have not even the advantage of being "glittering."

Mr. RANDALL. I give you the fact that we recognize the necessity of an increase in this appropriation, and also the fact that there never has been until this year but $585,000 appropriated for this purpose, nor has there been any deficiency presented. I have also stated that this deficiency, or alleged deficiency, has only come to the committee quite recently, so that they have not had time to ascertain whether it is essential or not. It may or may not be so.

Mr. REED. If it is not essential how can it be spent?

If it is not essential, how can it be spent?

Mr. RANDALL. Your experience must teach you that whenever Congress gives the money it is expended.

Mr. REED. Here are definite items, and the great bulk of the amount is for salaries, the aggregate of which is a mere matter of mathematical computation.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, $585,000 is the amount that has been fixed heretofore for salaries, fuel, $585,000 is the amount that has been the amount for the past five years. Now they come in this year, for the first time, with a deficiency of $33,000 which is alleged—

Mr. REED. Precisely, and they come in here with the figures to show that last year there was paid $585,000 for salaries, which is the total amount that you propose to appropriate for salaries and incidentals together.

Mr. RANDALL. In 1888 they spent the whole appropriation. In 1889 they spent about $307,000 so far for half the year.

Mr. REED. But the rate already fixed by law for the officers that axis, and that we are bound to pay, on the figures established by law, aggregates $618,000, and unquestionably there must be some increase in that amount during the coming year. Now, if the figures for the last year show conclusively that we have got to pay for proper and legal items $618,000, does not the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations think that he ought to give us some definite reason as to each rectionlar item that he chiefts to and show us where the mistake each particular item that he objects to, and show us where the mistake is? I suggest to him that all he has stated to the House yet is not that the figures of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] are incorrect, but simply that he, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, does not know.

Mr. RANDALL. I never speak positively about any matter, as some other gentlemen may or might do in this House, unless I think I do know, and I am not going to be drawn into a statement in regard to this matter when I have not examined and do not know whether the $33,000 deficiency is right or wrong. But I do say that we have increased this amount $15,000, so as to come up to the point—

Mr. REED. But if $15,000 is not enough, it does not come up to the point. Now, I suggest to the chairman that, after all, these appropriations are passed, in name at least, by the House of Representatives and that when the House sets a committee to investigate and tives, and that when the House sets a committee to investigate a matter it is for the purpose of getting at the actual facts. It seems, however, that the committee, in this instance, have not examined the deficiency in order to ascertain the facts, but simply come in here and ask us to vote with them blindly against the detailed estimates of the Department which are in accordance with law, and to do it simply upon the general statement that, on the whole, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations thinks that possibly $15,000 may be the proper sum. All this in the face and eyes of detailed figures which show that last year $615,000 was appropriated, and we all know that next year the expenditure must be greater.

Mr. RANDALL. The Department can not expend the money if it

Mr. RANDALL. The Department can not expend the money if it does not receive it; and it does not attempt to do so.

Mr. REED. I am aware of that; but our object in making this appropriation is not simply to have certain figures in the law, but to pay for such services as are necessary. The only object in appropriating a single dollar for light-houses is to secure proper and efficient service. If the Light-House Service last year demanded $618,000, and we all know that an increased expenditure amounting to $635,000 for the coming year is a certain thing, why in the world should we not appropriate the money? This is not a question of what we can refuse to do priate the money? This is not a question of what we can refuse to do or what work we can stop, but what work we can continue and pay

Mr. RANDALL. There is no interest which can suffer if the appropriation as proposed by the committee be made.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, there is not a word of evidence, so far as I can find, that if this additional amount were allowed a single dollar would be spent for any other purpose than the payment of additional light-house keepers at the rate of $600 a year. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has said that this covers other items-

Mr. RANDALL. The paragraph so reads.

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly; there are other words here; there are provisions for salaries, fuel, rations, rent of quarters; but the note in the Book of Estimates itself shows that the difference between the committee and the board involves simply this question, whether we shall employ more or fewer men at $600 a year; and if we employ fewer men than there are lights to be kept, some light-houses will have to stay dark in order that we may be economical.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, there

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and will appoint the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 76.

So the amendment of Mr. ADAMS was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read the following:

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read the following:
Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post-lights on the Hudson and East Rivers, New York; the Delaware River, between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J.; Connecticut River, Connecticut; the Elk River, Maryland; Cape Fear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; St. John's River, Florida; at the mouth of Red River, Louisiana; at Chicot Pass, and to mark navigable channel along Grand Lake, Louisiana; on the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Illinois, and Great Kanawha Rivers; on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, Oregon; Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, California; St. Mary's River, Michigan; and on Puget Sound, Washington Territory; the Light-House Board being hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence can not be made permanent, $265,000.

Mr. RANDALL, The provision in this persegnent for St. Maryle

Mr. RANDALL. The provision in this paragraph for St. Mary's River, Michigan, is, in my judgment, subject to a point of order. I was not aware until after the bill had been reported that there was no law authorizing this provision. I shall ask at the proper time to have that clause ruled out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman submit the point of order

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order against that clause. There is no law providing for it, as I have found since the bill was re-

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I move to amend by inserting in line 11, after the words "St. John's River," the words "and Peace River," so as to read "St. John's River and Peace River, Florida."

Mr. RANDALL. I raise a point of order on that amendment.
Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order. This amendment is offered in the interest of commerce and for the protection of human life.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has had it in his power to present this matter to the Committee on Commerce. It is a very disagreeable duty to me to make a point of this kind—

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I appreciate the gentleman's feeling.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the point of order is that there is no law authorizing the establishment of lights for this

Mr. RANDALL. Originally there was an act passed in which certain rivers were specified, and from time to time other rivers have been added; for instance, last year the Illinois River was inserted by special added; for instance, last year the Illinois River was inserted by special act, the Committee on Commerce having passed upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to submit that there is no law authorizing the lighting of Peace River.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not. If there is, I shall be glad to be informed of that fact; and in that case I will not object.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The necessity for this provision has arisen very recently.

arisen very recently—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Florida refer the Chair to the law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. There is no statute of that kind. I had hoped that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would not raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a duty to perform which is very disagreeable at times.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of

Mr. RANDALL. I want to make a point of order against the clause in regard to St. Mary's River, Wisconsin. Since the action of the Committee on Appropriations on this subject I have found that there is no law authorizing this provision. The committee has adopted a uniform policy in this connection. I make this point of order as an individual

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. DOUGHERTY obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. In order that the amount named at the end of the paragraph may harmonize with the action just taken by the Chair in sustaining the point of order, I move to amend by striking out, in line 21, the word "sixty-five" and inserting "fifty;" so as to make the amount $250,000.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that change will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I was about to offer an amendment as an amendment to that submitted by my colleague [Mr. DAVIDSON]. Of course the same point of order which has been made against his amendment would lie against mine.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that if gentlemen desiring provisions of this kind for rivers in which they are interested would go before the Committee on Commerce and obtain the proper action of that committee in providing a law authorizing the appropriation, our committee would have great gratification in recommending appropriations accordingly.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. In that connection I desire to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the reason such action has not been taken by the Florida delegation is that the urgency for these lights has recently arisen. That is the reason the matter was not brought before the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the delegation from Florida had communicated with the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. As my colleague has just stated, this was only recently brought to our attention, and its urgency compels us to act in this way

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post-lights on the Hudson and East Rivers, New York; the Delaware River, between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J.; Connecticut River, Connecticut; the Elk River, Maryland; Cape Pear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; St. John's River, Florida; at the mouth of Red River, Louislana; at Chicot Pass, and to mark navigable channel along Grand Lake, Louislana; on the Missispipi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Illinois, and Great Kanawha Rivers; on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, Oregon; Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, California; St. Mary's River, Michigan; and on Puget Sound, Washington Territory; the Light-House Board being hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use, or are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence can not be made permanent, $265,000.

Mr. McADOO. I submit the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 8, after the words "New Jersey," add "Raritan River, New Jersey, between the bay and the city of New Brunswick;" also, in same page, line 21, strike out the word "five" and insert "six;" so it will read "$66,000" instead of "$65,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against the Raritan River part of that amendment.

Mr. McADOO. The gentleman can not make the point of order successfully against that amendment. It is provided by law, and the Raritan River has been lighted for one hundred years.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a different proposition.
Mr. McADOO. I ask that the communication which I send to the Clerk's desk be read, as it will show just what this is for.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD, Washington, January 17, 1889.

Washington, January 17, 1889.

My Dear Sir: I beg to call your attention to that clause in the sundry givil bill now before the House making an appropriation for the lighting of rivers for the next fiscal year. The Raritan River, New Jersey, is not included in this clause, and in view of the amount of commerce passing through it the board has decided that it should be properly lighted, and especially that stake-lights should be established on the jetties, which are sometimes submerged at high tide. For this purpose an additional appropriation of $1,000 will be needed.

The board would be much obliged if you would use your influence to have the clause of the sundry civil bill relating to lighting rivers amended so as to include the Raritan River, and to have the appropriation increased $1,000, to cover the expense of lighting the river.

Yours, very truly,

R. D. EVANS, Commander, United States Navy, Naval Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM McADOO, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. RANDALL. That is another one of the series from the same That letter concedes there is no law for this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will indicate the law under which he offers the amendment.

Mr. McADOO. I can not do that now, but I have no doubt the law exists, as the Raritan River has been lighted for a hundred years.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not on the statute-book.
Mr. McADOO. The river has been lighted ever since I have known it, and as I have already stated, it has been lighted for over a hundred Of course it was not expected that any particular law would years. be called for

Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing this amendment for the Raritan River. I think that letter plainly admits that fact. The gentleman's remedy is with the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McADOO. It seems to me, if there is any law authorizing the lighting of any of our rivers, it certainly authorizes the lighting of the Raritan. I ask by unanimous consent I may be allowed to go back and move this amendment when I shall find the law.

Mr. RANDALL. I must object to going back. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is ruled out.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one accountant, at $1,800.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, on page 23, to strike out lines 20 and 21 and insert "for two accountants, $1,800 each, $3,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two computers, at $1,850 each, $3,700.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, on page 24, after line 25, to insert "for one title computer, at $1,600." It was left out by mistake.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For three clerks, at $1,200 each, $3,600.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, line 3, strike out "three" and insert "two," and in line 4, strike out "$3,600" and insert "$2,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, in line 20, strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 21, strike out "$1,640," and insert "$2,460;" and on page 20, in lines 14 and 15, strike out $129,785" and insert "$132,705."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of vessels: For the maintenance of the vessels and steam-launches of the United States Fish Commission, and for boats, apparatus, ma-chinery, and the other facilities required for use with the same, including sala-ries or compensation of all necessary civilian employés, $43,900.

Mr. RANDALL. On page 33, strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For altering and fixing up the interior of the Armory building on the mall, in the city of Washington, now occupied as a hatching station, for the accommodation of the officers of the United States Fish Commission, for general repairs to said building, including heating apparatus, and for the repairing and extending the outbuilding, $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the sum to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol; and for the purpose above named the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution is hereby required to move from the second and third stories of this building all properties except such as are connected with the workshops hereinafter named, under his control, and the workshops now in the second story of said building shall be transferred to and provided for in the third story thereof, and the Architect of the Capitol is hereby directed to examine and make report to Congress at its next regular session as to the practicability and cost of constructing a basement story under the National Museum building.

Mr. RANDALL. I apply want to extend to the committee that while

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to state to the committee that while this seems to be a large sum, yet it should be remembered in this connection that it saves an annual rental of $2,500; and the committee will, therefore, see at once that this is not only in the line of convenience in the transaction of the business of the commission, but that it saves rent, and is also in harmony with the plan generally advocated and being largely entered upon of having our own buildings for the offices of the Government as far as practicable.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statistical inquiry: For the collection and compilation of the statistics of the fisheries of all portions of the United States, including persons employed, capital invested, and the quantity and value of the products, and for such general and miscellaneous expenditures as the Commissioner may find necessary in the prosecution of this work, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, $10,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Under instructions of the committee, I submit the amendment I send to the desk, which is in obedience to existing

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $5,000 appropriated by the act approved October 2, 1888, for the maintenance of the fish-cultural station at Neosho, Mo., be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1890.

The amendment was adopted. The Clerk read as follows:

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMICS.

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated by the joint resolutions approved September 26 and October 2, 1888, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same.

Mr. RANDALL. That is in accordance with the act of the last Congress as to unexpended balances.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state what balance of this epidemic fund is on hand unexpended?

Mr. RANDALL. The amount of the epidemic fund unexpended is $167,508.96, and the amount of the appropriation in aid of the yellow-fever sufferers on hand, unexpended, is $99,767.50. The committee believed that putting the two together made an adequate amount to meet any contingencies likely to arise, such as the calamity that oc-curred in Florida during the past year.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question: if the Surgeon-General has expressed any opinion as to the sufficiency of the amount so remaining on hand?

Mr. RANDALL. The Surgeon-General, if I remember aright, and I think it appears in the records of the committee, asked that we should reappropriate the unexpended moneys arising from the sources that I

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That is all right.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the Clerk continue the reading of the

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, $460,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, by reference to the report of the Committee on Appropriations accompanying this bill, on page 6 of the report, there is a recapitulation of the items in the sundry civil bill for the year 1888, showing the estimates and the amount of the appropriations, etc., in which recapitulation I find the statement, under the head of "Assistant custodians and janitors for public buildings," that the appropriation for 1889 was $460,000, and the estimates for 1890 are $622,415.75. Now, it is to be presumed that the Department having the custody of the public buildings in its charge knows just about how much money is requisite to pay for the proper attendance and the necessary assistants in taking care of them. But notwithstanding the estimates we have the Committee on Appropriations making for the ensuing year the recommendation of the same appropriation as was provided for the last year, disregarding entirely the recommendation of the Treasury Department in that particular, and notwithstanding the further fact that a large number of new buildings have been completed, and that it has thereby been made necessary to supply them with a proper force to take charge of them, thus of necessity increasing the expenditure in that direction.

The public building in the capital city of the State of Ohio has been miserably taken care of, simply because the Treasury Department has been unable to supply the necessary janitors and custodians, by reason of the insufficiency of the appropriations for that purpose. We have a few men employed, but they are not sufficient to take care of the building, and certainly not sufficient to keep it properly cleaned, nor properly attend the elevator and take up the large number of citizens who go there on public business; besides which the work entailed upon the employés is so much that two or three men are compelled each day to put in twelve hours' labor, when they should be permitted at least to have the privilege of working not more than eight hours. It is certain that an additional amount should be appropriated over the amount given for 1889, and I have offered this amendment for $600,000, which is still $22,000, in round numbers, less than the amount required and estimated for by the Department. I hope the amendment will be

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will observe that we have not for many years followed the estimates when it came to the question of making the appropriations for this purpose. In 1888$534,000 was asked and the appropriation made was only $440,000. In 1889 the amount of the appropriation was $460,000, and we have no information as to any deficiency on that account, and yet the estimates for that year came in, not for $460,000, but for $626,000. In other words, in the opinion of the committee the estimates have been extravagantly high, and the only way you can restrict the almost unlimited employment of persons in connection with our public buildings is by keeping the appropriations within narrow and reasonable limits.

There is no deficiency for the current year, and we give the same amount. I want to say that in my experience, taking my own city, there are fifty-odd men employed there—and it is the same in New York—for the care of these buildings. We have every reason to believe that a less number would have been entirely sufficient. I do not think any danger would come to public buildings in this connection.
We gave the same amount last year and there is no deficiency.
Mr. OUTHWAITE. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations admits that his committee has attempted to determine the number of employés in this particular part of the Treasury Department instead of permitting the Treasury Department to determine for itself the necessary amount, and holding it accountable for employing no more than actually necessary. The Treasury Department is in actual communication with all these cities and buildings through the custodians. The custodians in the interior of the country are frequently not representatives of the Treasury Department, but generally are postmasters who are called upon to do the duties of custodian without pay, and have no connection with the Treasury Department. They make the statement of the amount which will be necessary to properly take care of their respective public buildings. Now, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that no deficiency appropriation has been asked for. I can readily understand that no deficiency has been asked for, because in the bill enacted last year the same clause is to be found that is found in this: "That the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein." In other words, the Secretary of the Treasury has been given a certain amount; not that which he and his officers thought sufficient, but what the Committee on Appropriations thought sufficient. He has been told that he must not permit a deficiency to arise, and he has obeyed the law as a good officer should do; but it is no reason why there should not be an increase sufficient to enable him to conduct this part of his Department properly.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask a question there. I believe the sum recommended in this bill is the same as the amount appropriated for the current year. I will ask the chairman of the committee how many new public buildings have come in this year, or are to come in next year, over the number provided for this year?

Mr. RANDALL. I would not like to venture an answer to that as a certainty, but I could answer the question by saying that there has heretofore been an unnecessary number employed in this connection.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say in that connection that my understanding is that there is a considerable number of new buildings to come in next year and to be cared for more than are to be cared for this year. I am informed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], who understands it, that there are probably twenty-five additional

Now, at the commencement of this Administration gentlemen will recollect that a very determined effort was made to cut down the expenses of these buildings, and considerable favorable comment was made thereon; but it was ascertained after experiment was made that the expense could not be cut much below that which had been expended theretofore. My recollection is that a few years ago the expenditure for this purpose was $400,000 a year. From year to year many buildings have been added. I think it is entirely likely that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], which covers the full estimate, is probably more than an economical administration would require; but I do think that there ought to be an increase in this item.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say in all pleasantness that $460,000 is entirely a sufficient amount in this clause. I think the force at some of the public buildings already is too large; but if the gentleman thinks that the public buildings are not properly cared for the next Congress will be able to find that out, and I shall not resist any increase in expenditures in that connection in the new Congress.

Mr. CANNON. My opinion is that in many of the public buildings the help has not been sufficient and that the public buildings have not been properly cared for—

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Illinois tell which one has not been properly cared for?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me to complete the sentence I will state that they have not been properly cleaned and cared for in many instances, and for the reason that the appropriation was short. No deficiency can be made and I want to say now, as the gentleman is facetious, that if $460,000 was required this year under economic Democratic rule, that with an increase of twenty-five buildings to be cared for, $460,000 is not enough for next year.

Mr. RANDALL. You and I agreed that it was enough for the cur-

Mr. CANNON. I think not. Mr. RANDALL. I think so.

Mr. RYAN. The amount appropriated the fiscal year before this was $440,000. We increased it for the current year $20,000, for the reason that new buildings were coming in to be cared for—I think in the neighborhood of seventeen. Now, I understand that in the next year there will be from twenty-five to twenty-seven new buildings; and yet we have made no increase whatever for these new buildings. I think that we ought to make some provision for those that are to come in.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend think that there ought to be

Mr. CANNON. Boes not an increase of about $5,000?

Mr. RYAN. I believe there ought to be a sufficient increase to care the new buildings coming in. There is no provision made here for a proportion. for the new buildings coming in. There is no provision made he the increased number of buildings in the reported appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Because the force now employed is too large. Mr. RYAN. Whatever the cost of properly taking care of these new buildings would be a necessary increase.

Mr. CANNON. If $20,000 was added for seventeen new buildings for the current year, I take it that $30,000 ought to be added for twenty-five new buildings during the coming year, and if the gentle-man from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] will accept a suggestion I shall be very glad if he will modify his amendment so as to increase the aggregate amount $30,000, making it $490,000 instead of $460,000.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I will accept his suggestion and modify the amendment so as to make the amount $490,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Furniture and repairs of furniture: For furniture and repairs of furniture and carpets for all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, including marine hospitals, and for furniture, carpets, chandeliers, and gas-fixtures for new buildings, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $200,000. And all furniture now owned by the United States in other buildings shall be used, as far as practicable, whether it corresponds with the present regulation plans for furniture or not.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I see that that amount is only about one-half what is estimated by the Department. If we have got twenty-five new buildings coming in, ought there not to be an increase there?

Mr. RYAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

Mr. REED. What was appropriated last year?

Mr. RANDALL. I think there has been in the past very great extravagance not only in the quantity of furniture purchased but also in the quality. Instead of these public buildings being fitted up as you or I would fit up our parlor, they have been furnished in a style of luxury altogether out of the range of economical administration.

Mr. REED. That must be in some other State than Maine. [Laughter.]. Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether it is so there or not.

Mr. REED. What was the aggregate appropriation last year? Mr. RANDALL. Two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RYAN. I will say to my friend from Maine that this does not rest on the same basis as the preceding paragraph. Presumably the public buildings that we have are already provided for, and here we are only providing for new ones.

Mr. REED. If we appropriated $200,000 for seventeen new buildings last year, why should we not appropriate more for twenty-five new buildings this year? I think you had better add $50,000 to that

Mr. RANDALL. They were put at about an average. There were seventeen buildings last year which required new furniture, and there are, say, twenty this year—
Mr. REED. Twenty-five this year.
Mr. RANDALL. That is a mere guess. I think there are only eighteen. The same amount of money for furniture and for fresh purchases would average this year-

The committee seem to have appropriated considerably less than what the Department have asked for.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; but if this bill included all that is asked for by the Departments that it would carry in the aggregate about $7,000,-000 more than it does now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of alien contract-labor laws: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the alien contract-labor law approved February 26, 1885, as amended by the acts approved February 23, 1887, and October 19, 1888, and to defray the expenses which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to incur by the provisions of the last-named act, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that this item carries, I believe, the full amount submitted in the estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes. It is the same amount that was appropriated last year, and the same amount that is in the estimate this year.

Mr. CANNON. So that if the alien contract-labor law is not enforced in the year to come, as it was not enforced last year and is not being enforced now, if we are correctly informed, the fault will lie with the Administration in not submitting proper estimates and not using the money after it is appropriated. My own belief and information not as thorough as it ought to be as to details—my own belief is, that this law has been allowed to take care of itself. It is a law of very great importance and the country is deeply interested in its enforcement, but if we can believe the evidence that has been submitted to a committee of this House, and universal public opinion in various portions of the country, the law has practically been a dead letter upon the statute-book.

Mr. RANDALL. No; I do not understand that it has been a dead letter at all, but I understand that it has been enforced by existing officers of the Government in some way. I direct the attention of the gentleman to a letter which appears on page 20 of the report of the Committee on Appropriations in relation to this subject. The Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a telegram of inquiry which I sent to him, transmitted the communication to the Committee on Appropriations which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 2, 1889.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 2, 1889.

SIR: In reply to the telegram of the House Committee on Appropriations of this date, asking how much of the appropriation of $50,000, appropriated for the enforcement of the alien contract-labor laws, made under the sundry vil act of October 2, 1888, to be paid out of the "immigrant fund," has been expended up to date, and whether it will be necessary to appropriate the same sum for the fiscal year 1890, I have the honor to state that no money has as yet been paid from the Treasury from the appropriation for this object already made, although inspectors have been appointed at the ports of New York and Boston, to be paid from this fund, and others will be appointed where it is found to be necessary to properly execute the law.

As the appropriation was only made in October last, the work of the service has not yet been fully organized, and therefore it is difficult to say just what sum will be required for this object.

The service is an important one, and it is desirable that adequate means should be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury in order that he may fully enforce the provisions of the law upon the subject.

With reference to the appropriation already made, the attention of the committee is respectfully invited to the fact that it is made payable out of the immigrant fund in the sum of $50,000, and it is suggested that, instead of making an appropriation of a specific sum, as in the appropriation of 1889, the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to expend from the "immigrant fund" such sum as may be found necessary to properly execute the law in question.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. In the face of that statement, the committee while they were with unanimity anxious that this law should be thoroughly executed, did not think it necessary to make the appropriation of this year greater than the amount asked for, especially as the previous appropriation had not been expended.

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the gentleman, and my only object in calling attention to this item was to emphasize the fact that none of the money has been expended, and that it is notorious that this law has not been executed; and I hope that, by calling attention to it, per-chance either the present Administration or the incoming administration will be induced to expend the money and execute the law.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the idea which I understood to be implied in the remarks of the gentleman, and which I desired to controvert. He seemed to imply that this Administration had neglected the execution of this law. That I deny. I do not think the Administration has been neglectful in the execution of the law; on the contrary, believe the present incumbents have been as sincere and energetic in this direction as can be those who may follow them.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is the statute; and they have not spent one dollar of this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; but, as I understand, the gentleman is undertaking to go a little farther, and to reflect in some degree, upon the present officials of the Treasury Department in this connection. not think any such criticism is just; nor do I believe that the objects which Congress had in view in the passage of that act have been in

mr. CANNON. It does not so any any form the passage of that act have been in any way obstructed.

Mr. CANNON. Ido not know that they have been "obstructed"—

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I think that this Administration—and I am glad to be able to say it—has very fully met the emergency that was apprehended, and has done all that it could to prevent the incoming of this alien labor under contract.

Mr. CANNON It does not so account from the contract.

Mr. CANNON. It does not so appear from the report; and it is notorious that the contrary is the fact.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does my friend from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] know of instances of violations of the law which have not received the attention of the officers of this Administration? It is much easier to make charges than to make specifications.

Mr. CANNON. I know it is. I was not present in New York City when these people were landed from the various steam-ships in defiance of law. The law not only permits but makes it the duty of the Treasury Department to call upon every officer in its employ if necessary in order to execute the law. Take the evidence before the "Ford committee" appointed by this House, and the report of that committee, which, as I understand, shows sufficiently that the law has been a dead letter on the statute-book. letter on the statute-book.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois knows that the committee to which he refers has proposed a change of the law on this subject. A great deal of their investigation and of their report was devoted to the changes necessary in the existing law.

Mr. CANNON. There is law enough provided it is executed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out as many words as may be necessary in order to enable me to submit a few remarks on this question. [Laughter.]

this question. [Laughter.]

There never was any state of the law which required much of an appropriation on this subject until the act passed in February, 1885, which contained an appropriation for the remainder of the fiscal year then running—the period from February till July, 1885. That, I believe, was the first appropriation ever made to enforce this law; and I think it fair to say that it was the first appropriation that was needed. There was a neglect on the part of the Department to ask for an appropriation for the succeeding fiscal year, and, if I reckon aright, for the year following. And from the time of the passage of the act of February, 1885, there never has been a word from the Department calling for any appropriation by Congress to enforce that law until last summer, and then the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject was sent to this House a few days after the special committee had been appointed and had got to work investigating the troubles at New York.

Now, all that I choose to say against the present Administration is that as a matter of fact it never did ask for an appropriation. Whether this was the fault of the Administration or the fault of the House matters little. Up to the time to which I have referred this work was done by employing officials connected with the office of the collector of the port, and no special appropriation was made. My colleague [Mr. Cannon] is certainly right to this extent, that no appropriation has ever been asked for except for the fragmentary portion of the year 1885, until a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury last summer, which was not sent to the Speaker of this House until after the special committee had been organized, and, I think, had begun its investigations at New York.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act: That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved October I, ISSS, entitled "An act a supplement to an act entitled 'An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese,'" approved the 6th day of May, ISS2, and to defray the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of said act by the Secretary of the Treasury, $30,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by making the amount of this appropriation $50,000, which I believe is the estimate. I think the full amount of the estimate should be given for the enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will find on page 20 of the report which accompanies this bill a letter from Mr. Hugh S. Thompson, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasure is the stream of the treasury in which appears the following landau stream of the treasury in the treasury i guage alluding to this Chinese exclusion act:

The average pay of these employes will be about $5 per day, and it is be-lieved that an appropriation of $30,000 will be adequate for the purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

Now, in accordance with this suggestion from the Treasury Department, the Committee on Appropriations, as the gentleman from Illinois will remember, reduced this appropriation from $50,000 to $30,- 000, regarding the latter amount as entirely adequate.

Mr. CANNON. I still think that my amendment proposing to give Mr. CANNON. I still think that my amendment proposing to give the original amount of the estimate, $50,000, should prevail. Especially do I think this amount proper as there is no obligation upon the Admin-istration to expend in the enforcement of this law more than is neces-sary. When it is recollected that this immigration is not only to be guarded against at the Pacific ports, especially at San Francisco, but that we have a great border upon the north extending thousands of miles, and a great border also upon the south, I think it abundantly proper that the sum of $50,000, as proposed in the original estimate, the later conditions. should be given for this service, notwithstanding the later qualifica-tion of that estimate made by the Acting Secretary cutting it down to $30,000. For my part I would be perfectly willing to give $100,000 for this purpose. Certainly it is wise to give the original estimate of $50,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not believe there is a single member of the Committee on Appropriations who would not give what is essential for the proper execution of the law, but in the face of the statement of those who have to administer the law, that $30,000 is enough, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, and others, we ought not to go deeper into the Treasury than we are advised is necessary.

Mr. MORROW. In reference to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there is no evidence before the committee that this additional appropriation is necessary, I desire to say in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois that the Legislature of California had under consideration a few days ago a memorial addressed to Congress, which I understand is on its way here, asking us to take more effectual measures in respect to this matter of Chinese immigration.

The fact is the immigration is now coming into this country by way of British Columbia, and it is larger from that direction than ever before. They take advantage of the long frontier on our northern border to come into the United States. I am informed the reason why they do come in such large numbers is because sufficient guards are not employed to prevent them crossing the line. It is a matter of complaint since the so-called Scott law went into operation that it has not been fully carried out so as to guard against the entrance of Chinese immigrants. The amount provided by the gentleman from Illinois is deemed to be requisite to execute the law effectually. If not necessary it will not be expended.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from California will turn to the report to which I have already referred he will find that up to the 1st of September it had been found necessary only to expend $800 out of the $50,000 appropriated.

Mr. MORROW, The point I am trying to make is that the officers have not executed the law. The Legislature of California has taken the matter under consideration and passed a resolution on the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I appreciate the sensitiveness of the California Representatives in this connection. I have no doubt the amount of money appropriated in this bill will be sufficient successfully to keep out Chinese immigration.

Mr. MORROW. It is not sensitiveness. I am in earnest that some remedy is required.

The question recurred on Mr. CANNON's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, including $10,000 for survey of lands opened to settlement in the Territory of Montana under the act approved May 1, 1888, $200,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers; and the surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of reservations: Provided further, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, or if in cases of exceptional difficulties in the surveys, the work can not be contracted for at these rates, compensation for surveys and resurveys may be made by the said Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at rates not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $15 for township, and $12 for section lines. And of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $20,000 may be expended for the examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts in order to test the accuracy of work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfectsurveys returned by deputy surveyors, and for examinations of surveys here-tofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent; and inspecting mineral deposits, coal-fields, and timber districts, and for making such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I move the following amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I move the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 45, in line 17, after the words "two hundred" and before the word "thousand," insert the words "and six "so as to read "$205,000;" and after the word "lines," in line 20, insert the following: "including $6,000 for survey of the west boundary of the line of White Mountain Indian reservation in Arizona."

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Arizona to the fact that we have doubled the amount for this purpose; in other words, we appropriate for the public surveys $200,000 instead of $100,000. Now, I have no objection that this shall be taken out of the $200,000 if the gentleman will make his amendment conform to that idea. I do not think I would be authorized by the committee to object to it in that form, but I am unwilling to increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. In other words, if the appropriation shall be $5,000 or $6,000, or so much as may be necessary, that it shall be taken out of the $200,000 appropriated for the surveys of the public lands?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; if the gentleman will put his amendment in the form of a clause in the body of the paragraph providing that this Indian reservation shall be surveyed out of the amount appropriated for the general surveys, I will not object to it, so that it does not increase the total amount of the appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he might provide for surveying this reservation out of the general fund.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what I have suggested.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. But the difficulty is this, that there seems to be a settled policy against the surveying of the public lands in the Territories until a new public-land law is enacted. We have had no public survey in my Territory for years and years.

public survey in my Territory for years and years.

Now, what proportion will be allotted to Arizona I do not know; but the appropriation by adding five or six thousand dollars, a small amount, would survey this Indian reservation, running this boundary line, and accomplishing a work which is in all respects absolutely important. What amount of the general fund my Territory would receive under the act I do not know, I repeat. Our townships are entirely unsur-veyed, our public-school lands are being settled upon by innocent peo-ple, and we are absolutely in a state of chaos in regard to the public

Mr. RANDALL. I only look upon the gentleman's proposition as an intimation that this survey might be made out of the appropriation, and an intimation to the officials having direct charge of this matter that this survey shall take precedence to the extent of the $5,000 over and above the amount allotted to the Territory.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I comprehend the remarks of the chairman, but my reason for offering the amendment in its present form is this: I have no means of knowing what the Secretary or the Commissioner of the Land Office, or whoever has charge of the duty of distributing the fund, will give to the Territory of Arizona for these surveys. We may get five thousand or we may get one thousand. But if you appropriate $6,000 for that survey that is a definite amount which must be used for the purpose of surveying the west boundary line of the San Carlos reservation, which is in a perfectly chaotic and clouded state, as I have already said.

Mr. RYAN. I should think it would answer the purpose of the gentleman if he would add a proviso to the pending paragraph providing that $5,000 or $6,000 of the foregoing amount may be used for the pur-

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I will accept that in the absence of anything better.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or so much as may be necessary.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I am willing to accept that modification. I do not want, of course, any more than is necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let the gentleman prepare an amendment in that form, and he can present it hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood, then, that this paragraph is to be passed over for the present with the privilege of recurring to it?

Mr. RANDALL. With the privilege of recurring to it only for the purpose of the amendment to be offered to it by the gentleman from

The CHAIRMAN. That will be the understanding, then?
The Clerk concluded the reading of the items under the head of "United States Geological Survey."

Mr. RANDALL. By instruction of the committee I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

Add after line 19, on page 49:

"Irrigation survey: For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation and the segregation of irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selections of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation, and the prevention of floods and overflows, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employes in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith the work to be performed by the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior), $150,000."

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve for the present the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] desires, as I understand it, to move an amendment to increase the amount $100,000, so as to make the aggregate $250,000 in place of $150,000?

$100,000, so as to make the aggregate $250,000 in place of $150,500 Mr. SYMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be remembered that when we entered upon the consideration of this bill the general debate was cut off at my request with the understanding that where a reasonable request was made as to time for discussion on important matters in the bill I would yield. I think this is a subject which is entitled to consideration, and under the terms of my agreement, that there should be a reasonable time for discussion, noon it. I want now to know how much time gentlemen discussion upon it, I want now to know how much time gentlemen

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself, I would like about fifteen or twenty minutes to explain the matter. I will not enter into a general discussion of the subject. I understand there are several gentlemen on the floor who desire to speak upon this most important amendment to the bill, and I think we ought to have about an hour and a half on a side.

Mr. RANDALL. Gracious! I think there has been a pretty thor-Mr. RANDALL. Gracious: I think their all perfect already, and the ough examination amongst members into this subject already, and the time suggested by the gentleman seems entirely too long. I want to hasten the passage of the bill. I am willing to concede the fifteen minutes the gentleman suggested, and then he can proceed, and I will do the best I can for other gentlemen.

Mr. SYMES. I desire to follow somewhat the wishes of the gentleman, because I appreciate the time necessary to pass this long bill; but I do not myself feel like taking the responsibility of agreeing to much less time than an hour and a half on a side.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I will cut this knot right here by yielding fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that if a point of order is to be submitted, it ought to be made before three hours' debate.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order can be waived temporarily. The gentleman from Colorado desires to be heard, and I will not disoblige him.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to proceed for fifteen minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied the only reason there is any doubt about the propriety of appropriations for proceeding so fast as is practicable with these topographic and irrigation surveys for storage reservoirs is because the subject has not occupied the minds of the gentlemen who report the appropriation bills, and the members of the House, and that the specific objects for which the money is to be used are not entirely understood.

The gentlemen who opposed the appropriation of $100,000 made at the last session based their objections upon the ground that the Government ought not to commence building dams, constructing reservoirs and irrigating ditches, and peddling out water to adjoining land-

I said then, and I say now, that is not the object or purpose of these appropriations.

The object of these appropriations is to make such topographic and irrigation surveys as will enable the Government to select the natural sites for reservoirs on the public lands in the arid region, reserve such reservoir sites from sale, and classify and reserve the irrigable lands. Let me refer to the statute making the appropriation at the last ses-

Irrigation survey.—For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation, and the segregation of the irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and the prevention of floods and overflows, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employés in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith; the work to be performed by the Geological Survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available. (Act October 2, 1888, 25 Stat. L., p. 526, sec. 1)	$350,000	$100,000

The object and purpose of this appropriation is to add to the value of the United States property, its public land.

I have made a careful estimate of the increase in value to be derived from storage reservoirs. I said in my remarks last session:

Irom storage reservoirs. I said in my remarks last session:

The arid region comprises about four-tenths of the whole area of the United States outside of Alaska. Hence, within the arid region of the United States there are approximately 500,000,000 acres of land—a tract of country larger in area than the greatest empire in Europe. It is estimated that 10 per cent, or 50,000,000 acres of that arid land can be brought under cultivation by irrigation with a proper system of storage reservoirs.

Without irrigation this desert or arid land is not worth more than 10 to 50 cents an acre. When this land is reclaimed from arid to arable land it will become worth from $10 to $50 to $100 per acre. So these $0,000,000 acres of the 500,000,000 acres of arid land by irrigation would be increased in value over $2,000,000, more than sufficient to pay off the national debt. Most of this land is public domain, and it can never be thickly, nor much of it sparsely, settled without irrigation.

But this gives a small idea of the permanent wealth and accreting benefits to without irrigation.

But this gives a small idea of the permanent wealth and accruing benefits to be derived from this system of irrigation by storage reservoirs. It will provide homes in the future for many millions of people. It will create large, populous, and wealthy communities in that part of our country heretofore marked upon the maps as the Great American Desert. Nature has given that country every kind of material wealth in profusion, except agriculture, without irrigation or without water. The storage of water for irrigation is the one thing needed.

Marvelous estimates are made of the number of acres that can be irrigated-Governor Ross says 60,000,000 acres in New Mexico. Colorado committee report 40,000,000 acres in that State alone. These are exaggerated estimates. Major Powell estimates that 15 per cent. of the whole arid region can be irrigated by a proper system of storage reservoirs. This would make about 75,000,000 acres.

Major Powell has made a careful estimate of the quantity of land that can be made irrigable in several of the States and Territories:

	Per cent.
New Mexico	74
Idaho	8
Montana	20
Colorado	. 20
Wyoming	18 to 20
Utah	18 to 20

This estimate is based on the assumption that all the waters that flow the year round are utilized.

Suppose the Government should charge $2 an acre more for the land that shall be classified and reserved as susceptible of irrigation from the storage reservoirs. Selling it at $3.25 per acre instead of $1.25 per acre, 50,000,000 acres would bring into the Treasury $100,000,000.

At the last session I pointed out on this large map where the topographic surveys of the United States had extended over the country.

I stated that this Government had expended about a million of dol-lars during the last ten years in the topographic branch of the Geological Survey for the purpose of making topographic surveys and classifying to a certain extent the public lands and other lands of the United States. Mr. Chairman, these topographic surveys point out only the general character of the country. They point out whether it is mountain, canon, valley, or plain. It describes its general features, characteristics and natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, Isoid at that time, and I reinted out on this leave.

acteristics, and natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, I said at that time—and I pointed out on this large map where the topographic surveys of the United States have extended, and that up to this time they had cost this Government over one million of money, without being utilized for any special practical purpose; and the sum appropriated of $200,000 for the topographic branch of the Geological Survey is in the present sundry civil bill. Therefore I make the point, which is to introduce what I am to say about this new map, that the $100,000 we then obtained and the $250,000 we now ask for are in order that the $1,000,000 may be utilized which has already been expended for the topographic survey. In other which has already been expended for the topographic survey. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the money that we are now asking for is merely incident to securing an additional topographic survey that may be called the irrigating branch of it, utilizing a great portion of the work which has before been accomplished by the topographic survey in different parts of the country.

Mr. Chairman, geological survey parties or the irrigating branch of Mr. Chairman, geological survey parties or the irrigating branch of that survey may go where the topographic survey has been extended over a portion of the country, as in the special map that I shall illustrate from in a moment, without having to commence anew. They commence with their field notes of the original topographic survey right where the topographic surveyors left off, and proceed to extend that topographic survey by drawing contour lines, establishing the sites for reservoirs, running lines for ditches, laying their levels, and marking off the lands suitable for irrigation from these reservoirs when the water shall be utilized in the future. That is what I desire the House to understand—that this sum which is tobe appropriated here may utilize and obtain for the public the benefit of the million dollars that has already been expended.

Mr. Chairman, to illustrate, this map before us represents an irrigating survey of an irrigating district on the Jemez River in New Mexico, about 100 miles from Albuquerque, which has been carried on since the appropriation was made last summer under the personal supervision of Major Powell, Director of the Survey. These blue patches

These blue patches on the map represent reservoir sites that have been surveyed on that on the map represent reservoir sites that have been surveyed on that river, or creek, up in the mountains, near where the stream has its source. Those represent sites for reservoirs that were surveyed during October and November last. That long, meandering, dotted black line represents the irrigating canal which will take the water from those reservoirs gradually during the irrigating season down to the foot-hills below, where the land which is segregated now and reserved under the provisions of the act of last September as irrigable land, made susceptible of irrigation from these reservoirs, is located.

Mark you gentlemen where those sites for reservoirs are located the Mark you, gentlemen, where those sites for reservoirs are located the place where the irrigating canal commences is at such a high altitude that agriculture can not be carried on. It is from 7,000 to 10,000 feet above the sea. These lands away down here on the foot-hills [indicating on the map] and in the valleys, these townships the boundaries of which are marked by these red lines show the Government land that is, by the act of last summer, segregated from the public domain to be disposed of, under the proclamation of the President, or by direction of Congress, in such a way as future statesmanship shall determine.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I agreed that the committee should rise at half past 4, and if the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] will consent to interrupt his remarks at this point, I will now move that the committee rise.

Mr. SYMES. I do not object. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Cox having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, etc., and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JAMES B. EADS.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Appropriations a joint resolution (H. Res. 257) making an appropriation for payment of the legal representatives of James B. Eads.

Mr. RANDALL. This report was prepared by the late Mr. BURNES.
I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD, so that members may understand it, and I give notice that I will call it up to-

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. The report is as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations having considered the estimate submitted by the Secretary of War on page 177 of the Book of Estimates for 1890, for the payment of $500,000 to the legal representatives of James B, Eads for constructing jettles and other works at South Pass, Mississippi River, report herewith the accompanying joint resolution to make the appropriation as estimated, and recommend its passage.

A full explanation of the subject will be found in Appendix V of the Book of Estimates for 1890, page 294, and in the following letter, with accompanying papers, from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 22, 1889,
SIR: Referring to the bill to provide for an appropriation of $500,000 for payment to the legal representatives of James B. Eads of half the sum of $1,000,000 retained by the United States under the act of March 3, 1875, as amended by the act of March 3, 1875, as amended by the act of March 3, 1879, to be paid on the expiration of ten years' maintenance of the channel as required by the said act of March 3, 1879, I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the 19th instant, on the subject, from the Chief of Engineers, expressing the opinion that the act of March 3, 1879, amended the original jetty act of March 3, 1875, by advancing certain moneys to James B, Eads, and by reducing the widths of channel required by the original act to be secured.

Attention is invited to the opinion of the Action to secured.

Attention is invited to the opinion of the Acting Attorney-General, dated June 27, 1881 (Senate Executive Document No. 130, Forty-seventh Congress, first session), in which he states that all questions betwirt the United States and Captain Eads in respect to the securing of the depth of water stipulated for under his contract having been happily ended, such as may arise in future will probably concern only the maintenance for a specified period of what has thus been secured.

It appears to have been understood by the War Department and by the Department of Justice that a channel of the width and depth required by the acof March 3, 1878, as amended by the act of March 3, 1878, has been secured, and consequently the $1,000,000, one-half of which will be due in September, 1889, if the channel is maintained, had been earned.

I concur in these views and recommend an appropriation of $500,000 in accordance with the estimate submitted to Congress (Book of Estimates, page 177).

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT.

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

Hon. Samuel J. Randall, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C., January 19, 1889.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington, D. C., January 19, 1889.

SIR: Referring to the inclosed bill "making an appropriation for payment to the legal representatives of James B. Eads," handed me at the rooms of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives during a personal interview with the committee on the morning of January 17, 1889, I have the honor to report that it is very evident that in the passage of the act of March 3, 1879, it was the intention of Congress to amend the original jetty act of March 3, 1879, by advancing certain moneys to James B. Eads and by reducing the widths of channel provided by the original act, These two objects having been accomplished the balance of the original act was left in full force.

1. That the act was intended to cover and provide for all payments thereafter to be made by the Government to Mr. Eads on account of the construction of the works at the South Pass and for the securing and maintenance of the channel. The language of the act is that "in lieu of payments" provided by the act of 1875 the following payments should be made, etc.

There is no provision made in the act of 1879 for any other maximum channel than the channel 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width.

2. The act of 1879 expressly declares that when a channel 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to be paid to Mr. Eads by the Government, "85,250,000," should be deemed as carned by Mr. Eads.

If it was the intention of Congress that any other maximum channel should be secured than the modified channel provided that the total compensation for the work should be deemed as earned until the maximum channel had been obtained.

The fact that by the terms of the act the total compensation for the entire work is declared to be earned when a channel 25 feet deep, ment, should be paid as the small state of payment. It has no relation to the condition of the channel. The payments were to be made at the times—what times? At the expiration of ten and twenty years after the modified channel was secured, and in the manner—what manner? Upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of War upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

States.

The language means no more than this, and to hold that the word "manner" should be construed as referring to widths and depths of channel would seem to be a distortion of the language of the act and a clear violation of the intention of Congress.

to be a dissortion of the language of the act and a clear violation of the intention of Congress.

5. For nearly ten years the Government of the United States has been paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent, per annum to James B. Eads, and since his death to his legal representatives, by way of interest on the $1,000,000 held as security for the maintenance of the channel, and the channel thus maintained has been the modified channel provided for in the act of 1379, to wit, a channel 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width. To now place such a construction upon the acts as would prevent the payment of $500,000 of the $1,000,000 upon the maintaining of such channel for a period of ten years would necessarily involve the conclusion that large sums of money heretofore paid to Mr. Eads were improperly paid. All of these payments have been made upon the theory that Congress intended by the act of 1875. Several Attorneys-General of the United States have considered the question arising from the payments of installments of interest on this $1,000,000, and in no case has it been questioned that Mr. Eads was entitled to receive this interest money upon the maintenance of the modified channel.

6. We have seen that the language of the act of 1879 in itself clearly indicates the intention of Congress. This intention, however, is further illustrated by the report of the Senate Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, which committee favorably reported the act of 1879. This report may be found in Senate Reports, volume 2, 1878-'79, Forty-fifth Congress, first session, report in Senate Reports, volume 2, 1878-79, Forty-fifth Congress, first session, report No. 781.

In concluding the report the committee says:

"The provisions of the act of 1875, before adverted to, were oppressive in this: First, that they required so large an amount of work to be done before any payment by the Government; and, second, that they require unnecessary widths of channel. All that can be reasonably desired by the Government is that a channel shall be secured through the jetties of sufficient width and depth to accommodate present and prospective commerce. The committee is satisfied that a channel 26 feet in depth by 200 feet in width is entirely adequate, and they reach this conclusion from the testimony of experts of undoubted ability. The commission of 1874, in recommending the application of the jetty system to the South Pass, contemplated the securing of no greater depth of permanent channel than 25 or 26 feet, without regard to width; and General Wright, in his testimony before the committee, stated in substance that a channel 26 feet in depth by 200 feet in width was ample to accommodate the commerce of the river.

testimony before the committee, stated in substance that the commerce of the depth by 200 feet in width was ample to accommodate the commerce of the river.

"Mr. Eads does not propose nor does the committee recommend that a less depth than 30 feet be secured through the center of the jetty channel, but this great depth would have to be increased to 35 or 40 feet in order to produce the maximum channel required by the original act.

"In order to secure a channel of the width and depth required by the jetty act it would be necessary to largely increase the volume of water through the pass. This would cause a disturbance of the regimen of the three passes, and might involve serious danger to the works. Relying upon the testimony of Generals Barnard and Wright and upon the emphatic declaration of Mr. Eads, the committee is of opinion that it would be unwise for the Government to require a trial of this experiment.

"The Government should require nothing to be done which might involve destruction of the jetties.

"In view of the foregoing and other matters presented to it the committee is of opinion that Mr. Eads is entitled to and should receive relief at the hands of Congress, and that the decrease of widths from those required by the act of 1875 will be as much to the interest of the Government as to that of Mr. Eads.

"Wherefore it recommends that all of said bill No. 1422 after the enacting clause be stricken out and that the annexed amendment be inserted in lieu thereof, and that said bill, when so amended, do pass."

I append three opinions of the Attorney-General of the United States bearing upon the general questions involved, namely: Opinion of May 24, 1879; opinion of Juneary 20, 1880.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

[Opinion of May 24, 1879.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, May 24, 1879.

Sie: In conversation yesterday you submitted to me an inquiry arising upon the following state of facts:

Assuming that it appeared to you that on the 7th day of April last Captain Eads had complied with all the conditions of the act so far as relates to maintaining a channel through the South Pass to the Gulf of Mexico a depth of 25 feet and a width of notless than 200 feet, is he now entitled to the payment of 25 feet and a width of notless than 200 feet, is he now entitled to the payment of 25 feet and a width of notless than 200 feet, is he now entitled to the payment of 25 feet and a width of notless than 200 feet in width at the bottom through the said jetties there shall be paid $500,000."—the further fact now appearing that since the 7th of April the channel from the South Pass to the Gulf of Mexico has been reduced in width by the action of the current from over 200 feet (namely, 220 feet) to 140 feet in certain points, still retaining, however, through this width the depth of 25 feet?

The original act contained four provisions for payment on obtaining certain depths and widths of channel, which were to be accompanied by additional payments for mantaining such channels for a year; thus, upon obtaining channels of 24, 23, and 25 feet of the width required by the act, Mr. Eads was to receive the sum of $500,000, and upon maintaining each of these depths for a year he was to receive the additional sum of $250,000; on obtaining the depth of 30 feet, etc., he was to receive the sum of $500,000, and on maintaining the depth of 50 feet, etc., he was to receive the sum of $500,000, and on maintaining the depth of 50 feet, etc., he was to receive the sum of $500,000, and on maintaining the depth of 50 feet, etc., he was to receive the sum of $500,000, on the payment of $500,000 provided by the herrinbefore receited act to be paid when a channel of 24 feet in depth, and the standard payment of $200,000 to the payment of $200,000 to th

By these changes Mr. Eads was to receive the same sum that was provided for in the original act, but he was to receive it on different terms; and it will be observed that the deferred payments of the original act, which related to his maintaining the depths of 24, 26, 28, and 30 feet, respectively, were absorbed by the various payments directed to be made by the acts of June 19, 1878, and March 3, 1879. The deferred payments upon obtaining 24 feet having been otherwise provided for by the act of June 19, 1878, and the remaining three deferred payments, upon obtaining 26, 28, and 30 feet, respectively, being absorbed by the payments provided for by the act of March 3, 1879.

The act of March 3, 1879, is explicit in its statement that nothing therein contained is to affect or repeal in any way the provisions of the act of June 19, 1878. While it can not be doubted that Congress has constantly kept in view the intent expressed in the original act, namely, that of authorizing "Mr. Eads and his associates to create and permanently maintain a wide and deep channel between the South Pass and the Gulf," these alterations remove from the act the provisions for payments which were to be deferred in order to secure the maintenance of the channel at particular depths. They leave the security for the maintenance of the channel to other provisions of the act which it may be fairly deemed Congress considered sufficient for the purpose.

The original act contemplated that Mr. Eads was to receive the sum of $5,250, 200 for his work. It provided for payments in the manner I have adverted to upon obtaining and maintaining specified depths and widths of channel; but these payments only cover $4,250,000. The original act provided that when a channel 30 feet in depth and 350 feet in width (which was the original width contemplated) shall have been obtained by the effect of said jetties and auxilary works, the remaining $1,000,000 shall have been deemed earned by the said Eads and his associates; and said amount shall remain as security in the possession of the United States for the purposes therein set forth. Those purposes were that when the channel at its full width and depth should have been maintained for ten years Eads should receive the sum of half of $1,000,000, and when the same depth and width should have been maintained for the years Eads should are receive the sum of half of $1,000,000, and when the same act contemplated that after the full completion in width and depth, Mr. Eads and his associates should also receive $100,000 per nanum, in equal quarterly payments, so long as the channel should be maintained for a period of twenty years from that date at the ultimate depth and width.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, June 28, 1879.

DEFARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, June 28, 1879.

SIR: Yesterday you orally inquired of me whether Captain Eads is entitled to $500,000, or only $250,000, upon obtaining a channel 26 feet deep and 200 feet wide through the South Pass of the Mississippi River to the Gulf of Mexico (including the requisite depth in the pass and over the shoal at the head of the pass); or, to state your question in another form, whether the sum of $250,000 heretofore advanced to him, being one-half of the sum to be paid under the act of March 3, 1876, for a channel 26 feet deep and 300 feet wide, is to be deducted from the payment for a channel 26 feet deep and 200 feet wide provided for by the act of March 3, 1879.

1875, for a channel 26 feet deep and 300 feet wide, is to be deducted from the payment for a channel 26 feet deep and 200 feet wide provided for by the act of March 3, 1879.

Your question assumes, of course, that in other respects Captain Eads has complied with his contract: that is, in maintaining the depth and width through the South Pass itself and the shoal at its head, which he is bound at this time to maintain, and relates only to the amount of payment now to be made upon his having obtained a channel 26 feet deep and 200 feet wide.

It is necessary for me to recapitulate briefly the provisions of the several acts bearing upon this subject, confining myself to them so far as they relate to payments to Mr. Eads. This I will do substantially in the terms of my letter to you of May 24, 1879.

The original act of March 3, 1875, contained six provisions for payments on obtaining certain depths and widths of channel, four of which were accompanied by additional payments for maintaining such channels for a year. Thus, on obtaining a channel of 20 feet in depth, of the prescribed width, Mr. Eads was to receive $500,000; on obtaining a channel of 22 feet in depth, and the appropriate width, he was to receive $500,000; upon obtaining channels of 24, 26, and 28 feet in depth, of the width required by the act, he was to receive the sum of $500,000 for each, and upon maintaining them for a year he was to receive the additional sum of $250,000 for each; and, on obtaining a depth of 30 feet, etc., he was to receive the sum of $500,000, and $500,000 additional for maintaining the same for a year. All the additional sums for maintaining depths, etc., were to be paid with interest.

The act of June 19, 1878, provided for the payment of $500,000 provided by the hereinbefore-rectied act, to be paid when a channel of 24 feet in depth and not less than 250 feet in width shall have been obtained."

The third section of the same act authorized a further payment to Mr. Eads, in the aggregate not to exceed the sum of $500,000, to

This being the state of the law, the act of March 3, 1879, provided for a system of payments to be made in lieu of the payments before provided for. From the nature of the case, this provision could only affect the payments under the laws of March 3, 1875, and June 19, 1878, when construed together, which were yet to be made. This act of March 3, 1878, when construed together, own the were yet to be made. This act of March 3, 1878, when construed together, own the were yet to be made. This act of March 3, 1878, when construed together, own the manned to the amendatory act of June 19, 1878, and that the whole of the act of March 3, 1875, shall be and remain in full force and effect, except so far as it is amended by this act or as previously amended by any other act. The first two payments of $500,000 each contemplated by the original act of March 3, 1875, had been made. By the express terms of the act of March 3, 1879, the two payments of $500,000 each contemplated by the act of June 19, 1878, were to be made if they had not already been made. Whether or not they had actually been made at the time of the passage of the act I am not informed, nor is it important.

This state of legislation shows clearly that the act of March 3, 1879, was intended to operate only upon those payments which were to follow the payments provided for by the act of June 19, 1878. Those payments are $250,000 upon obtaining a channel 28 feet deep and 300 feet wide, and the additional sum of $250,000 upon maintaining the same for a year; $200,000 upon obtaining a depth of each and so width of 300 feet, and $500,000 additional upon maintaining the same for a year; in all, $2,250,000.

The new system of payments provided for by the act of March 3, 1879, cantemplated an immediate payment of $550,000. Upon Mr. Eads obtaining a depth of 250 feet, and $500,000. Upon Mr. Eads obtaining a depth of 26 feet and a width of 300 feet, $300,000; in all $2,250,000.

The important change made in favor of Mr. Eads by the passage of the act of March 3, 187 missible.

In direct answer, therefore, to your inquiry, I would reply that, assuming Mr. Eads to have obtained a channel of 26 feet in depth and 200 feet in width through the South Pass of the Mississippi River to the deep water of the Gulf of Mexico, including the requisite depth in the pass and over the shoal at the head of the pass, and to have complied in all other respects with his contract, I am of opinion that he is entitled to receive the sum of $500,000.

On examining the papers handed to me by you I observe a letter from the Chief of Engineers, in which he withdraws the opinion heretofore expressed by him that Mr. Eads should receive only $250,000.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, CHAS, DEVENS, Attorney-General.

Hon. GEORGE W. McCBARY, Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, January 20, 1880.

Department of Justice, January 20, 1880.]

Department of Justice, January 20, 1880.

Sir: Your letter of the 13th instant submits to me an inquiry as to the proper construction of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 464), and amendatory acts, in reference to the time for which Capt. James B. Eads is entitled to interest on $1,000,000, which amount remains "as security in the possession of the United States," the demand for payment of the first installment of interest having been made and the inquiry being whether interest is allowable to Captain Eads for all the time from July 8, 1879, continuously, according to the time of the calendar year; or, if not for that time, then for what time should it be paid?

Your letter does not state in terms that for a portion of the time subsequent to July 8, 1879, the channel constructed by Captain Eads was not in fact maintained; but I understand such to be the case, and your inquiry, therefore, to present the question whether Captain Eads is entitled to interest for such periods of time, if any, as shall occur after the original completion of the channel during which time it shall not be maintained by him.

It is a part of the contract of Captain Eads with the United States that the channel constructed shall, when completed, be maintained for the period of twenty years. To assure the performance of this part of his undertaking is the purpose of the above-mentioned security held by the United States. For this service he is entitled to receive annual compensation at the rate of $100,000. But it is provided:

"If any failure to maintain said channel of 30 feet in depth and 350 feet in width shall occur, the date for releasing the said money held in pleage shall be postponed for an equal period of time, and the compensation for maintaining said channel shall cease until said depth and width shall be again restored, the maintannance of a channel of 30 feet in depth and 350 feet in width for twenty years, exclusive of all such periods of failure, being intended

States during such periods of failure, or whether these payments, like the payments of annual compensations, are to be postponed, so as to exclude such periods.

The provision for the payment of interest is to be found in the following clause

The provision for the payment of interest is to be found in the following clause of the original act:

"When a channel 30 feet in depth and 350 feet in width shall have been obtained by the effect of said jetties and auxiliary works aforesaid, the remaining $1,000,000 shall be deemed as having been earned by said Eads and associates; but said amount shall remain as security in the possession of the United States for the purpose hereinafter set forth, interest at 5 per cent. per annum on the same being payable to said Eads, his assigns, and legal representatives, semi-annually, from the date when a channel of 30 feet in depth and 350 feet in width shall have been first secured, so long as said money, or any part thereof, is held by the United States."

The provisions for the payment of interest on the money held in pledge, and of the annual compensation, are found connected together in most of the sections of this statute. It seems not to be an unreasonable inference that Congress looked allike to the money received by Eads as interest and to what is termed "annual compensation," for the maintenance of the channel. The clause which provides for an expenditure from the sum of money held in pledge is as follows:

"annual compensation," for the maintenance of the channel. The clause which provides for an expenditure from the sum of money held in pledge is as follows:

"That in case said Eads and associates, in order to maintain a channel of 30 feet in depth and 350 feet in width, shall deem it necessary to expend on said works, during any one or more of said twenty years, any money in excess of the annual payments received by them during said year or years under this act, the Secretary of War shall, on satisfactory proof of such expenditures, authorize, as often as such extra expenditures may require, the payment of the same from the said money in pledge to said Eads or his legal representatives." Strictly speaking, there are no annual payments. The compensation, as distinguished from interest, is paid quarterly, and the interest is paid semi-annually. The words "annual payments," as used in this clause, may fairly be interpreted to mean the sums payable to Mr. Eads during a year.

The sum held in pledge is distinctly retained as security for the maintenance of the channel. How Mr. Eads could be fairly entitled to interest upon the same during the periods when the channel is not maintained it is not easy to perceive. It is contended, however, that this is the precise language of the statute, and that any other construction violates the language. But any construction which would give to Mr. Eads interest during the periods of failure would violate the whole spirit of the act, and would lead to a result, if the act itself as a whole is considered, so clearly at variance with it as to be inadmissible. According to this theory Mr. Eads, even if he failed to maintain the channel permanently, would still be entitled to these semi-annual payments, and a security given for the maintenance of the channel would result only in this, that the party would not at the end of the twenty years receive the principal sum, but would be entitled to a claim against the United States for the interest on that principal sum for an indefinite num clauses, than by considering the necessity for it, and the cause which induced its enactment."

Applying these well-known rules of construction, it would therefore seem that a conclusion which would defeat the object of the Legislature in providing itself with security for the maintenance of the work, and give to the party falling the benefit of the security in what is ordinarily the most satisfactory form—that of a permanent claim for interest provided to be paid was the full rate which the United States was paying upon its public securities, and it can not be deemed that the United States was secured when it was compelled to pay this interest for the periods during which Mr. Eads failed to perform his contract. If Mr. Eads should abandon the maintenance of this channel, it certainly would not be unjust, nor would it be at variance with the fair intent of this act, to hold that the United States might, by proper legislation, devote the sum thus held in pledge to the maintenance of the channel, by an expenditure of it through its own officers, or by any new contractor that might be selected.

In direct answer to your inquiry, I am therefore of opinion that Mr. Eads is not entitled to payment of interest for all the time from July 8, 1879, continuously, according to the time of the calendar year, if during that time there have been periods when he has failed to maintain the channel; but that such periods of failure must be deducted, as such deduction is made in the matter of what is termed the "annual compensation."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS, Attorney-Geneval.

Hon. ALEXANDER RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage, with amendments, of the bill (H. R. 11683) for the establishment of a light-ship with a fog-signal at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. GORMAN.

It also announced the passage, with amendments in which concur-rence was requested, of the bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bills of the following titles:
Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association;

A bill (H. R. 11207) to increase the maximum amount of international money-orders from $50 to $100;

A bill (H. R. 2686) for the relief of William Knowland;

A bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy; and

A bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy

It also announced the passage of the bill (S. 3810) to establish two additional land districts in the State of Nebraska; in which concurrence was requested.

JAMES K. EDWARDS, DECEASED.

Mr. SHAW. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts to submit a privileged report, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the original resolution so that it will read:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to the widow of James K. Edwards, deceased (late one of the Official Reporters of the House), the expenses of his last illness and funeral, not to exceed $500; and also to pay to the widow and only daughter of said Edwards, in equal amounts, a further sum equivalent to six months of the salary which said Edwards was receiving at the time of his death."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. How does that matter come before the House? The SPEAKER pro tempore. As a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland, who presents the report, whether the sum of $1,000 extra was not appropriated last session for the benefit of this reporter.

Mr. SHAW. Yes; and a like sum was appropriated for each of the other Official Reporters of the House because of extra expenses incurred in transcribing the debate during the last long session; so that, in order to equalize matters entirely, it would be necessary for them all to die. [Laughter.] I ask for a vote.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I ask unanimous consent to report and have considered at the present time the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the bill proposed to be reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. When a gentleman states that he rises to present a privileged report, does not that take precedence of any other matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does, and the Chair will so decide; but the gentleman from Massachusetts has a right to have his request stated.

 $\Lambda$  bill (S. 2182) to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers.

INDEXING JOURNALS OF CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] for unanimous consent, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] desires to submit a privileged report, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 29, 1888.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, September 29, 1888.

Mr. CARUTH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Rules are hereby authorized to reappoint the person recently employed under the resolution of May 22, 1882, at the rate of compensation fixed by the said resolution, to assist in the preparation of a general index of the Journals of Congress under the resolution of June 18, 1878, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until an appropriation shall be made."

The Committee on Accounts to whom was referred the said resolution of the said resolution of the said resolution of the said resolution of June 18, 1878, to be made."

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, authorizing the reappointment of the person recently employed in the preparation of a general index of the Journals of Congress, under resolution of May 22, 1882, have considered the same, and report it back with the following amend-

22, 1882, have considered the same, and report it back with the following amendments:

In line 3 strike out the words "compensation fixed by said resolution" and insert the words "twelve hundred dollars per annum;" and in the last line strike out the words "an appropriation shall be made" and insert the words "the 4th of March, 1889, and the Committee on Appropriations are hereby instructed to provide for the compensation of the said person after the said 4th of March in one of the appropriation bills at the rate of $1,200 per annum."

As so amended the resolution will read:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Rules are hereby authorized to reappoint the person recently employed under the resolution of May 22, 1882, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, to assist in the preparation of ageneral index of the Journals of Congress under the resolution of June 18, 1878, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until the 4th of March, 1889, and the Committee on Appropriations are hereby instructed to provide for the compensation of the said person after the said 4th of March in one of the appropriation bills at the rate of $1,200 per annum."

And as so amended your committee recommend the resolution be adopted.

Mr. REECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to inquire the name of the person referred to in the resolution, so that I may move an amendment to strike out the phraseology describing that "person" and to in-

The person referred to is Mr. Charles Abert, of Maryland, who is the author of this personal index. He was appointed under resolution of May 22, 1882, by the Committee on Rules, at a salary of $2,000 per annum. Subsequently the status of this matter was changed and an increased force provided for in the legislative, executive, and judiciary appropriation bill of July 11, 1888. This additional force was appointed by the Committee on Rules, and through some mistake Mr. Abert was not continued on the work.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why not strike out the words describing this "person" and insert his name?

Mr. SOWDEN. I have no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Ido not know that my colleague [Mr. Sowden] is correct in referring to this gentleman as the author of this publication. So far as I know, Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, was its

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is evident that the object of this resolution is to have a certain gentleman employed, and I am simply suggesting that he be named in the resolution instead of being indicated by certain descriptive words.

A MEMBER. That would relieve everybody.

Mr. STRUBLE. I think this matter had better be brought up at another time. There seems to be some little mystery about it. We can not understand what it is, I for one object to its consideration now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us have the regular order, Mr. SOWDEN. This is the regular order. There is no "mystery" at all connected with this proposition. This gentleman was in the employ of the Government, and had charge of the preparation of this personal index until the resolution was adopted increasing the force with the view of facilitating the publication and preparation of the

Mr. STRUBLE. I think it is very mysterious that the person intended to be employed is not named in the resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is contemplated by this resolution to create a permanent office? How long is this thing to continue?

Mr. RANDALL. I will state this plan of indexing the Journals of Congress was originally introduced here by the Hon. Alexander H. Stephens. If I remember aright it was in 1882.

The gentleman who was appointed to do this work was General Ordway. Under General Ordway the work progressed so slowly that after seven years and more of labor in this connection we were advised it would take sixteen years more before it would be completed with the force General Ordway then had. Some of us thought we would like to see it finished.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, before we die. [Laughter.]
Mr. RANDALL. But we had no security under the then condition of affairs as to when it would be finished. We increased the force so the work would be accomplished in four years.

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the increase of force?
Mr. RANDALL. Four times as many.
Mr. HOLMAN. This is another, in addition?
Mr. RANDALL. This Mr. Abert, of Maryland, was displaced; that is, he was not reappointed, because his office was practically done away with. He was employed by General Ordway at $2,000 a year. There were fixed certain salaries, some at $800, some at $1,000, and some at $1,200. This gentleman was legislated out of office. He received $2,000, but his reappointment was not provided for; and he now asks to come in as additional, and it will have the effect to that extent to hasten the finishing this index. The salary is to be $1,200.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why not put in the name of the person described in the resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. It will not in the end decrease the expense or increase it, but in the natural course of things will hasten the day when the work will be done.

Mr. TAULBEE. Isthisgoing to come out of my time? [Laughter.] The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. SOWDEN] has the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is not the fact that at the last session of Congress, provision in the appropriation bills, the number of men engaged in this work was doubled?

Mr. RANDALL. The number was quadrupled.
Mr. McMILLIN. We had two two years ago, and now we have eight; and by this resolution it is proposed to make it nine.

Mr. RANDALL. It was proposed to take sixteen years to finish this work and we made provision that it should be finished in four years.

Mr. TAULBEE. The more you put on it the longer it will take.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOWDEN. How much time does the gentleman want? Mr. TAULBEE. I do not want more than fifteen or twent

I do not want more than fifteen or twenty min-

Mr. SOWDEN. I will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. You had better begin on that. [Laughter.]
Mr. TAULBEE. I will consume at least a portion of that five minutes in asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania if there is in this resolution any possibility of fixing in employment by the Government an officer beyond the control of the Committee on Rules, or anybody else, whether he performs any service or not for at least a period of four years more, or longer if this work shall take up more than four years?

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I know, General Ordway has the superintending of this work.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not see the person to be employed under this resolution shall be under General Ordway or anybody else.

Mr. SOWDEN. The appointment is under the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. It provides for an appointment, but there is not appointment. general law, and this resolution does not say who shall be appointed to this position.

I have on two or three occasions found this condition of things to exist, where persons have been employed under the Government at a fixed salary, and designated to other work at a higher fixed salary, and have neglected the work for which their compensation was fixed by law. That has been especially the case with some of the architects employed, and we have been called upon to make additional appropriations for the salaries of more offices than one.

I do not know that this would occur under the resolution as now presented, or as to this party, but I am opposed to the principle embodied in the resolution. I prefer to leave the power of appointment and removal for cause in the hands of some responsible party. I know of no better party than the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives, and if the resolution provided that the appointment of this party should be under the control of that committee and subject to removal for cause, I would not oppose it if the appointment was deemed necessary. But I think the resolution is estimated any excession and the second of the control of the control of the appointment was deemed necessary. essary. But I think the resolution is setting a dangerous precedent, and ought not to be adopted.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the previous question on the report and amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Pending that I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution was laid upon the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS. The SPEAKER pro tempore, The pending request is that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS]. Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.
Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the reading of a short report.
Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the regular order cuts off requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, I move that the House take a recess until

Mr. KILGORE. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order if gentlemen have reports to submit, but for no other purpose.

Mr. SOWDEN and others demanded the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The demand for the regular order was withdrawn to let me make a report. The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the demand for the regular order has been renewed by several other gentlemen.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. was called to order by Mr. McMillin, who directed the reading of the following communication:

Speaker's Room, House of Representatives, January 25, 1889.

Sir: Hon. Benton McMillin is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. John B. Clark, Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ask unanimous consent, pending that motion, that the same rule prevail as heretofore; that is, that the names of the members be called in alphabetical order, beginning where we last ended, so that as each member's name is called he have leave to call up one bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this can probably be arranged in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Generally it has been arranged before going into

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

Is there objection to the request just stated?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, before the motion of the gentleman is put,

I would like to make a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Michigan the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. The bill (H. R. 8406) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Cara Curtis on the pension-roll was sent Interior to place the name of Cara Curtis on the pension-roll was sent to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the report drawn and adopted. I understand my friend from Michigan, Judge Chipman, favorably reported this bill, but for some reason I do not find it on the Calendar. I know it was favorably considered. I wrote the report myself, and the committee adopted it and seemed to be content with it. I would ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be now put upon its passage.

Mr. CHEADLE. What is the rate of pension?
Mr. COX. The rate of pension of the mother of this young lady was $50 per month, but I propose to amend this bill by putting it at $30 per month. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this young lady is the daughter of General Samuel R. Curtis, who died just after the close of the late war from disease or wounds contracted in the service, I forget late war from disease or wounds contracted in the service, I forget which. He had been a general in the Mexican war and the late war, and afterwards was engaged as a civil engineer in Ohio and in St. Louis and on the Pacific railroads. He had been connected with Congress when the war broke out, but resigned to take part in the war and died poor. He served gallantly in two wars. His widow received a pension only a few years ago, and was left in destitute circumstances, while her daughter, the young lady in question, the beneficiary in this bill, is left to-day helpless and very poor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The widow received $50 per month?

Mr. COX. Yes; and all I ask in this case is $30 per month. It is rather a hard case that General Curtis, who had served with signal distinction and gallantry in two wars, with more distinction perhaps than any other man in the service, should, by the result of misfortunes.

any other man in the service, should, by the result of misfortunes, have left his family in that destitute condition.

Mr. CHEADLE. I do not object to the consideration of this bill, but simply want to emphasize the statement made over and over again that I think it unwise legislation to give to the child of one soldier of the Republic a greater pension than is given to the child of another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has some doubts about the consideration of this bill and will cause the order to be read which limits the consideration of bills to-night to those which have been reported from the Committees on Pensions and Invalid Pensions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, until further ordered, on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p.m., the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p.m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiclary removing political disabilities, shall be considered; and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions, and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is in some doubt as to whether this matter can be disposed of at this time, it not having been reported by one of the committees mentioned in the special order, but will submit the question to the House and let it determine. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. I move that the amendment be adopted making the pension $30 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. What did the mother receive?

Mr. KILGORE. What did the mother receive?
Mr. COX. The mother received $50, and I propose to cut the pension of the daughter down to $30.
Mr. KILGORE. Cut it down to $25.
Mr. COX. I do not think that would be enough to do honor to the record of her father. He was at Camargo, you know, at an early day.
Mr. KILGORE. I think $25 would be sufficient.
Mr. COX. I will make it $25, then.
Mr. DORSEY (to Mr. KILGORE). Saved the Government $5 a month!

Mr. COX. I ask leave to file the report, so that it can appear of record that this was a meritorious case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks leave that the report may be filed, and that it may hereafter be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Cara Curtis, daughter of Maj. Gen. Samuel R. Curtis, she to be paid at the same rate as was paid her mother, lately deceased, widow of Major-General Curtis, this to take effect from date of her mother's death, which shall be ascertained by the Commissioner of Pen-

Mr. STRUBLE. Does not that give arrears of pension?
Mr. COX. I do not know, but I will withdraw that portion, and will make it read, at the rate of $25, to take effect from the date of the passage of the bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. STRUBLE. Let the bill be reported as amended. The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Cara Curtis, daughter of Maj. Gen. Samuel R. Curtis, she to be paid a pension of $25 a month.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], that the House resolve itself in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole under the special order, and the Clerk will call the first name.

JOHN M'COOL.

Mr. DORSEY called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5807) granting a pension to John McCool.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of John McCool, late sergeant Company B, Second Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Morrill) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5807) granting a pension to John McCool, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case made application for a pension March 19, 1883, alleging wound of right thumb, received at Bird's Point, Mo., August 10, 1861. The records in the Adjutant-General's Office furnish no evidence of the wound, and he offers no evidence whatever in support of the claim. The record shows that he served faithfully for four years and two months, and evidence has been furnished your committee that the soldier is now blind, that he has a family dependent upon him for support, and is without the means adequate to care for them; they would therefore recommend that a service pension of $12 per month be granted him.

The passage of the bill is recommended with an amendment, adding, after volunteers, "and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ZO. S. COOK.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3249) for the relief of Zo. S. Cook. That gentleman is perfectly and entirely helpless. He can not move either hand or foot. I state upon my own responsibility as a member of Congress that it is so. I have visited him at his house and know it to be true.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension now paid, under certificate numbered 8308, to Zo. S. Cook, of Wilcox County, Alabama, a soldier in the war between the United States and Mexico, be, and is hereby, increased to the rate of $25 per month,

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3249) granting an increase of pension to Zo. S. Cook, have considered the same, and report it back to the House, recommending its passage.

The facts are shown in the Senate report, as follows:

[Report S. 2056, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The beneficiary under the bill is a Mexican war pensioner, under the act of January 29, 1887, certificate No. 8308. He came out of the war greatly debilitated, and for years, according to the testimony filed with the committee, he has been a helpless invalid, requiring the attendance of from one to three persons, and by reason of his disabilities, and not on account of careless or dissolute habits, his property has been dissipated, and he is left in old age a charge upon charity.

The committee do not think it necessary to present the mass of this testimony, but select, in justification of their favorable report, a letter from Senator Morgoan, to the statements in which all the evidence is corroborative. The letter follows:

"United States Senate, Washington, D. C., July 20, 1888.

"United States Senate, Washington, D. C., July 20, 1888.

"Sire: Please find some statements relative to a bill (S. 3249) to increase the pension of Zo. S. Cook, Wilcox County, Alabama, inclosed.

"In addition, I wish to make the following statement:

"I have known him personally and well for more than thirty years. His statement on any question is entitled to full credit. He was judge of probate for Witcox County for several terms, covering, I think, a period of sixteen years. Since his return from the Mexican war his health has never been good, though he has been an active, self-sustaining man until his health failed utterly. His means of support have disappeared, but he has been fragal, temperate, and industrious. For several years past he has been a helpless man with great suffering, without the means of support, and dependent entirely on his friends. He say's he has rheumatism. I supposed that it was paralysis attended with acute nervous excitement.

"He is a most estimable man, and all who know him would be glad to see his last days cheered by the benevolence of the country. I am telling what I know about Judge Cook and his condition, and my statement can be used in support of his petition, if the committee desire so to use it.

"Very respectfully,

"JNO. T. MORGAN."

Mr. STRUBLE. How much pension does this bill grant? The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five dollars per month. The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the House bill 4914, for the benefit of the same party, will be reported with the recommendation to lay it on the table.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does the House bill allow the same

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it does.

LYMAN D. GREEN.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6314) granting a pension to Lyman D. Green.
Mr. GALLINGER. I must demand the regular order in justice to the committee. I have been here four nights without my name being called.

REBECCA D. VEDDER.

Mr. FARQUHAR called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11737) granting a pension to Rebecca D. Vedder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca D. Vedder, step-mother of Edwin H. Vedder, late of Company A, Third Regiment New York Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 11737) granting a pension to Rebecca D. Vedder, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The proposed beneficiary is the step-mother of Edwin H. Vedder, who was killed on picket duty near New Berne, N.C., while serving as private of Company A, Third Regiment New York Volunteers. She was married to the father of the soldier when the latter was about four years of age, and had the care of him all through his tender years.

The soldier made his home with his father and step-mother until he enlisted, at the age of nineteen years, and aided much in their support. He died leaving neither wife nor child surviving him. The family was always in needy circumstances, depending upon their daily labor for support. The father of the soldier died May 9, 1885, leaving claimant at the age of sixty-five without means of subsistence or any person legally bound for her support.

Congress has always liberally responded to the call of this class of persons not provided for under the general law, and being satisfied from the evidence before us that the case is meritorious, your committee return the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYMAN D. GREEN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] withdraws objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVENPORT

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the objection.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection? The Chair hears

Mr. DAVENPORT. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6314) granting a pension to Lyman D. Green. The bill was read, as follows:

Be itenacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lyman D. Green, late of Company F, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the committee will be considered as agreed to.
Mr. MACDONALD. Let us hear the report.
The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6314) granting a pension to Lyman D. Green, have considered the same and submit the following report:

The claimant is at present receiving a pension of $24 per month for shell wound of left leg. He made application for increase, alleging "that the rating is disproportionately low, as it would be better off at the hip." At an examination made November 10, 1886, before the board of examiners at Bath, N. Y., the board gave the following conditions:

"The left leg is shortened 6 inches; walks on the toes by bending the right knee. A shell burst near him and he was struck in four places. The femur was fractured at juncture of upper and middle third. The lower end of upper fragment is protruding against skin in outer side. At this point is an adherent, ragged scar as large as the palm of the hand; just back is another adhering scar. About one-third of the distance below knee is another large, ragged, adherent scar 4 inches in length, and in inner side of dorsum of foot a fourth. The knee is anchylosed; the entire muscular structure of the leg much wasted. There are numerous scars where abscesses have opened, and while none are discharging now, the scar at the point of fracture exhibits a tendency to open. While he does use the limb in walking, an artificial one would be more useful, and he should be rated as for amputation above the knee."

Another examination by the same board, October 5, 1887, after describing the case, adds:

"There is total disability of left leg and should be rated at the legal rating."

case, adds:
"There is total disability of left leg, and should be rated at the legal rating provided for that disability."

In an affidavit made by Dr. O. W. Sutton he declares in relation to said case as follows:

"I have attended the said Lyman D. Green when he has been sick and suffering from the wound in his left hip, and do believe he would be better with the limb off, as the diseased bone is continually troubling him, and would be better able to get around if the limb was off above the knee; and he can never be any better, but is growing worse, in my opinion. From examination I have made I find quite a discharge from the diseased parts."

The claimant is rated as high by the Pension Bureau as he can be rated under existing laws. The committee believe, however, from an examination of the evidence and an inspection of photographs of the diseased leg, that the claimant would be in a better condition were his leg amputated at the hip-joint. We therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill increasing the pension of Lyman D. Green."

In line 4, strike out all after the word "to" and insert "increase the pension." Strike out all of line 5. In line 7, after the word "Volunteers," insert "and pay him a pension." In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five." When so amended we recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. MACDONALD (during the reading) said: I ask that the further

Mr. MACDONALD (during the reading) said: I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. KILGORE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas to insist upon the reading of the report.

The reading was resumed and concluded.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA J. WARREN.

Mr. FINLEY called up the bill (H. R. 9110) granting a pension to Martha J. Warren.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha J. Warren, widow of the late Col. D. Warren, of Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, and pay her at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

ment Kentucky Infantry, and pay her at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9110) granting a pension to Martha J. Warren, have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

Martha J. Warren is the widow of Col. D. Warren, who served in the United States Army from October 1, 1851, until March 11, 1865, three years and few months, Soldier was a sound, healthy man when he entered the service and continued so until some time in the year 1863, when, from hard marching and hard service, he contracted varicose veins of the left leg, which extended from the ankle-joint to the groin, of which he complained while in the service and of which he continued to complain to the time of his death, which occurred October 14, 1877, being, as is shown, unable to march and do hard duty while in the service, and of which he died, as is shown by the physician and other attendants, his neighbors and friends who attended soldier in his last sickness.

In the opinion of your committee this presents a great hardship. The soldier returned home unable to work for a living, having a wife and three children, and without any means of support other than manual labor. He continued to suffer and unable to labor, gradually growing worse until his death, which left a helpless wife and three minor children in poverty and destitution. The claimant gave birth to a posthumous child shortly after the death of her husband, and is now penniless and dependent upon the charity of her neighbors.

The soldier died while preparing to ask for a pension, but before any application was filed, and his explanation as to when, where, and under what circumstances he contracted or incurred the disease of which he died has been left to be obtained by claimaint, who seems to have had no regular attorney or other person to take an intelligent interest in the prepara

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the bill that I had intended to call up this evening is not printed, and as it is doubtful whether I shall have another opportunity during the present session, I ask unanimous consent that when my name is reached this evening it be passed over, so that I may not lose my place in the list, but may have leave to call up my bill at the next pension session.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

OTHO G. HENDRIX.

Mr. FULLER called up the bill (H. R. 10426) granting a pension to Otho G. Hendrix.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Otho G. Hendrix, late an artificer in Company A, United States Veteran Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10426) granting a pension to Otho G. Hendrix, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The proposed beneficiary served as artificer in Company A, First United States Veteran Volunteer Engineers, from October 30, 1864, to September 26, 1865, when mustered out with the command. He alleges that shortly before discharge, while on detached service at a Government saw-mill at Nashville, Tenn., he received an injury in right side of abdomen by the slipping of a canthook while turning a stick of timber, which said injury has resulted in fistula in ano. The claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that claimant is unable to furnish the testimony of an officer or comrades to establish the origin of the disability in service and line of duty.

It appears from the sworn statements of the claimant that the only person known to him present at the time of the injury was Sergt. Henry Peeper of the company, now deceased. He was treated for the injury immediately after its incurrence by a civil physician, and subsequently admitted to the hospital, from which he was conveyed, after a few days' treatment, to his command to be mustered out.

be mustered out.

The report of the Adjutant-General shows that claimant was sent to hospital six days previous to his muster out, but no further information touching the case can be obtained from the records of the War Department.

Jacob Uptegraft, late private of Company M, Fourth Iowa Cavalry, who has been acquainted with the claimant since 1856, testifies that while on duty at Nashville, Tenn., some time during the month of September, he found the latter suffering from an injury said to have been received while at work at a saw-claimant since the war and lived near neighbor to him for twelve years, and knows that he is still suffering from the effects of the injury received in the service.

The physicians who treated claimant immediately upon his arrival home and for years subsequent thereto are dead. But there is abundant lay testimony establishing beyond a doubt the continuous disability from alleged cause ever since discharge, while medical examinations show the existence of a disability in a pensionable degree.

The fact that the soldier was absent from his company while injured under the circumstances heretofore stated as well as the further fact that but a few days intervened between the incurrence of the disability and the dispandment of the command, in the opinion of your committee afford ample and satisfactory explanation of the absence of that positive proof required under the rules of the Department. The showing made, however, is deemed sufficiently strong to warrant favorable action by Congress, and the bill is therefore returned, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELVIRA PARISH.

Mr. FUNSTON. I call up the bill (H. R. 8482) granting a pension to Mrs. Elvira Parish.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Elvira Parish, mother of Cyrus O. Parish, late of Company H, Second United States Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Morrill.) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8482) granting a pension to Mrs. Elvira Parish, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Elvira Parish is the mother of Cyrus O. Parish, who served in Companies H and E. Second Regiment United States Cavalry, from November 1, 1861, to June 29, 1855, when discharged for disability by reason of injury to spine incurred in line of duty near Mitchell's Station, Vâ., in February, 1884. He died at St. Louis, Mo., August 28, 1868, as alleged, from the effect of said injury.

The claim of the mother is not susceptible of proof, because the necessary proof as to the immediate cause of death can not be furnished, as the board of health records of that city afford no information and the attending physician can not be found. Mrs. Parish has furnished, however, a newspaper clipping of that date, announcing the death of the soldier after a protracted illness of three years and a half from the effects of a fall from his horse while bearing dispatches to his commanding officer. The soldier was a pensioner at the time of his death at the rate of $20 per month, because of his inability to perform any manual labor. This pension was granted in pursuance of the certificate of the post surgeon at Fort Laramie, under date of September 16, 1866, as follows:

"I find the said C. O. Parish dangerously ill with general debility, his lower limbs completely paralyzed; a curvature of the spine caused by his old injury (without doubt), by the subsequent necrosis and absorption of the upper dorsal vertebra, and also with an issue near the lumbar vertebra coming from the diseased dorsal portion. He is still paralyzed in the legs and no change in the deformity, which will probably last for lifetime."

From this description of the disability there can be but little, if any, doubt remain as to the immediate cause of the soldier's death, following shortly upon this medical examinat

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. BEDEL.

Mr. GALLINGER called up the bill (H. R. 10691) to increase the pension of Mary A. Bedel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, anthorized and directed to increase the pension of Mary A. Bedel, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John Bedel, from thirty to fifty dollars per month.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The claimant in this case is the widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. John Bedel, of New Hampshire, one of the bravest soldiers of the country, having served with distinction in both the Mexican war and the war of the rebellion.

General Bedel was a son of General Moody Bedel, a private in the Revolution ary war, and an officer in the United States Infantry in the war of 1812, and who, as lieutenant-colonel, led the sortic against the British at Fort Erie, in 1814. General John Bedel was well educated, and was a leading member of the New Hampshire bar. He enlisted as a private in Company H, Ninth United States Infantry, in the Mexican war, and rose to the rank of lieutenant, being discharged at Vera Cruz, August 8, 1817, for disability, but was subsequently reappointed, and discharged in August, 1848. Returning to New Hampshire, he practiced law for a time, and then accepted a responsible position in the Third Auditor's Office at Washington, from which he was transferred to the First Comptroller's Office, where, it is said, he superintended the revision and adjustment of all judiciary accounts arising from expenses of the United States courts. General Bedel was appointed major of the Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry August 6, 1864, and brevetted brigadier-general on the 18th day of March, 1865, being mustered out July 20, 1865. He died of disease contracted in the service February 25, 1875. General Bedel was wounded in the first attack on Fort Wagner, July 10, 1863, and in the second attack, July 18, 1863, was taken prisoner, and confined in the State penitentiary of South Carolina till December 9, 1864, five months of which time he was in solitary confinement, and which confinement seriously impaired his health.

At the close of the war General Bedel returned to New Hampshire, where he was twice elected to the State Legislature, and on two occasions was the Democratic candidate for governor of the State. General Bedel's widow, the claimant, is a daughter

JAMES PATTERSON.

Mr. GEAR called up the bill (S. 2623) granting an increase of pension to James Patterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to James Patterson, late a private in Company E, Third Missouri State Militia Cavalry, a pension at the rate of $25 a month, in lieu of that which he now receives, to take effect from and after the passage of

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (5, 2623) granting an increase of pension to James Patterson, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth fully and clearly the facts in this case and is herewith adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 2253, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

mended.

[Senate Report No. 2253, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The applicant for increase of pension under the bill was private of Company E. Third Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and was pensioned on the ground of injury to right leg, which was granted under an application which alleged, in addition, catarrh in the head. Application for additional pension on the latter ground was rejected.

An examination of the record shows that the testimony of different witnesses to claimant's disability on account of injury to leg sustains also the alleged disability in respect of catarrh in the head. An instance of this is shown in an affidavit made the 22d October, 1886, by two comrades, Enoch Darrell and James B. Nelson, the substance of which follows:

"Some time in the month of February, 1863, when we were stationed at Pilot Knob, Mo., we were sent out on a soout, and while on said scout the claimant, James Patterson, was taken sick with ague and fever, and on his return from the scout he went into the hospital (regimental) at Ironton, near Pilot Knob, and remained there some six or seven weeks before he reported to the command for duty; and afterwards, some time in April, 1863, in the engagement at Stony Battery, near Patterson, Mo., the claimant had his horse killed, and in the fall of his horse he was badly crippled and had to lie out all night, being exposed in wading creeks, etc., and finally reached the command in bad condition, being crippled up and unable to do duty. The claimant was oftentimes complains with his head, suffering with catarrh of the head; and he continued to suffer with catarrh and other infirmities until he was discharged."

Dr. Joseph Lattimer was called on to treat claimant about six months after his discharge for catarrh of the head and general debility. He states in an affidavit that—

"It was to all appearance caused by exposure while in the service. Continued

"It was to all appearance caused by exposure while in the service. Continued to treat claimant at intervals to about May, 1871. About that time claimant moved to Kansas in hope of regaining his health. Part of the time he treated claimant he was unable to do any manual labor, and the other part he was able to do half labor."

or W. S. Wortman, in an affidavit, says that he treated claimant for catarrh of the head and nervous disease on or about June 15, 1867, and continued such treatment until the close of the year, when finding he could not effect a cure, advised him to a change of climate.

Dr. H. W. Miller, in an affidavit filed September 8, 1881, says in substance

Dr. H. W. Miller, in an amdavit med September e, how, says in translated that—"He has been personally acquainted with claimant at least eight years, and has, at different times during that period, treated him for catarrh and general debility—disabilities of a chronic nature."

Dr. L. B. Paul testifies that in September, 1881, he examined claimant and found him suffering from the injury to leg for which he is pensioned, and also from chronic catarrh of the head, which has so injured his health that he is partially incapacitated from performing manual labor.

Five medical examinations, made at intervals from 1882 to 1887, by examining surgeons and boards under orders from the Pension Bureau, beginning with a quarter, close with a total rating for catarrh.

The Army record shows that claimant was confined in hospital, as stated in his applications; but this record fails to show the diseases for which he was under treatment. So far as it goes it is confirmatory of the claimant's statement; while the fact, as shown by the abstract of medical testimony herein given, that within six months after his discharge he was under medical treatment for catarrh, which treatment was continued for six years, showing it had already become chronic, and that the intervening space from that to the present is substantially covered by corroborative medical testimony, lay and official, forces the conclusion upon the committee that the disease which has been so obstinate and continuous was contracted in the service, and that the claimant is entitled to the relief sought in the bill under consideration. This, therefore, is hereby favorably reported, with a recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM L. WILSON.

Mr. GEST called up the bill (H. R. 10976) granting a pension to William L. Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of William L. Wilson, who was a private in Capt. Moses G. Wilson's company of mounted volunteers in Colonel Thompson's regiment in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10976) granting a pension to William L. Wilson, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The departmental records show that the claimant was a soldier in the Black Hawk war of 1832, serving in Capt. Samuel Hollinsworth's company in Colonel Thompson's regiment of Illinois volunteers, and was honorably discharged therefrom.

He is now in the seventy-ninth year of his age, is disabled for performing any nanual labor, and is supported by his daughter, who makes their living at the

He is now in the seven, and is supported by his daughter, who makes their living as enwash-tub.

This old soldier will be a beneficiary under the bill to pension the survivors of the Indian wars prior to 1842, reported favorably by this committee to the House (H. R. 8594). Your committee are of the opinion that this is a very deserving case, and that the service pension should be granted as proposed by the bill. They therefore report the bill back and recommend its passage, amended, however, by striking out the words "Moses G. Wilson's," in lines 5 and 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Moses G. Wilson's," in lines 5 and 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Moses G. Wilson's," in lines 5 and 6, and inserting, after the word "regiment," line 7, the words "Illinois volunteers."

M. CEST I move to amend the bill by striking out "twelve" and inserting "twenty;" so as to make the pension $20 per month. I introduced the bill at $12, understanding at the time that that was the highest rate, but now I know that it is not.

Mr. FARQUHAR. What is the nature of the case?

Mr. GEST. It is an old Black Hawk war case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH J. FOY.

Mr. GROUT called up the bill (S. 2829) granting a pension to Sarah J. Foy.
The bill was read, as follows:

Beit enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $25 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah J. Foy, late a nurse in the Second Vermont Regiment Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8. 2829) granting a pension to Sarah J. Foy, beg leave to report:

The committee have considered this case and adopt the report of the Senate herein as their report, and in view of the facts of the case recommend that this

[Senate Report No. 1149, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah J. Foy, praying Congress to grant her a pension for services as a nurse, have carefully examined the evidence contained in the papers submitted to them, and beg leave to report:

The petitioner in this case accompanied the Second Vermont Regiment Volunteers to the front in June, 1861, for the purpose of nursing the sick and wounded of that regiment. It appears from the evidence that one of the inducements that led her to enlist her energies during the most of the first two years of the war was the fact that her husband was a member of that regiment; and is further appears from the evidence that when she accompanied said regiment to the field she was a hale and hearty woman, but from the date of her return, by reason of the exposure to which she was submitted, her health has been seriously affected, and she is now in a very debilitated condition and in destitute circumstances.

Dr. B. W. Carpenter, Second Vermont Regiment, says:

"While she was with the Army she acted as hospital matron—that is to say, she did cooking and washing for the sick and wounded, and in cooking and washing for them and nursed them as bestshe could. I know that she did good and faithful service in caring for the sick and wounded, and in cooking and washing for them. I think her health was impaired while she was rendering this service in the Army."

General Geograp I Stanuard was selficant that he was lightenant-gologiel of Army."

General George J. Stannard makes affidavit that he was lieutenant-colonel of the Second Vermont Regiment at the time the petitioner was connected with it, and that he became well acquainted with her. He says:

"She was with our regiment in camp and in the field as long as I remained with said regiment. While she remained she was connected with the surgeon's department and was at work in the hospital. I understand that she performed the work of a nurse while there."

Lieut, Col. Charles H. Joyce makes affidavit:

"I also know that she did duty to the soldiers, in the hospital and out, taking care of the sick and wounded as carefully and tenderly as a mother would take care of her children. I know, also, that she did washing for the sick and wounded, and in every way administered to their wants and necessities, by night and by day, to the utmost of her power. I know that she was doing duty as hospital nurse. My attention was often called to Mrs. Foy while she was with us in the field, to her self-sacrificing labors and bravery under fire. I remember particularly her behavior at Gollen's Farm, White Oak Swamp, and Savage Station, where she was for hours under fire and refused to leave us as long as she could be of any service to the sick and wounded."

A. S. Tracy, colonel of the said regiment, also testifies to the faithful and efficient services rendered by the petitioner, as nurse and hospital matron, for the space of fifteen months, and to the hardships and peril that she passed through during that period of her service. The same testimony in favor of the petitioner is given by Lieut. A. H. Weed, of the same regiment.

The committee is of opinion that, under the evidence filed by the petitioner, she is entitled to relief at the hands of Congress, and that the prayer of the petitioner should be granted.

mendation that it do pass.

The committee therefore accompany this report with a bill placing the name of Sarah J. Foy on the pension-roll. The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recom-

ELLEN EDWARDS.

Mr. GUENTHER called up the bill (H. R. 6893) granting a pension to Ellen Edwards.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Edwards, widow of Robert Edwards, late a private in Company D, Eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6893) granting a pension to Ellen Edwards, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of Robert Edwards, who served as private in Company D, Eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, from January 5, 1864, to September 5, 1865, and died February 21, 1865. Her claim for pension has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that, in the opinion of the medical referee, the death cause is not shown to be chargeable to the soldier's military service. Soldier was a pensioner on account of rheumatism and piles.

Drs. N. M. Dodson and J. S. Walbridge testify that they attended the soldier in his last illness. He suffered from rheumatism and disease of liver and lungs, which a post-mortem examination determined to have been of a tubercular character. The liver was greatly enlarged and filled with masses of tubercular matter in a softening condition, the lungs being also involved in the tubercular disease. As he had suffered from disease of lungs as well as the liver, and from rheumatism, affiants have no doubt that his death was the result of the disease contracted in the service.

The records of the War Department show two or three months' treatment for diarrhea. Rheumatism is established by the testimony of officers and others. Continuous and serious disability from rheumatism and piles from discharge to death has been clearly established in the invalid claim by medical and lay testimony.

Dr. Dodson, heretofore referred to, was an examining surgeon of the Pension death has been clearly established in the invalid claim by medical and lay testimony.

Dr. Dodson, heretofore referred to, was an examining surgeon of the Pension Bureau, and in response to an inquiry addressed to him by that bureau, under date of January 17, 1887, says:

"I commenced treating him soon after his return from the Army for rheumatism and piles. He was a feeble, broken-down man. Prior to his last illness he was generally suffering from sciatica and articular rheumatism of knees and ankles. Fe had also a chronic cough for which I sometimes prescribed. His last illness, term nating in death about the 21st of February, 1885, was accompanied with sometpsculiar and unexplainable symptoms, to determine the nature of which a post-mortem examination was had, showing extensive tubercular deposits in every part of the liver, with some tubercle of lung. That this was not quite appreciated during his life, and that more stress was laid upon the rheumatic element is true. Nevertheless, I am fully of opinion that the broken health and subsequent development of this disease was the result of exposure during army life."

Your committee are of opinion that the conclusions reached by the family physician who treated soldier from discharge to death are entitled to consideration in determining the widow's right to pension, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recom-

ELIZABETH B. SMITH.

Mr. HALL called up the bill (S. 2910) to increase the pension now paid to Elizabeth B. Smith, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith, United States Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension now paid to Elizabeth B. Smith, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith, late United States Volunteers, to $75 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report by (Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2910) to increase the pension of Elizabeth B. Smith, report:
That they concur in the Senate report, which is hereto annexed, and adopt the same as their own, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"General Thomas Kilby Smith entered the United States military service October 31, 1861, as colonel of the Fifty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, was promoted brigadier-general of volunteers August 11, 1863, and brevetted major-general of volunteers March 13, 1865.

"His military service was of the most brilliant character. As an evidence of the high esteem in which he was held for his personal worth and his military achievements by those who were best qualified to judge, it is a noteworthy fact that both Generals Sherman and Grant repeatedly recommended his promotion as a brigadier-general before it was finally accorded to him by President Lincoln in August, 1863. In February, 1863, General Sherman wrote of him:

"'His record is perfect, his habits excellent, his endurance wonderful, his bravery a little rash, his judgment good, and all he wants is a hard study of books and men; I mean of course military text-books and the men who compose large armies.'

books and men; I mean of course military text-books and the men who compose large armies."

"In March, 1883, General Grant said of him:

"His advancement has been won upon the field of battle and in camp in disciplining his men."

"General Smith was granted a pension of $30 in 1880 for disabilities contracted during his service in the war. He died December 14, 1887, in the sixty-eighth year of his age, as the result of exhaustion following an attack of gastritis, complicated by chronic diarrhea. He suffered from the latter from the time of its inception during the war until his death, being thereby incapacitated for earning a livelihood for himself and family.

"The claimant is now receiving a pension of $30 per month, being the same amount received by General Smith during his life. The present bill increases this to $75 per month. In view of the distinguished military services of claimant's husband; in view of the fact that her income is almost wholly derived from her pension and from allowances from four of her adult children; and in view of the further fact that she is compelled to support and maintain four children and one grandchild, your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that a bill making such an increase as that ought to pass under the present circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. KILGORE. I understand from the reading of that report that this applicant is now receiving a pension of $30 a month, and that the proposition is to jump from $30 to $75 a month; which is a pretty big leap.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?
Mr. KILGORE. I would like to enter into some sort of compromise with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALL], and if he will make the amount $50, or somewhere along there, I will not object; but I do not think this is right.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill ought to go over to a full House.

Mr. KILGORE. I think it ought to be amended and the amount cut down a little, and that then it should go over to a full House; but if the gentleman will agree to cut down the amount to $50 or $60 a month I am willing that the bill shall be reported to the House.

Mr. CHEADLE. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that the previous question may be considered as ordered, and that the bill may go over to a full House for consideration at any time the gentleman may see proper to call it up.

Mr. HALL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorial on this subject from the Loyal Legion of the United States. Mr. KILGORE. I do not know whether I am willing to assent to the proposition as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEA-

LE]. I would be willing—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALL]

Mr. KILGORE. Before that matter is determined, I think we ought to agree on some disposition of this bill. [A pause.] Well, I will make a motion to amend by inserting $50; and I am willing that the bill go over with the previous question operating upon the bill and this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill, with the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, and that it go over till-when?

A MEMBER. To-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

A MEMBER. Next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. Till next Friday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Hall] to print in the RECORD the paper indicated by him? The Chair hears no objection.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

Elected September 19, 1866. Class 1. Insignia 376.

Junior vice-commander of the commandery 1873-1877.

Born at Boston, Mass., September 23, 1820.

Died at New York City December 14, 1887.

No fairer illustration could be found of the volunteer citizen-soldier at his best, as developed in the experiences of our civil war, than is furnished in the character and record of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith. Born of a patriotic Puritan ancestry in the city of Boston, he was, by the removal of his parents while he was yet a child, brought up under the stimulating and broadening influences of that newer New England life in the earlier West, which has shown its potency in the men it has supplied as our nation's leaders and defenders.

In addition to other advantages in his education, he received the basal lessons defenders.

In addition to other advantages in his education, he received the basal lessons of a military training in a preparatory school conducted by General Ormsby M. Mitchel; and again, after his graduation from Woodward College, he was a favored and a favorite law student of Hon. Salmon P. Chase. Honored with special appointments by the national administration and by the courts of his adopted State, he was at the outbreak of the civil war not in full political accord with the administration in power; but his absorbing patriotism and his profound loyalty to the fundamental principles of our nationality overbore all minor considerations, and he promptly proffered his services to the Government for any position in which he could be made available for its support; and he was assigned by Governor Dennison, of Ohio, to the command of a regiment of infantry.

he was assigned by Governor Dennison, of Unio, to the command of a regiment of infantry.

Reporting in February, 1862, to General William T. Sherman, at Paducah, Ky, he was at once under the best conceivable conditions for efficient training in his new profession, and for the intelligent recognition of his services by his superiors. During the important battle of Shiloh he was suddenly called to the command of his brigade by the wounding of its commander, and in that position he bore himself with conspicuous gallantry. General Sherman says of him in this emergency, "He was at that time very young very handsome, and unusually well posted in his profession." Referring to his return with his brigade under a heavy fire from the enemy, General Sherman adds, "As General Smith rode at the head of his men I thought I never saw more bandsome conduct un-rode at the head of his men I thought I never saw more natusome conduct under fire."

Steadily gaining in the knowledge of his profession and in the confidence of his superiors, he was much in severe service after this vigorous beginning at Shiloh. He was in the siege of Corinth, and he bore an active part in Sherman's co-operative movements at Vicksburg, having command of a brigade in the battle at Chickasaw Bayou, and participating in engagements at Arkansas Post, Rolling Fork, Haines's Bluff, Baker's Creek, Rig Black River, and in two direct assaults on Vicksburg before settling down to the siege of that strong-

MICHAEL SHONG.

I ask the consideration of the bill (S. 2514) grant-Mr. HAUGEN. ing a pension to Michael Shong.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Shong, late of Company I, Fourteenth New York Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

From careful examination of the facts stated in the Senate report in this case, which is made a part hereof, the committee are of the opinion that this is a meritorious case, and thus report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do

The claimant, Michael Shong, was a member of Company I, Fourteenth New York Volunteer Infantry. He alleges fever sores, resulting in amputation of right leg.

In support of the claim, Nicholas Metz, of Lincoln, Wis., testifies that he knew claimant from the time he was eight years old until he was enlisted and discharged, and to date of affidavit, November, 1881; that he was sound prior to enlistment; that immediately after discharge he complained of trouble with his right leg, and so continued until it was amputated, in February, 1865. In 1864 his leg broke and discharged; that he was treated by Dr. Schwartzmann.

August Schodscheuska, a comrade, testifies to his having fever sores in the Army; to his continuous marching and participation in the seven days' battle before Richmond. Other comrades testify to the same facts.

Dr. Schwartzmann testifies that he was intimately acquainted with claimant for over twenty years; he was called to see him immediately after his discharge; found him with a fever sore and bad swelling on his right leg below the knee; attended him some time; disease was incurable; amputation necessary to save life; is satisfied that he lost his leg by disease contracted in the service of the United States.

Dr. Bronson testifies to attending the claimant; found him suffering from embolism (obstruction of a vein or artery by a clot of coagulated blood), result of cold contracted by exposure about February 19; found it necessary to have his right leg amputated.

Dr. Spencer, who amputated the leg, testifies simply to that fact, and to the necessity for it, which was gangrene of the right foot and leg. The ground of rejection is that the gangrene was caused by his attending a dance, getting heated and cooling off suddenly; and it is furnished in a letter from Dr. Bronson, who says he attended a dance January 1, 1855, became overheated, was taken with a pain in the side; unstard was applied and relief obtained; next day nearly well, but soon after leg became painful and useless; that the chill cl

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY VON OLNHAUSEN.

Mr. HAYDEN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10951) granting a pension to Mary Von Olnhausen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Von Olnhausen, of Lexington, Mass., late a nurse in the Mansion House Hospital at Alexandria, Va., and at other hospitals, during the late war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The proposed beneficiary served for about three years as a nurse in the hospitals during the late war. The value of her services is fully set forth in the testimonials of surgeons, under whose instructions she served, as well as of soldiers whom she tenderly cared for while lying suffering from wounds and disease. Her education and linguistic knowledge enabled her to render especially valuable services. At the breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war she left her home, and under the indorsement of the president of the American branch of the international association for relief of misery of battle-fields tendered her services to the German Government. They were accepted, and at the close of that war the German Emperor conferred upon her the "Iron Cross" and the "Order of Merit." For her efficient and humane services during the war of the rebellion at the hospitals of Alexandria, Morehead City, Beaufort, and Smithville, N. C., the governor of Massachusetts presented her with a letter of thanks.

Mrs. Von Olnhausen is over sevently years of age, a widow, and without means of support. This is shown by the statement of Hon. E. D. Hayden, who has known her for many years.

Your committee are of opinion that the claim of this petitioner to the bounty of the Government is equally as meritorious as those of many others of her class who are now upon the pension-roll, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the words "twenty-five," in line 8, and inserting therein instead the word "twelve."

The amendment recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report was read and agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELISHA KENNEDY.

Mr. DOCKERY (when Mr. HEARD'S name was called). league [Mr. Heard], as members know, came to the House to-night, but went home sick. I think under the circumstances there will be no objection to my calling up the bill which he would have called up if present, the bill (H. R. 3794) granting a pension to Elisha Kennedy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elisha Kennedy, in Capt. James H. Morgan's company of Iowa Mounted Volunteers in the war with Mexico.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

Elias J. Kenaday was a member of Capt. James H. Morgan's company of mounted Mexican war volunteers from January 1, 1848, to September 11, 1848, a period of nine months. He remained during his term of service at Fort Atkinson, Iowa, and was not allowed travel pay at discharge. He is now 69 years

The Mexican act of January 29, 887, gives this man no relief, he not having been in Mexico, on the coast or frontier thereof, or en route during the war with that nation, and his claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on that ground. The company was enlisted for the war, were retained at Fort Atkinson during the war by direction of the War Department, and were paid from the appropriation for the expenses of the war. About half of the company, who resided at a distance from Fort Atkinson, were allowed travel pay at discharge, and that portion of the company are held by the Pension Bureau to have title to pension under the said act of January 29, 1887.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant, by reason of his nearness of residence to the fort, ought not to be deprived of his pension. He exhibited his patriotism by his enlistment and service.

The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the name "Elisha Kennedy" wherever it appears in said bill, and insert in its place the name "Elisha J. Kennady."

The amendment recommended by the committee in the concluding

The amendment recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report was read and agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to amend by adding at the end of the bill these words, "and pay him a pension of $8 per month."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN J. BROWN.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 10977) granting a pension to John J. Brown. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to piace upon the pension-roll the name of John J. Brown, who was a private in Capt. Peter Vance's company of Colonel Fry's regiment of Mounted Riflemen in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10977) grant-ag a pension to John J. Brown, have given the same consideration, and report

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10977) granting a pension to John J. Brown, have given the same consideration, and report as follows:

The claimant served in Capt. Thomas Clark's company of Iilinois Volunteers in the Indian disturbance of 1827, and again served as a corporal in Capt. Peter C. Vance's company, Illinois Volunteers, the regiment being commanded by Colonel Leib, upon the breaking out of the Black Hawk war. He was honorably discharged from both services. He was granted a bounty-hand warrant for his services.

He is now eighty-four years of age and in impaired health, unable to labor. In the opinion of your committee the applicant should have a service pension, and the bill is therefore reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "Fry's," in line 6, and inserting the word "Leib's," and also by inserting before the word "mounted," in the same line, the word "Illinois."

The amendments recommended by the committee in the concluding

The amendments recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report were read and agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this veteran, as apears in the report, served in two wars-in the Indian disturbance of 1827 and in the Black Hawk war of 1832. He is now eighty-four years of age. His health is impaired, and he is unable to work. I move to amend the bill by striking out "12" in the last line and inserting "20," so as to give him a pension of $20 per month, which, I believe, is the rate of pension now uniformly granted to soldiers of his age.

The amendment of Mr. Henderson, of Illinois, was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES WATERS.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11714) to provide increase of pension to James Waters, formerly of Captain Weatherbye's company of Pennsylvania Militia, war of 1812.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James Waters, formerly a member of Captain Weatherbye's company of Pennsylvania Militia, and who was in the military service in the war of 1812, to $40 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as 10110Ws:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11714) granting an increase of pension to James Waters, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant had served in Capt. Jacob Campbell's company, Pennsylvania Militia, war of 1812. The commanding officer of claimant's company at one time also appears to have been Captain Weatherbye. He was granted a pension under the general law at $8 per month, and his pension was increased by special act in 1885 to $25 a month, he having been of great age and severely disabled by diseases, being also partially blind. Since that time he has become totally blind, and petitions for further increase of pension to afford him a competent living.

He is a resident of Oregon, and concerning his case Mr. Hermann, of that State, certifies as follows:

"House of Representatives United States.

"House of Representatives United States, "Washington, D. C., December 20, 1888.

"I desire to say that I know Colonel Waters, and have known him for twenty-five years. He is a resident of my home county, and I know he is blind and must be led around by an assistant, and can neither dress, undress, nor feed himself. I obtained an increase from $8 to $25 for him in the Forty-ninth Congress; but then he was not blind, although he was on the charity of neighbors; now he is blind and over ninety-two years of age, and has not a dollar of property except what he gets as pension, and has no relatives upon whom to depend for comfort. He was a colonel of a regiment of pioneers in our Oregon Indian wars; and is a sober, honest old man, and beloved by all who know him.

"BINGER HERMANN," Member of Congress."

There has been filed with your committee also the testimony of United States Examining Surgeon Thomas Graham, of Roseburgh, Oregon, and of ex-District Judge La Fayette Mosher, and of ex-Member of Congress La Fayette Lane, all of which establishes the absolute helplessness of the claimant.

The passage of the bill is recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. M. S. JEWELL.

Mr. HIRES. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 11091) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. M. S. Jewell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. M. S. Jewell, widow of Marcus Jewell, a soldier in the war of 1812, and subsequently an officer in the regular Army, from $12 per month to $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11091) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary L. Jewell, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant's husband served as a soldier in the war of 1812 in Capt. Asa Eames's company of the Tenth Regiment New York Militia. He was subsequently an officer in the New York Militia. His widow, the claimant, is a pensioner under the general laws at the rate of $12 per month. She applies for increase to $25 per month.

The papers in the case show that she is now in her seventy-seventh year, that she is in poor financial circumstances, and that her pension does not afford her a competent support.

Your committee are of the opinion that relief should be granted in this case, and therefore report the bill, recommending its passage. Amend, however, by making the name of the claimant wherever it appears in the bill to read "Mrs. Mary L. Jewell," and strike out the words "and subsequently an officer in the regular Army," in lines 6 and 7 of the bill.

The amendments recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report were read and agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRVING W. COMBS.

Mr. HOLMES. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12014) granting a pension to Irving W. Combs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Irving W. Combs, late of Company K, Seventy-fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, a resident of Des Moines, Iowa, and pay to his legally-constituted guardian a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12014) granting a pension to Irving W. Combs, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Irving W. Combs served as private in Company K, Seventy-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, from July 8, 1863, to August 29, 1865. It is alleged that about July 4, 1864, while on duty at Folly Island, South Carolina, he suffered from sunstroke, in consequence whereof his mind became affected, which affection continued until it developed into insanity about 1877.

The Pension Bureau admits that soldier suffered from sunstroke at the time and place alleged, but holds that the immediate cause of his insanity is due to intemperate habits.

The case has been thoroughly specially examined, and while it is shown that soldier, prior to the time of his actual insanity, did occasionally indulge in the use of strong drinks, it is also clearly shown that his mind was affected from date of discharge and prior to the time when he appears to have used liquor to excess.

use of strong drinks, it is also clearly snown that his mind was alrected from date of discharge and prior to the time when he appears to have used liquor to excess.

Dr. J. A. Knox testifies that he first commenced treating the soldier in May, 1866. Was then suffering from congestion of the brain and general nervous debility. Treatment was rendered at intervals until September, 1870. The lillness was not due to dissipation. Affiant understood at the time that soldier suffered from sunstroke in the Army. Is of the opinion that soldier used no stimulants whatever during that time.

Dr. J. F. Kennedy treated claimant from 1872 until admitted to the insane asylum in 1877 for nervous prostration and insomnia. Soldier was weak and vacillating mentally, lacking in energy, and was absent-minded. Heard that soldier received an injury while in service. Was a member of the Christian Church, and temperate. It is affiant's opinion that his use of strong drinks is directly attributable to the Army injury.

All the testimony goes to show that soldier prior to being drafted was a hardworking man, sober, and a good provider for his family, in fact drank no liquor of any kind. Upon his return from service he was absent-minded, irresolute, changeable of purpose, and made but little effort to support his family. He constantly complained of dizziness and pain in head, and became more and more irritable. Soldier and his family received their principal support since his discharge through the efforts of the wife.

Dr. Kennedy, who treated soldier from 1872 to 1877, as hereto stated, and was a member of same church which soldier attended after discharge, when cross-examined by the special examiner gives it as his professional opinion that the soldier's habit of drinking, which he acquired about 1875, was rather the result of a disordered mind than the cause thereof.

The board of examining surgeons at Des Moines, Iowa, under date of January 4, 1888, attribute the insanity to sunstroke, and state the soldier's attendant gives history o

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN H. STARR.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I call up the bill (H. R. 10975) granting a pension to John H. Starr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of John H. Starr, who was a private in Capt. William C. Rull's company of Mounted Volunteers in Colonel Thompson's regiment, in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10975) ranting a pension to John H. Starr, have considered the same, and report as

The committee on reasons, to have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Capt. William C. Rall's company of Illinois Volunteers, Colonel Thompson's regiment, in the Black Hawk war of 1832, and was honorably discharged therefrom, as shown by the records of that service. He is now seventy-eight years of age, with no property of any kind, and not able to perform full labor. He has an aged wife depending on him, and applies to Congress to assist him in his old age.

Your committee are of opinion that a service pension should be issued to him, and therefore report back the bill to the House, recommending its passage, amended, however, by changing the word "Rull's," in line 6, to "Rall's," and in the same line inserting the word "Illinois" before the word "mounted."

The amendments recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report were read and agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to amend this bill by striking out in the last line the word "twelve" and inserting "twenty," so as to make this pension $20 a month. The bill will thus conform to the action which we have taken in similar cases.

The amendment of Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET M. NUGENT.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11736) granting a pension to Margaret M. Nugent.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret M. Nugent, fostermother of Patrick J. Hayes, late of Company G, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by MI. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. II736) granting a pension to Margaret M. Nugent, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

The proposed beneficiary asks a pension on account of the death of Patrick J. Hayes, who was killed in battle at Monocacy July 9, 1864, while serving as a private in Company G, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteers. It appears that the soldier was the son of claimant's sister, who died when he was about four years of age. Claimant was given the care and custody of the child, and provided for him as a mother. Upon her removal from Ireland to the United States, in 1850, she placed the boy temporarily in charge of relatives in that country, but sent money there for his support out of her earnings.

Claimant subsequently married, whereupon she sent money to Ireland to pay the expenses of bringing her adopted son to this country. He became a member of the family, and was sent to school and otherwise provided for. He continued with claimant, and as he became older contributed to her support out of the wages earned by him. He always recognized her as his mother, and after enlistment requested his comrades in case anything should happen to him to send his effects to claimant.

enlistment requested his comrades in case anything should happen to him to send his effects to claimant.

The claimant is now a widow, and almost left penniless. The little property left by her husband is encumbered and affords no income. The soldier left no wife or minor child surviving him. His father died shortly after he passed into the care of claimant.

Were she soldier's natural mother the case would come clearly within the provisions of the general pension laws, but being the foster-mother only claimant is debarred from its benefits. Congress, however, has in many instances granted relief to this class of persons, and being fully satisfied from the evidence before us that this claim is meritorious, your committee favor the granting of the request, and therefore return the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was leid evidence to reprove the the Horse with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DOROTHEA RUOFF.

Mr. HOWARD called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4825) granting a pension to Dorothea Ruoff.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dorothea Ruoff, widow of John Ruoff, late of Company F, Thirty-eighth Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act during widowhood.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4825) granting a pension to Dorothea Ruoff, have examined the papers on file and submit the following report:

Claimant is the widow of John Ruoff, late of Company F, Thirty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, who was a pensioner of the United States for wounds received at the battle of Stone River and Jonesborough, Ga. He died April 8, 1876, of enlargement and congestion of the liver. The widow filed her claim for pension May 20, 1879, which was rejected on the ground that the remote cause of death was not the result of his military service.

Your committee can not see any good reason for the rejection of this widow's claim. Accompanying the papers on file is the certificate of the attending physician at the time of soldier's death, as follows:

"In the case of John Ruoff, late private Company F, Thirty-eighth Indiana Volunteers, who died April 8, 1876, of enlargement and congestion of the liver, I am of the opinion that wounds received during his service in the war of the rebellion—gunshot wounds of arm, shoulder, back, hip, and foot—were clearly the predisposing cause. I was, after his discharge from the service, called to see him occasionally, and was one of his physicians during his last illness. He suffered almost constantly under hyperæsthesia, due from reflex trouble from wounds, sarcomatous condition of lower extremities, and a general leturous appearance of surface, and a gradual increase of nephritic trouble, which, toward the close of his life, amounted to almost total suppression of urine. All this is due to inability to take reasonable exercise by reason of his wounds."

In reply to second inquiry of the Pension Office for his reasons more clearly stated, in his affladavit he testifies that the soldier was of lymphatic temperament, disposed to fob. His wounds were of such a nature as to enforce a sedentary life; this impaired digestion, unhealthy action of the liver and kidneys, finally ending in biliary blood-poisoning, causing death.

Your committee are convinced that the death cause is clearly traceable to the soldier's wounds, and that the widow is entitled to a pension. We therefore report the bill favorably, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY SAEGER.

Mr. HUDD called up for consideration the bill (S. 3538) granting a pension to Mary Saeger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Saeger, a nurse in the United States Army, for the sum of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3538) granting a pension to Mary Saeger, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is herewith adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 2312, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Claimant was a nurse on the United States hospital steamer Charles McDon-

Claimant was a nurse on the United States hospital steamer Charles McDougal in 1864.

In an affidavit executed September 11, 1888, Dr. Rudolph Ravenburg, of Washington, D. C., testifies to claimant's arduous and meritorious service as hospital nurse in the malarial districts of the South during the war of the rebellion; that owing to hardships and exposure incident to such service she contracted malarial poisoning, which has continued to the present time, wholly disabling her for earning her living by physical labor.

In affidavit executed September 19, 1888, Dr. Mary E. Walker, of Washington, D. C., testifies that she has known claimant for a number of years; that the said claimant is now in the seventy-fifth year of her age, and will never be able to do anything to support herself.

Favorable action is warranted by the facts in the claim, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM HARPER.

Mr. HUNTER called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10922) granting a pension to William Harper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Harper, dependent father of Joseph T. Harper, late assistant surgeon of the Seventeenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10922) granting a pension to William Harper, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

It appears from the records in the War Department that Joseph T. Harper was duly enrolled and mustered into the United States service as assistant surgeon of the Seventeenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry during the late war of the rebellion, and served as such until the 26th day of July, 1855, when he died of typhoid fever at Russeliville, Ky.

Mahala Harper, mother of the deceased soldier, filed an application for pension on the 28th day of June, 1890, as a dependent parent; but the claim was rejected on the 26th day of May, 1884, on the ground of non-dependence.

It is shown by the testimony on file in the case that the rejection was based on claimant's husband being the owner of a small tract of land.

While it is true that William Harper, husband of claimant, did and now owns the property referred to, it is nevertheless a fact that the land is located on a ridge, quite poor, and incapable of rendering him a support.

Mahala Harper died since the claim was rejected, and William Harper, her husband, and father of Joseph T. Harper, the deceased soldier, now seeks relief by special act.

Claimant is a very poor man, in feeble health from advanced years, and incapacitated thereby for any kind of active manual labor whatever.

In view of the foregoing, your committee feel that this is a meritorious claim, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Add the word "assistant" after the word "late" and before the word "surgeon" in the seventh line.

Mr. KILGORE. So far as this report is concerned, Mr. Chairman,

Mr. KILGORE. So far as this report is concerned, Mr. Chairman, it does not anywhere state the date of this assistant surgeon's enlistment. It is said he was discharged in 1864 or 1865. He may not have The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.
Mr. KILGORE. What is it?

The CHAIRMAN. To add the word "assistant" after the word late" and before the word "surgeon" in the seventh line.

Mr. KILGORE. That is all right.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to have some understanding of this matter. The report says he was discharged in 1864, but it does not say when he went into the service or whether he served a single day. If I could be satisfied on that point I would allow the bill to pass. If the party did serve and the case is meritorious in other respects I would not interpose an objection, but I do think in its present condition it should be allowed to go over for the present.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know when he entered the service, but he entered when the regiment was organized.

Mr. KILGORE. What was the regiment?

Mr. HUNTER. It was the Seventeenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

Mr. KILGORE. I think the report should be more explicit. Mr. HUNTER. He entered the regiment when it was organized. Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman assures me that he entered the regiment when it was organized, and from the number, Seventeenth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, I judge it was organized early in the war. While I think the report should be more explicit, I will not object. I would ask the gentleman what pension is granted by the bill?

Mr. HUNTER. The pension for assistant surgeon, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. Mr. KILGORE. Very well; let it go.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. TOLLY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11861) to place the name of James H. Tollyon the pensionroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James H. Tolly, late private Company L. Twelfth Tennessee Cavalry, from the date of his discharge in July, 1885, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11861) to place the name of James H. Tolly on the pension-roll, have had the same under consideration, and now report:

Claimant was mustered into the service of the United States at Nashville, Tenn., April 19, 1864, and was discharged at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in July, 1865, on account of disabilities. In application for pension he alleges as the basis of his claim smothering or disease of heart contracted by his horse falling on him at the battle of Nashville, Tenn., on the 18th of December, 1864.

The claim was rejected on the ground that elaimant was unable to produce evidence from comrades or others that the disability occurred as alleged. There is abundance of circumstantial proof of comrades and neighbors, showing that there can be but little doubt that his injuries resulted from the fall of his horse, as stated. Believing that the claimant should have the benefit of the doubt, if any exists, we submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: In lines 6 and 7 strike out "from the date of his discharge in July, 1885."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass

JAMES A. GRIFFEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is a bill upon the Calendar, a bill (H. R. 6783) for the relief of James A. Griffey, which has been returned from the Senate with an amendment, to insert after "of" where it first occurs the name of "James," instead of "John," so as to make it read, "James A. Griffey." I ask that it be taken up and reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be agreed to.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken up and the Senate amendment ordered to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be agreed to.

W. B. GREEN.

Mr. JOSEPH called up the bill (H. R. 9179) granting a pension to W. B. Green.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of W. B. Green, late assistant surgeon United States Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. Hunter) is as follows:

It appears from the records of the War Department that claimant served under contract as acting assistant surgeon United States Army from April 6, 1864, to May 19, 1865; he also appears to have been in charge of Hospital of Refugees and Freedmen's Home up to September 30, 1865, and to have received medical and hospital property October 18, 1865; and from a letter dated November 9, 1865, in order and letter book for Freedmen's Bureau it further appears that the "contract of Acting Asst. Surg. W. B. Green, United States Army, has been annulled;" date not given.

He filed an application for pension May 19, 1882, and alleges in his declaration that on or about September 20, 1865, he contracted rheumatism of the left arm, resulting in anchylosis of left elbow joint while on duty as an acting assistant surgeon United States Army at Pine Bluff, Ark., in general hospital.

Notwithstanding the proof hereinafter cited, the claim was, by the Commissioner of Pensions, rejected "on the ground that at the alleged date of incurrence of disability claimant was not connected with the military service, but was attached to the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands."

The affidayit of James M. Crawford, of Clementville, Tenn., states:

"Knew claimant in the hospital at Madison, Ind., in 1864; affilant was a patient in said hospital and claimant was one of the hospital physicians, and apparently as sound a man as affiant ever saw at that time; affiant was a patient in said hospital and claimant was one of the hospital physicians, and apparently as sound a man as affiant ever saw at that time; affiant was a patient in was stiff."

Dr. D. C. Day, of Nashville, Tenn., states:

"That he was in charge of the menual best in the state of the surger of the menual best in the surfered from rheumatism, and his left arm was stiff."

his family physician; claimant at this time suffered from rheumatism, and his left arm was stiff."

Dr. D. C. Day, of Nashville, Tenn., states:

"That he was in charge of the general hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark., in 1865, and treated claimant for rheumatism of the left arm, caused by, as he believes, change of climate and exposure in the line of duty."

J. M. Farley states:

"That he has known the claimant for thirty-four years; prior to army life he was sound and healthy; lived within one-half mile of claimant from 1850 to 1865, and never knew him to be sick or have rheumatism."

George B. Page says:

"That he has been a near neighbor of claimant, who has been his family physician for the past seventeen years, or since 1867. Claimant has suffered from rheumatism and often not able to attend to his professional calls. His left arm is stiff, and he is not able to straighten it."

Joseph M. Thomas and W. H. Matheny state, in a joint affidavit:

"As to an acquaintance with claimant from 1857 to the present time. Claimant has been their family physician and has suffered from rheumatism and the left elbow-joint is stiff.

C. Myers states:
"That he has known claimant since 1868, or sixteen years, and has had a personal knowledge of his rheumatism for fourteen years, and that he has a stiff arm, and claimant would have to give up practice in consequence of his disa-

J.H. Horah, special examiner for the Pension Office, who was sent to Nashville, Tenn., by Commissioner of Pensions to examine into this case, states in his letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, accompanying his examination, as

"From all the testimony now before me I am of the opinion that the claim is meritorious and recommend that it be admitted."

Dr. John A. Pillow, United States examining surgeon at Gainesborough, Tenn., meritorious and recommend that it be admitted."

Dr. John A. Pillow, United States examining surgeon at Gainesborough, Tenn., says:

"From the condition and bistory of the claimant it is my opinion the disability was probably incurred in the service as claimed, and that it is not aggravated or protracted by vicious habits. I find the disability as above described to entitle him to two-thirds rating. Total three grades."

A board of United States examining surgeons, November 4, 1885, makes the same statement, except the rating, which is as follows: "Total + one-half."

It is thus established by the testimony referred to, which was corroborated by other testimony obtained by the special examiners, that the claimant incurred his disability while engaged as acting assistant surgeon United States Army in the summer and fall of 1865.

Both special examiners recommended the allowance of the claim, and its rejection was caused not by a failure of proof of the facts, but because claimant was not connected with the military service, but with the Freedmen's Bureau. He had served two previous terms of service as acting assistant surgeon United States Army, one from April 6, 1864, to December 5, 1864, and the other from December 10, 1864, to May 19, 1865, and was on duty at general hospitals.

Under section 4693, paragraph 4, an acting assistant surgeon or contract surgeon is pensionable only when his disability was contracted while performing duty with the military force in the field, or in transit, or in hospital.

This man's contract was entered into with the Freedmen's Bureau in July, 1865. His patients at the Freedmen's Hospital, Pine Bluff, Ark., where he was established, were soldiers in the Army or those who had become disabled while serving in the military or naval service. He is shown by the evidence to have worn an army uniform while so engaged. It is proved that he became disabled while there, and is now severely afflicted by rheumatism and heart disabled while there, and is now severely afflicted by rheumatism

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

The question recurred on laying the bill aside.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not understand from the reading of the bill how much was to be the rate of pension allowed here.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The usual amount in such

Mr. HUNTER. It provides, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. KILGORE. What does the law give an assistant surgeon?

Mr. HUNTER. Seventeen dollars.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand this disability was incurred in the fall of 1865, which was after the close of the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not carry arrears, I will say, if the language is "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that; but my objection was that the disability did not occur until after the close of the war, according to the report.

Mr. HUNTER. Let that part of the report be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

He filed an application for pension May 19, 1882, and alleges in his declaration that on or before September 20, 1865, he contracted rheumatism of the left arm,

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. DICKINSON.

Mr. KENNEDY called up the bill (H. R. 7827) granting a pension to George W. Dickinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Dickinson, late a private of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month, to be paid him from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. YODER) is as follows:

The report (by Mr. Yoder) is as follows:

George W. Dickinson, private in Company E, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, enlisted June, 1861, discharged December 11,1864, and filed this declaration for pension May 9, 1881, placing his claim on the ground that at Bowling Green, Ky., February 20, 1882, he contracted rheumatism, caused by exposure in the service. Claim was rejected on the ground that the evidence elicited upon special examination shows the alleged rheumatism prior to enlistment. The claimant has no hospital record.

Claimant alleges his inability to furnish the evidence of his family physician, proofs to his enlistment, except company and regiment, as to his being free from rheumatism, for the reason that said physician is dead. He states that he never had rheumatism at all till after his enlistment in the said company and regiment to which he belonged, except when a boy of about fifteen years of age he had pains in his bones or legs, but that he outgrew them. Four years previous to his enlistment he was perfectly free from rheumatism. This is corroborated substantially by his parents, neighbors, and acquaintances with the exception of one witness, who testifies of the evidence going to show that for years prior to his enlistment he was free from rheumatism.

George W. Swallow testifies that he well knew the said claimant before his enlistment in said company and regiment to be a sound, able-bodied man, free from any disease whatever, especially rheumatism, etc.

Jacob Seig, Ridgeway, Ohio, testifies that he has been acquainted with George W. Dickinson for the past twenty-four years; that previous to his enlistment he was actively engaged in farming.

German B. Milliner testifies:

"While at Bowling Green, Ky., there was a battle fought at the time aforesaid; said claimant was sent to help me drive a team to Green River for regimental baggage. The weather was so severe and cold, and from the exposure he contracted rheumatism."

Jacob Seig testifies that he was a private in said company and regiment with said George W. Dickinson. He was then detailed as teamster, for the reason, as affiant understood, that George W. Dickinson was unable to march and keep up with the regiment.

There is no question as to the disability of the claimant since the service. The one question is to the prior existence of the disease, rheumatism. The only evidence on record is the testimony of one man, with the exception of his own and parents' testimony that when a boy he had rheumatism, and that at the time of enlistment and for a number of years previous to his enlistment he had no symptoms of rheumatism.

Your committee is of opinion that the disease had not existed at the time of his enlistment; that if it had not been for the exposure and hardships of the service he would not have been subject to this disease, and therefore recommend the passage of this bill with an amendment striking out line 6, "at the rate of $20 per month, to be paid from and after the passage of this enting "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANK D. WORCESTER.

Mr. KERR called up the bill (H. R. 3451) granting a pension to Frank D. Worcester.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank D. Worcester, late a member of Company B, First Maine Battery of Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S, 3451) granting a pension to Frank D. Worcester, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth clearly the facts in this case, and is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 2407, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3451) granting a pension to Frank D. Worcester, have examined the same, and report:
This case, which is quite voluminous, may be briefly stated as one in which discharge from the service occurred on account of insanity, which was alleged in the medical certificate to have had existence before enlistment, and which was rejected at the Pension Bureau on that ground. It involves a mass of testimony disproportionate to the settlement of the single point in question and which it would be useless to abstract in this report.

There is some evidence, but not of a high grade, which fixes upon the soldier before enlistment some eccentricities but no aberrations, while the bulk of testimony, including that of the family physician, members of the family, and old neighbors, shows that the soldier, while not over-bright in scholarly respects, was an honest, faithful boy, and, as many expressed it, "the mainstay of the family, so far as work was concerned." The committee, in estimating the value of such testimony as is conflicting, pay proper respect to character in giving the soldier the benefit of any doubt.

The soldier came out of the service insane, and has for many years been confined in an asylum as an incurable. If he had in him the elements of insanity before enlistment, they were latent and were first developed afterward in the service and have controlled him since.

The committee report favorably upon the bill, and recommend it for passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

E. C. PASCHAL.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to call up the bill (H. R. 11566) granting a pension to E. C. Paschal; and to say that I call it up for a friend of mine who is very anxious to have it passed. But it is a very good bill. The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of E. C. Paschal, who served in Captain Gunn's company, from the State of Alabama, Indian war, 1836, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11566) granting a pension to E. C. Paschal, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant was, as shown by the records of the regiment on file in the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, a private in Captain Gunn's company, of Major Webb's regiment of volunteers from the State of Alabama, in the Florida Indian war of 1836. He served from June 1 to September 15 of that year, and was honorably discharged from the service.

He is now a very old man and in needy circumstances. Your committee are of the opinion that he should have a service pension, and therefore report the bill back to the House, recommending its passage, amended, however, by striking out the initial letter "E." in the title of the bill and in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Elijah."

Mr. LAWLER. I move to increase the amount to $24

Mr. LAWLER. I move to increase the amount to $24.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no; we do not want that.
Mr. LAWLER. I make that motion. I would not do it for anybody [Laughter.] I hope the gentleman will accept it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend by making it $20, the same as the other Black Hawk bills.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment, striking out the initial "E." and inserting "Elijah."

Mr. KILGORE. That is an error, Mr. Chairman. The amendment is incorrect. It should be "Elisha," and I move to amend by making it "Elisha" in place of "Elijah."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE called up the bill (S. 3283) granting a pension to Reuben Ash.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Reuben Ash, late first lieutenant of Company E, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3283) granting a pension to Reuben Ash, submitthe following report:

That from a careful examination of the papers in this case and the Senate report, which is made a part hereof, your committee think this to be a meritorious case.

(Senate Report No. 1967, Fiftieth Congress, first session.)

"This is a bill to increase the pension of Reuben Ash, late first lieutenant of Company E, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

"The claimant was wounded at the battle of Bull Run, for which he was pensioned at the rate of $4, $6, and finally $8 per month. The last increase was recently allowed, to date from October 19, 1887. The soldier is now helpless, requires the attendance of another person, and it is in consequence of the inadequacy of the pension to the disability that appeal is made to Congress.

"The original disability was a gunshot wound in the shoulder, which affected the spine. The effects have been progressive, and for some time past he has been quite unable to help himself.

"The last time he was examined by a medical board was at Chicago, on the 19th of October last. It was found that he was very deaf, his eye-sight impaired, and that he was partially paralyzed, and the surgeons say 'these conditions no doubt result from gunshot injury and are permanent."

"Dr. Russell, of Oshkosh, Wis., was assigned surgeon of this soldier's regiment. He is, moreover, known in all the Northwest as a gentleman eminent in his profession. He describes in an affidavit the incident and nature of the wound; says that he is and has been professionally familiar with the case; that his condition is what is known to the profession as progressive locomotor ataxia; that it is caused by the injury to his spinal cord by the gunshot wound; that he is from year to year growing worse; that he is now (April 16, 1888), and has been for the past two years, wholly unable to perform any manual labor, and is at the present time unable to dress or undress himself, and requires some one constantly to attend him.

"H. B. Harshaw, State treasurer of the State of Wisconsin, was a private in the company in which Ash enlisted; knew.him to be sound when he enlisted, and testifies to his personal knowledge of the incurrence of the wound.

"Dr. Parker, of Chicago, in 188 and testifies to his personal knowledge of the incurrence of the wound.

"Dr. Parker, of Chicago, in 1886, testifies to his condition, corroborating the above witnesses, and says he requires assistance to dress and undress himself and to attend to the calls of nature. Dr. Parker is his attending physician.

"All the witnesses agree as to the soldier's condition and the cause. The report of the board of examining surgeons furnishes a basis for allowance on the grade provided in this bill. The soldier was, before his enlistment and until about two years ago, a resident of Oshkosh, Wis. The Senator who makes this report had knowledge of his prior soundness, and of his progressive disability and suffering until he removed to Chicago for the benefit of the care he could obtain from triends residing there.

"Dr. Walter Kemster testifies that during eight years last past he has made several careful examinations of the claimant and found him suffering from a disease of the nervous system known as spinal sclerosis; that the disease is progressive, and has increased to such an extent that he is now, and has been for more than a year, entirely helpless and unable to help himself in any way, and requires the attendance of another person, being at this time unable to feed himself, to walk, to dress or undress himself; that his present condition is the result of his wound; that he is entirely dependent upon his friends for support and care.

"It is already shown by the evidence that this soldier is one of the class whose result of his wound; that he is entirely dependent upon his friends for support and care.

"It is already shown by the evidence that this soldier is one of the class whose rating should be that provided in the bill, which the committee report with an amendment, striking out 'a private in 'in the sixth line, and inserting 'first lieutenant of,' and in the same line, after 'Company,' insert 'E' in the place of 'B;' and after the word 'month,' in line 8, insert 'in lieu of the pension he is now receiving,' and as thus amended recommend that the bill do pass."

Since the Senate report was made the pension has been increased to $30, the office holding that claimant does not require "the constant aid and attendance of another person," but the evidence shows very clearly that the man is help-less and does require the almost constant aid of another, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out "seventy-two" and inserting "forty-five."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted and

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAWYER (when the name of Mr. LAIDLAW was called). Mr. Chairman, there is a Senate bill on the Calendar in which Mr. LAIDLAW is much interested, and as he is necessarily absent, I will ask that his name be passed to-night, to be called at the next meeting of the committee Several Members. Regular order.

HENRY V. BASS.

Mr. LANDES called up the bill (H. R. 11803) granting a pension to Henry V. Bass.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry V. Bass, Company I, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11803) granting a pension to Henry V. Bass, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Henry V. Bass served as private in Company I, One hundred and thirtieth

Illinois Volunteers, from September 9, 1862, to August 15, 1865. His claim for pension on account of injury to right knee and ankle has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the disability was not incurred in the line Pension Bureau on the ground that the disability was not incurred in the line of duty.

It is shown by the testimony of comrades that claimant was sitting on the ground near his tent; two comrades near by were wrestling, and while so engaged they fell on him, knocking his right knee out of joint and injuring his ankle. Another comrade, named Bams, pulled the knee back into place. The affiants have been carefully examined by the special examiners, and declare that claimant was not in any way concerned or interested in the wrestle, and that the injury was received without any fault of his. By reason of these injuries claimant was detailed as driver of the hospital ambulance, in which capacity he served until discharged.

Your committee are clearly of opinion that the claim is meritorious, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY K. ALLEN.

Mr. LANE called up the bill (H. R. 12381) granting a pension to Mary K. Allen.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary K. Allen, dependent mother of Second Lieut, Jesse K. Allen, late of the Fifth Infantry of the United States Army, and who was killed in action by the Indians August 15, 1858.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred this bill beg leave to report that they have considered the same, and find from the evidence that the claimant is the mother of Second Lieut, Jesse K. Allen, late of the regular Army, and that he served about three years therein, and was an excellent soldier, and served faithfully; that he was a graduate of West Point, and rendered valuable services to the Government while in the Army, and that he was killed in action while successfully capturing a band of hostile Indians in Washington Territory, on the 18th of August, 1858. It appears further that his mother was a very hard-working woman, and by manual labor educated her son and qualified him to enter West Point; that the soldier, after he was in the Army, frequently sent his mother money, and was the chief means of her support while in the service and during his life; and that he died unmarried, leaving no child or children or descendant of such children. It appears further from the testimony that the mother is now past seventy-seven years of age, and is unable longer, because of age and other infirmities, to perform manual or other labor to support herself, and that she has no means whatever to support herself, and that her husband has been dead for more than twenty years; and the committee are of the opinion that this woman, having lost her son and means of support in the service of the country, it is but just that the country, in her old age, should make some provision for her support for the few short years that are left her to live. The committee therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recom-

CATLENA LYMAN.

Mr. LAWLER called up for consideration the bill (S. 2626) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman. The bill was read, as follows:

Be il enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catlena Lyman, widow of William C. Lyman, late surgeon United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now allowed her.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8, 2626) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman, beg leave to report that they have considered the same, and find that the following report was made to the Senate by its committee, which report this committee adopts as their own, and hereby report the bill back with a recommendation that the same do pass.

[Senate Report No. 1819, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was re-referred the bill (8, 2626) granting a pension to Catiena Lyman, widow of William C. Lyman, have examined the same, and report:

That the claimant is now a pensioner at the rate of $25 per month, the rate allowed by law for her husband's rank, that of passed assistant surgeon in the Navy.

Since the recommitted of the light of the light of the rate and th

Navy.

Since the recommitted of the bill it is shown by additional evidence submitted to the committee that the husband, William C. Lyman, although having officially only the rank of passed assistant surgeon, did actually serve as surgeon in the Navy in the war of 1861 with marked ability. He took the place of surgeon at the United States naval rendezvous at Chicago. He had charge of several ships in quarantine outside of New Orleans; he was in the expedition against the forts and fleets of the enemy in the Lower Mississippi. In the discharge of his duties there he took the yellow fever, and only recovered after long suffering.

He served as surgeon on board the Portsmouth, the flag-ship of Admiral Farragut, and in recognition of the meritorious character of his services he received a testimonial from the admiral, being a box of surgical instruments, inscribed to him by that officer, which has been shown by the widow, in whose possession it is, to the committee.

The claimant lost all her property by the Chicago fire and is now without means of support save the pension. The sum now paid her is inadequate.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I am willing that the previous question may be considered as ordered and the bill go over to a full House.

Mr. KILGORE. Subject to amendment.

Mr. LAWLER. I agree to the proposition of the gentleman from

Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, that the previous question be considered as ordered, and the bill go over to a full House, subject to amendment and debate.

Mr. LAWLER. On next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

JULIANNA MULLER.

Mr. LEHLBACH called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 917) for the relief of Julianna Muller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julianna Muller, widow of Frederick Muller, late a member of Company I, Thirty-fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) is as follows:

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 917) for the relief of Julianna Muller, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of Frederick Muller or Mueller, who enlisted in Company I, Thirty-fifth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers, October 2, 1863, and was discharged upon surgeon's certificate of disability October 8, 1864, on account of gunshot wound of right groin and scrotum received in battle of Dallas, Ga, May 27, 1864, causing the loss of right testicle and inguinal hernia of right side. He died February 23, 1884, at which date he was in receipt of pension for the said disabilities at the rate of $12 per month.

The claim of the widow has been rejected upon the ground that the fatal disease, phthisis pulmonalis, as certified to by the last attending physician, is not shown to be due to the disabilities for which pensioned, or shown to be otherwise chargeable to his military service.

The immediate cause of death seems to have been ascertained through postmortem examination by Drs. Hewlett and Guenther. The former had no personal acquaintance with the soldier prior to his death, but gives it as his opinion that the pulmonary trouble was aggravated by debility and depression, caused by the injuries received while in service. Dr. Guenther testifies to a personal acquaintance with the soldier from about 1864, and that he first treated him for disease of lungs December 28, 1878. From his observations of the soldier during these years it is affiant's belief that the death cause was due to the injuries received in the service.

Soldier was treated prior to 1878 by one Dr. John F. Ward, but his death precludes the possibility of furnishing medical evidence covering the period of his treatment.

A number of reliable citizens and neighbors of the claimant, including the pastor of the church at which soldier attended, testify to his debilitated condition and inability to perform manual labor, which condition they ascribe to the injuries received in the service. Their testimony is fully corroborated by the several medical examinations dating back to November, 1864.

Claimant was married to the soldier in 1837. Her two sons served likewise in the Army, and, being seriously disabled by reason of their services, are unable to aid their mother in her declining years.

The family has always been poor, and at the age of seventy-two years claimant is dependent upon charity.

The disabilities incurred by the soldier were of a serious character, and their effect upon his system is readily understood. As heretofore stated, additional medical evidence can not be furnished. The medical testimony on file, together with that of credible neighbors, clearly shows, however, that the fatal disease was of long standing, and in the opinion of your committee its connection with the Army injuries should be conceded in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

ie contrary. The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KILGORE (during the reading of the report). Does that bill just ask that the party be placed on the pension-roll?

The Clerk read from the bill as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, etc.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I will ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report.

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH L. NOTT.

Mr. LONG called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3167) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Nott.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) is as follows:

The report (by Mr. French) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3167) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Nott, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Elizabeth L. Nott is the widow of Dawes S. Nott, who was drafted July 17, 1863, and assigned to the Twelfth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. The record shows that he was admitted to Mansion House, Alexandria, Va., General Hospital, November 1, 1863, with contusion, and returned to duty January 13, 1864. He was discharged February 18, 1864, on surgeon's certificate of disability, by reason of incipienttuberculosis, and died June 1, 1871, of cirrhosis of the liver, as shown by the certificate of death.

The widow's claim has been rejected on the ground that the soldier's fatal disease is, in the opinion of the Pension Office, not shown to be due to his military service.

There is lay testimony on file in the case showing a continuous bad state of health from discharge to death. But the most important testimony is that of Dr. Fordyce Foster. He states that he was personally acquainted with the soldier and was his family physician from September 12, 1856, to April 11, 1867, and knew him to have been a sound and well man up to the time of his enlistment. Was called to attend him after his discharge for chronic rheumatism and diarrhea. Attended him in 1864, 1865, 1866, and up to April 11, 1867. Remembers the case very well, as it was very obstinate to cure. The rheumatism was severe, affecting the large joints and attended with swelling and severe pain. Was frequently called to see him at night. He had also a chronic diarrhea of an exhausting character; was reduced almost to skin and bones, with frequent watery discharges, passing blood and mucus. Could not do much if any kind of work during that period.

Dr.G. P. Pratt, the physician who attended the soldier in his lastillness, testifies that he died of cirrhosis of the liver, which existed prior to affiant's connection chest, but whether it was cirrhosis or any other kind of disease of the liver or any other disease of the chest, in the absence of such examination must necessarily remain more or less in doubt.

The fact that the soldier was drafted must settle the question of prior soundness. It is clearly shown by competent and undisputed testimony that at discharge he was a sufferer from rheumatism and diarrhea, and that these diseases continued to increase in severity in spite of medical treatment until he became reduced to a skeleton. Rheumatism, as well as chronic diarrhea of long standing, necessarily affects the liver. Again, the most skillful physician often wrongly diagnoses a disease in its incipient state, and what appeared to the surgeon at date of soldier's discharge incipient tuberculosis may, in fact, have been a diseased condition of the liver.

Whatever view may be taken of the case under consideration, in the absence of any evidence adverse thereto it is the opinion of your committee that the fatal disease was due to causes shown to have originated subsequent to the soldier's entry into the service of the United States, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 26, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved. VOTE OF ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of State for printing the certified copies of the final ascertainment of the vote of the electors for President and Vice-President; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

VESSELS FOR FISH COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, of an appropriation for maintenance of vessels for the United States Fish Commission for the fiscal year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be LIGHT-SHIP, SANDY HOOK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 11683) for the establishment of a light-ship with fog-signal at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to that bill be concurred in.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, after line 3, insert "that there be constructed and established a first-class light-ship with a steam fog-signal off Great Round Shoal, seacoast of Mas-sachusetts, near Nantucket, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $00,-000; provided that the construction of said light-ships shall be let to the lowest responsible bidders after advertisement, and that they shall be built in American ship, wards."

Ship-yards."
Amend the title so as to read: "For the establishment of light-ships with fogsignals at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor, and off Great Round Shoal, seacoast of Massachusetts, near Nantucket."

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments of the Senate thereto, and the latter ordered to be printed.

TARIFF BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, with an amendment by the Senate in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. REED. Subject to a point of order with reference to the measure going to the Committee of the Whole, I desire to propose that the House concur in the Senate amendment. Or, if the House determines to non-concur, that a committee of conference be granted as the Senate has requested; and upon that I wish to submit some remarks.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order that this bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve the point of order that the bill must first go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], as the Chair understands, desires to be heard on the question whether he can or not, without unanimous consent of the House, move to concur or non-concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. REED. It is apparent, Mr. Speaker, that the question which is now before the House is a question of very grave importance, admitted to be such by both sides of the House. In a speech delivered by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. CARLISLE] at the close of the last session this remark was made, which, among others, should be an inducement to us to have as speedy consideration and settlement of this question as is possible:

The actual situation which now confronts us, a situation which makes it the imperative duty of the Representatives of the people to reduce the revenues before this Congress shall adjourn.

It is not necessary to add to that the various arguments which have been presented in favor of a revision of the tariff. I only point to that, and to the other remarks that have been made on the subject, to show the substantial agreement on the part of all persons concerned and the general desire of the country that this question should be disposed of. The House has done its preliminary part, whether well or ill I have taken occasion to say already in many places as well as here; the matter has gone to the Senate, and the Senate also has performed its part of the public duty. Not to speak of other differences which exist be-tween the action of the House and the action of the Senate, there seems to be one difference on principle. The House of Representatives has very largely increased the ad valorem list of duties, and the Senate has increased somewhat the specific duties. And in that the Senate has followed the advice of every Secretary of the Treasury and of almost every person who has had in hand the actual administration of the law.

Differences of detail of course are always open, and ought always to be open, to the consideration of the two Houses. The Senate has very carefully considered all the items contained in this amendment; and I would be the last to say that the House ought not also to examine the amendment carefully; and the rules of the House, as they stand, provide for that, even if the House should agree to the request of the Senate that a conference committee be appointed at the proper time.

Now, we are all agreed that it is very important, very desirable, that this matter should be put in the way of passage, not only for the co-gent reason given by the Speaker, but also for other reasons known to everybody who listens to me. The Senate, anticipating, perhaps, some difficulty arising from the ordinary rules of the House, have proposed a committee of conference; in other words, have asked us to take the speediest method of disposing of this great question, the importance of the speedy disposal of which is admitted upon all hands. They have therefore asked for a conference upon the amendment wherein they disagree with the recorded judgment of the House. Now the House, by interposing no objection arising out of our rules, can come to a speedy conclusion upon the matter; and it is admitted that a speedy conclusion is very much to be desired.

I had always supposed, until the decision of the Chair in the case of the oleomargarine bill, that whenever the Senate asks for a committee of conference the matter constitutes a question of privilege—not a question of privilege depriving the House of a right to scrutinize the amendment, but a question of privilege calling for speedy action, or at least deliberate non-action—intentional non-action—on the part of the House. For instance, I had supposed—and such was the practice up to that time, I think—that the House could concur or non-concur if it saw fit, or could send the matter to the Committee of the Whole, wherein the question could be taken up and discussed; and when a disagreement was reached, if one was reached, then a committee of conference could be appointed and the measure furthered. This is of course in accordance with the well-known principle of parliamentary law that it is the duty of each body possessing by moiety the legislative power to further in every way that is possible a bill that is farthest advanced in its stage of progress. This bill, having passed the House and having passed the Senate with amendment, had reached a stage in advance of a bill which had merely been introduced. Therefore, the Senate, a co-ordinate body possessed of one-half the power of legislation, having requested a committee of conference, the matter thereupon became a privileged question in the House. I hope, therefore, that no point of order—for I hardly expect the Speaker to overrule his decision made in the other case—I hope that no point of order may be raised except that of sending the bill to the Committee of the Whole; and then we can dispose of this question.

My object in making these remarks is to bring to the minds of gentlemen on the other side the urgency which they have been so loudly proclaiming for so long a time, of action on the part of Congress with regard to the surplus in the Treasury and with regard to the revision of the statutes, to the end that they may not interpose any objection to speedy action upon this point. I had also another motive which I am frank to avow—one of the motives which very often govern discussion in this House—a very proper and suitable motive; and that is not only to recall to the House the condition in which our rules are, but to show to the House and the country that this side at least has not been wanting in any respect in its duty to the country in urging in season, and, if this be an improper occasion, out of season also, the necessity and propriety of speedy action on the part of the House of Representa-

I hope, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that nothing will be interposed in the way of a point of order which will prevent us from discussing and disposing of this great question which is before the House again in a more advanced stage than it was. Should it go to the Committee on Ways and Means, we know by experience that any discussion between persons of different belief on that committee is not liable to take place, and that such a submission of this question will only provoke delay. The session is so short that if we mean to discuss this question and dispose of it, we ought at once to go to work. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, under the Constitution of the United Mr. MILLS. States each House has the power to make rules to govern its own proceedings, and each House, in the manner of disposing of its business, is independent of the other. This House, in pursuance of that constitutional authority, has made a rule which requires all bills of this nature to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House; and so jealous has the House been of the purse of the people and so regardful has it been of the people's rights that it has adopted a rule that whenever a bill dealing with these great rights comes from the Senate it shall receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House

By the rules which we have adopted we have several Calendars, and before any bill can receive consideration in this House on those Calendars it must have been reported from some of the standing committees of this House. Suppose this bill had come from the Senate, without this House having sent to that body the bill which it did, to reduce taxation; suppose the Senate had been vested by the Constitution of the United States with authority to originate revenue bills, and suppose that body had, not as it has done to-day, originated in defiance of constitutional provisions a tariff bill and sent it to the House, but had in pursuance of constitutional power sent to the House of Representatives a bill increasing or reducing taxation, where would it have gone under the rules of this House? It would have gone to the Committee on Ways and Means; and before it could be considered by this House it would have had to come back with a report from that committee and would have had to go to the Committee of the Whole House, where it would be impossible for this House to vote on it until every member had had the right to offer amendments and to debate the bill by paragraphs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have sent to the Senate a bill to reduce taxation. They had originated in that Chamber, or were preparing before we sent this bill to them, in defiance of the Constitution, a bill increasing taxation on the people of this country, an act which they were pro-hibited by the great charter of our fathers from doing. They have sent that bill so prepared here in defiance of the rules of this House, and it is now proposed that we accept their invitation to appoint a committee of conference and pass this most extraordinary measure, and that, too, at a time when the coffers of this Government are loaded with the excess of revenue, at a time when the people of this country are groaning with unnecessary taxation; a bill to reduce the revenues by destroying the commerce of the country and increasing the load of taxation upon the people for private purposes. [Applause on the Democratic side. ]

Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to go into a discussion of the merits of this bill on the question of order now pending; but I have been invited thereto by the remarks of my friend from Maine [Mr. REED]. He has criticised our bill because we have changed some of the specific taxes fixed by the existing law to ad valorem rates of duty, and he has also said that there has not been a Secretary of the Treasury from the foundation of this Government to the present time who has not favored and recommended the enactment of revenue laws providing for specific

Mr. Speaker, when the House comes to have this bill considered, and to have the differences between the two Houses discussed before this body, as well as the differences between the specific and ad valorem systems, the gentleman from Maine will find that there has been more than one Secretary of the Treasury who has advocated ad valorem duties, and he will also find that the most successful tariff that this country has ever had was the ad valorem tariff which we had in force from 1846 to 1860, under the old Democratic administrations of Polk, and Pierce, and Buchanan. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I will not indulge in further comments on this measure at the present time. There is a time for all things, and there will be a time when this bill will come before this House, if the majority of this House are true to themselves and true to their constituents; it will come here, and it will come here to be discussed, it will come here to be criticised, it will come here to be exposed to the American people, and it will come in accordance with the rules of this House, from the committee to which it properly belongs. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the question of whether we are to have any revenue legislation before the close of the present Congress will depend for its answer very much upon the action that is taken by the House of Representatives to-day upon the suggestion of my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill with the Senate amendments goes to the Committee on Ways and Means, no practical legislation will be had at this session of Congress, and the great question of the reduction of the revenues of the Government, now so excessive, as claimed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], will continue unsettled, and nothing can be done for nearly eleven months, or until we assemble in regular session next December, and at best we can not hope for revenue legislation before the spring or summer of 1890. So that at this very point this House will determine whether we are to have any reduction of the revenues, and whether excessive collections are to continue for twelve or fourteen months in the future.

The Senate of the United States, a co-ordinate branch of Congress, has respectfully asked this House to agree to a committee of conference. Their purpose is manifest—it is to bring the two Houses closer together and make an agreement possible. I believe that but once in the history of our century of legislation has a similar request been refused, and refused, I believe, under a ruling of the present Speaker of the House of Representatives, because the request was not made at that stage of disagreement between the two. Houses when a conference was justified. We are contween the two Houses when a conference was justified. We are confronted this morning with this request for consultation and conference. It is not a question of high tariff; it is not a question of low tariff; but it is a question of whether the House of Representatives will meet the Senate of the United States in free and open conference and determine if their differences can be adjusted and their disagreements rec-

The House has given to the country one bill framed upon one prin-The House has given to the country one bill framed upon one principle and based upon the line of party policy with which the majority is in accord. The Senate has given to the country another bill resting upon an entirely different principle and following out an entirely different line of public and party policy. The Senate has asked the House to consent to a committee of conference to consider the disagreement so presented, that they may see if in some manner this great difference between the two Houses can not be reconciled.

Now, what do we want to do as practical men? What does the country expect of us? We want to reduce the public revenues, and we can reduce them without my friend from Texas being called upon to surrender one jot of his free-trade principles or this side surrendering one jot of its protection principles. If the House of Representatives meets the Senate in free and open conference and those provisions are adopted where the two bills meet on common ground, we can reduce the revenues from thirty-five to forty millions of dollars and still preserve for future settlement the general policy of taxation respectively adhered to by the two parties.

All we have to do, Mr. Speaker, is to take up these two bills and look at the duties and changes in rates which are common to both. First, the abolition of the tax upon tobacco-$30,000,000; that is common to both bills. Then you take the free-list; that is common to both Then you take the administrative features of both bills. Both seek the same purpose; both look to an honest collection of the revenue and an honest administration of the customs laws; and if a committee of conference that we might appoint here this morning would only occupy the common ground, common to both bills, not even enter the field of division or controversy, we would strike down from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000 of revenue that is being collected, and which the Administration has repeatedly declared if continued will put in peril the business of the country. This House has already spoken upon the subject and expressed its approval of one subject of reduction. It was only the other day that it manifested its desire to have the tax taken from tobacco when it refused to send a bill of that import to the Committee of Ways and Means, but sent it to another committee, because it believed that committee would give to the majority of this House an opportunity to vote its sentiments and register its will in public law.

This administrative bill has nothing to do with politics; it has nothing to do with free trade; it has nothing to do with protection; it has nothing to do with party principles or policies. It is above politics and should be divorced from party. But it has everything to do with an honest administration of the customs laws, whether they are based upon the principle of protection or upon the principle of free trade.

Now, why not, as practical men, seeking to relieve the Treasury of the United States of its congestion, as described by the President of the United States, meet this condition and relieve the Treasury of its accumulating surplus and leave this vast sum of money with the people, where it belongs? "It is not a theory; it is a condition." Shall we where it belongs? run away from the condition which we can in part relieve, or waste our valuable time now upon theory? Shall we reduce the revenues of the Government? We have got an opportunity to do it, and to move in that direction this morning; but if this bill goes to the Committee on Ways and Means, mark my word, there will be no practical legislation reached at this session of Congress. And I beg the gentlemen on that side of the House and gentlemen on this side of the House to signalize the close of this Democratic Congress with some practicable, sensible, patriotic legislation. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have failed to find either in the argument of the gentleman from Maine or of the gentleman from Ohio that means of attaining the end that they claim can be attained under the rules. The gentleman from Ohio has delivered a speech that might be very fine as a stump speech, but he has wholly failed to address himself to the rules of the House on this subject.

Now, the gentleman said that the House has given the country one bill and the Senate has given the country another bill; that these bills are entirely different, and that they are framed on entirely different theories. His request of this House is, in the face of that declaration, more candid than I could have expected from any man, that it shall walk up and surrender its constitutional prerogative to frame revenue bills and give it over to the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Article I, section 7, of the Constitution of the United States pro-

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Here is a plain chart for the guidance of members of this Housechart they have sworn to follow, one from which we can not depart without the degradation of ourselves and the sacrifice of the principles and interests of those who have honored us by making us their ples and interests of those who have honored us by making us their representatives. The right to "originate bills for raising revenue" was wisely placed in the House of Representatives, because it comes more directly from the people, and has to return more frequently to them for indorsement. Yet it is proposed to throw away this safeguard of the people, to surrender this ancient right of the House, and to still further increase the power of the Senate.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKinley] has not even pretended that this Senate bill is an "amendment" to the House bill. He could not the is too intelligent to believe it and too candid to assert it. It not. He is too intelligent to believe it and too candid to assert it. is, as he describes it, an entirely different bill; a distinct proposition framed on a different "theory." As a matter of fact the Senate does not assume to amend the House bill. The Senate struck out every section of our bill or threw it aside and framed one of their own. In doing so they violated the Constitution, and they now ask us to meet them in conference and concur in this demolition.

What I want to know of the members of this House is, are you ready to do this in the face of that declaration of the gentleman from Ohio that this is a different and new bill? Have you so far degenerated from those principles that your sires held of adherence to the Constitution as to be willing at the request of the gentleman from Ohio to give up the people's rights to frame a bill in accordance with the people's principles, and give it over to the Senate, not elected by the people directly, but by the States? Others may do as they please, but for me, I will never, never consent to such a cowardly and ignoble degradation of the rights of the people and the privileges of the House. [Applause on the Degrace right] on the Democratic side.

Now, the gentleman says that there may be selected out, by this extraordinary and cowardly process, thirty or forty million dollars of revenue that can be remitted to the people or repealed. I deny that assertion. Has he studied the Senate bill? Has he forgotten that it increases the tax on all the schedules save three? It increases the tax on wool and woolens alone between four and five million dollars. There are not thirty or forty millions in these bills in the repeal or reductions of which the two Houses concur. The internal-revenue feature is taken up in order that it may aid in this extraordinary surrender. If I may follow the example of the two gentlemen at all in this regard, it will not be inappropriate for me to say that four-fifths of the relief given by the House bill against the extraordinary powers of the Federal court by modification or repeal of internal-revenue laws are taken away by the Senate. All the oppressive machinery is retained by the Senate bill that was proposed to be dispensed with by the House bill. The repeal of certain retail-dealers' taxes is changed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the rules of this House concerning the consideration of bills raising revenue, or, in other words, tax bills, for by the rules we propose to stand or fall, and there will be no surrender of every principle and prerogative of this House in violation of its rules and of the Constitution? Rule XX provides, Mr. Speaker, as Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

It will thus be seen that this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, and not in a conference room.

Clause 3 of Rule XXIII provides:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Neither the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] nor the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKinley] has suggested any rule under which we are forced to go to conference merely because the Senate invites us to conference. Nor can they cite such a rule. I think, Mr. Speaker, that these two rules settle it that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole and not in conference. In the next place, there is no means by which it can get to the Committee of the Whole except through a committee of this House. Hence it must first go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Sir, I made this point of order because I believed the Senate had attempted to override the Constitution and usurp the prerogatives of the House by originating a bill "raising revenue." I was not and am not willing to acquiesce in this assumption of right. Let it go where it belongs under the rules, to the Committee on Ways and Means. And above all and beyond all let us not abate one jot or tittle of our constitutional right to originate bills for raising revenue. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Prior to the beginning of the Forty-ninth Con-

'Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, from some remarks just made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] I fear that my position was not quite understood. The point which I make to the gentleman from Tennessee and to his colleagues is this: Last session of Congress the Speaker, voicing the opinion of his side of the House and greeted with their plaudits at the time, stated very forcibly the necessity for action, the necessity for a reduction of the revenue by the representa-tives of the people. I did not apprehend that the Speaker would now overrule the ruling which was made in the oleomargarine case, but I did hope that the representatives of the people, like the gentleman from Tennessee, in their anxiety to cause a reduction of the revenue and to dispose of this tariff question, would refuse to make any point of order, since by so refusing we should come to a more speedy conclusion; and I hope still that they will interpose no objection to a vote being taken upon concurrence or non-concurrence with the Senate, except that of requiring the matter to be first discussed in the Committee of the Whole. For I am sure that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLs] will both agree with me that such action on their part would facilitate the termination of this question and the passage of the bill. I am quite sure they would both admit to me, and, with equal frankness, to the House, that they do not expect that reference to the Committee of Ways and Means, if insisted upon by them, will further the passage of the bill. It was with that intent that I begged the other side not to interpose any objection to the speediness of a transaction in the speediness of which they have professed themselves hitherto to be so much interested.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed], the position which he occupies is that he raised the point of order with the certainty that it would be overruled, without any expectation that you would overrule your former decision, and, therefore, simply for the purpose of giving himself and his colleauge on the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. McKinley] an opportunity to make speeches to the country; not for the purpose of operating on your mind, but for the purpose, in this public way, of seeming to play for position and to put the Domocratic side of the House in a false attitude.

It will be borne in mind that on the 2d day of last April the Committee on Ways and Means reported to this House a tariff bill; that it was finally voted upon on the 21st of July; that in the interval no delay was interposed to its consideration by the Democratic side of the House, and that whatever time may have been wasted, if any was House, and that whatever time may have been wasted, if any was wasted, between the 2d day of April, when the bill was reported, and the 21st day of July, when it was voted upon, was by the interposition of gentlemen on the Republican side of the House. That bill went to the Senate on the 21st day of July. It went there under a provision of the Constitution which gives to the House of Representatives primarily not merely the duty but the exclusive right of originating bills raising revenue. The business of the Senate, therefore, was only to amend that bill in accordance with its sense of public duty. It did not do that, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKinley] has frankly admitted. It framed a different bill, based upon different principles, and wholly unlike the bill sent to it by the House, and it is only and purely by a realismentary largerdensing if it he constitutional at all that the Senation of the constitution of the unlike the bill sent to it by the House, and it is only and party parliamentary legerdemain, if it be constitutional at all, that the Senate has constitutionally the power to frame such a bill by doing what is called making "an amendment in the nature of a substitute," That bill of the House having reached the Senate on the 21st day of July, now, on the 25th day of January, yesterday, we received the Senate bill, more than six months after the time when the House sent its bill to the Senate; and now suddenly the gentlemen on the other side, who have always denied that there was any necessity for revision some gentlemen on that side having elaborately shown that there would be no surplus and that the expenditures under Democratic administration would come within a very few millions of eating up the revenue— now suddenly they are found exceedingly anxious for a speedy set-now suddenly they are found exceedingly anxious for a speedy settlement of this question.

The bill which the House passed altered the rates of duty on importations to the amount of $179,000,000, in round numbers, on an aggregate importation of $450,000,000 on which duty was paid. The Senate bill covers all the importations in the country. There are, therefore, importations to the amount of $270,000,000 as to the rates on which this House has not expressed any opinion or taken any vote. In addition, this Senate bill has created new commissions; it has added to the bill various provisions of what was known as the Senate undervaluation bill. On these questions this House has had no opportunity to express its opinion, and has expressed no opinion, has made no vote. The bill as it comes from the Senate changes largely the legislation of this House on questions of internal revenue, and upon those there has been no expression of the House

Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is that the House, without an opportunity to pass upon these amendments or these additions to the present law, these creations of new commissions, these alterations of duties, shall at once send this bill to a conference committee, the report of which committee will be an entirety, the House being given no opportunity to instruct that conference committee, or to vote separately upon the various matters which that conference committee, nominally in the name of the House, will have to decide upon. It seems to me that this is simply a proposition that the House shall not only empty itself of its right in this matter, but that it shall abdicate its duty to consider the question of taxation, both as to external and internal taxation.

As to whether we shall have legislation or not, we must remember that largely the responsibility of failure, if there be failure, will be upon the Senate, which held this bill for six months. But the only road to practical legislation is for this House under its rules to have reported back to its Calendar such bill as may be presented for its consideration by whatever standing committee has by the rules jurisdiction or by the vote of the House may acquire jurisdiction.

Speaking only for myself, if this bill goes to the committee of which I am a member, I shall try so far as I can to see that the bill comes back; that there is reported a bill in accordance with the principles of the bill adopted by the House at the last session; and whether practical legislation shall follow or not will depend largely upon the action of both sides of the House when that bill comes back and is put upon the Calendar.

But for one I am not willing while I am a member of the House to have the precedent made in 1853—I do not mean that part of the precedent that is connected with the change of the rules of the House, about which I have nothing to say—but I am not willing without protest to have the precedent repeated that the Senate of the United States has the right under the guise of a substitute to frame or originate a revenue bill, and practically to take out of the hands of the lower House—first, by the framing of the bill, and, secondly, by holding the bill until so late in the short session and then passing it through under the pretense of shortness of time—the constitutional privilege of the control of the great subject of taxation.

Of course if the gentleman from Ohio is correct, as undoubtedly he is, in saying that the bill of the Senate is an entirely different bill, framed upon different principles from the bill adopted by the House, it is not improper for me to say that in so far as this is true I dis with those changes. In so far as the principles upon which the Mills bill was founded, which were substantially that the revenues of the Government should be decreased and the incidental burdens upon the citizen should also be decreased, have been departed from by the Sencitizen should also be decreased, have been departed from by the Senate and the reverse principle adopted, by which the revenues of the Government are to be decreased that the private aggrandizement and income of those interested in legislation shall be increased, I am heartily opposed to it; and I judge that my Democratic colleagues on this floor agree with that sentiment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided the same question now presented not only in the case of the oleomargarine bill but upon several other occasions; yet it may not be inappropriate to restate briefly the grounds of those decisions.

Prior to the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress all hills remine.

Prior to the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress all bills coming from the Senate, and Senate amendments to House bills, went upon what was called the Speaker's table, which was one of the Calendars of The business on the Speaker's table was reached precisely the House. in the same way as the business upon any other Calendar—by a motion to proceed to its consideration; and when that motion was agreed to by the House the bills and amendments in their regular order were laid before the House, not for reference to a committee, but for immediate consideration, subject, of course, in the case of Senate bills or Senate amendments to House bills making appropriations or creating liabilities on the part of the Government, to the point of order that they must first have consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. So long as that practice continued it was in order for any gentleman, when a Senate amendment was taken up from the Speaker's table, to move to concur or non-concur, as the case might be, subject, as the Chair has stated, to the point of order that the proposition should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if it was a proposition which the rules of the House required to go there.

But at the beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress the Speaker's table, as one of the Calendars of the House, was abolished; and in lieu of that proceeding the House adopted a rule which made it the duty of the Speaker every morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, except on Monday mornings, to lay before the House for reference all bills, amendments, and other communications from the Senate and communications from the heads of Departments; and under that rule the invariable practice has been to send Senate amendments to House bills to the appropriate standing committee of the House, unless unanimous consent was given to concur or non-concur. So the Chair thinks that under that rule this Senate amendment must go to the Committee on Ways and Means, and can not, except by unanimous consent, go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which is one of the House Calendars, until it has been reported back.

On the other point, as to the effect of a request by the Senate for the appointment of a committee of conference before there has been su actual disagreement between the two Houses, the Chair has repeatedly ruled that until there has been an actual vote of disagreement the two Houses the privileged stage of the bill has not been reached, and it can not be taken up for consideration, under the other rule to which the Chair has referred, but must go to the committee.

The Chair has re-examined this rule, and re-examined the practice of the House, and is constrained to adhere to the rulings heretofore made, because the Chair believes it is the only proper practice under the rules which the House itself has established, and which has been the uniform practice ever since they were adopted.

Mr. REED. If no point of order intervened, would the motion to consider this be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it requires unanimous consent, as in another case of the same character this morning, and as it is done almost every morning.

Mr. REED. I ask by unanimous consent to consider the Senate amendment at this time.

Mr. MILLS. I have made the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes; I object.
Mr. McKINLEY. If it is not referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, does it go back to the table?

Mr. ROGERS. There is so much confusion in the House we can not hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKinley] rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKINLEY. In the event of a division on the motion to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee on Ways and Means, in the event the House should vote against sending it to that committee, I inquire what the status would be—whether it would lie on the table or be before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has said in response that it requires no motion under the ruling of the Chair to send the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means; that it goes there under the rules of the House. The only way the House can prevent it from going there is by a vote to send it to another committee. The Chair will read the second clause of Rule XIII. The Chair has already stated that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is one of the Calendars of the House under the rules.

Clause 2 of Rule XIII provides:

2. The question of reference of any proposition other than that reported from a committee—

This is not reported from a committee-shall be decided without debate, in the following order, namely: a standing committee, a select committee;—

Those are the only committees to which the proposition can be referred under the rules of the House when not reported by a committee to the House but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided according to its character, without debate, in the following order, namely: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

So it will be seen that under the rules of the House no proposition can be referred to one of these Calendars until it has been reported by a committee; and if the House simply refuses to send this proposition to the Committee on Ways and Means, it would remain where it now is and would not go on the Calendar.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. DINGLEY. Is there not a distinction between matters which are privileged and matters which are not privileged on coming up? It has been frequently held by the Chair when a bill has reached the stage where there is a difference between the two Houses, although it is presented in connection with other bills coming from the Senate, it is privileged and may be taken up for action. Here is a bill presented under a rule of the House, and my inquiry is whether or not, being a privileged bill, it does not take the same position as a bill reported from the Senate where there is a difference between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. This bill is not privileged under any rule of the House

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. But it has no privilege except that the Committee on Ways and Means has the privilege to report at any time; and after it has been reported and gone to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it has precedence under the rules over other bills.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it has been held that the right to report includes the right to consider.

The SPEAKER. It has not been reported.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been once reported from the Committee on Tays and Means. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
Mr. SPRINGER. Has the bill gone to the Committee on Ways and Ways and Means.

Means? The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to dispose of this matter. Chair thinks under the rule the bill and amendment go to the Committee on Ways and Means, and so decides

Mr. McKINLEY. I desire to offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of bill H. R. 9051, with a Senate amendment, and that said bill and amendment be made a special order to be considered in the House immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday, February 5, 1889; that after twelve hours' debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the question of concurring in the Senate amendment; and that if said amendment shall be non-concurred in, a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses shall be considered as having been ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that that resolution must go to the Committee on Rules; and the further point that the bill is not yet in committee

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And I make the point of or-der that it is not in order, except by unanimous consent, even to offer the resolution.

Mr. McKINLEY. Then I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The regular order, Mr. Speaker, has been demanded Mr. MILLS. several times.

Mr. McKINLEY. Then I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ROGERS. Regular order.
Mr. MILLS. Let it go there.
The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Arkansas as objecting to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. ROGERS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SCOTT. I object.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill with the Senate substitute be ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. That order will be made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. LAWLER, for ten days, on account of a death in his family. To Mr. COTHRAN, for one day, on account of important business. To Mr. Perry, for three days, on account of important business. To Mr. Wilkins, for eight days, on account of important business.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], chairman of the select committee to inquire into the importation of contract laborers, paupers, etc., asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12291, reported from that committee, as well as the report of the committee on the same, be recommitted to the select committee with leave to report at any time.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill reported from the select committee on the importation of pauper labor, etc.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry before that consent is given. Do I understand that leave is asked to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. That is the request.

Mr. DINGLEY. And that will carry with it the right of consideration at any time? The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not object.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. McRAE to print remarks on the bill H. R. 3288, authorizing the settlement of the debt due the United States by the State of Arkansas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now demand the regular order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the regular order, I ask a vote upon Senate bill No. 2091. So far as I am personally concerned I have no desire to discuss the merits of this bill for sonary concerned I have no desire to discuss the merits of this birlior a moment. I am entirely willing to refer gentlemen to the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, found on page 997 of the RECORD of last Saturday. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!" Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will defer his request for the present.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. What is the bill the gentleman from Indiana wants to call up? Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that until after the sundry civil bill is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is right. Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I very cheerfully gave way for the consideration of the appropriation bill, and I would not interrupt its consideration this morning but for the fact that I expect to be away from the House early in the coming week. I do not now desire to consume the attention of the House but for a moment. I am entirely willing that the vote shall be taken without discussion. It is merely a question as to whether the widow of a deceased officer, who performed gallant service for twenty-one years and died in the service, shall have her pension increased from $50 to $75 per month. This officer received complimentary reports from Rosecrans, Pope, and Schofield. That is all there is of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills occupying the same parliamentary status in this House that the one I suppose the gentleman from Indiana desires to call up occupies; and I have no doubt when these bills come to be considered that so far as my vote no doubt when these bills come to be considered that so far as my vote goes it will be found in the affirmative upon some, perhaps all of them; but what I want is that the sundry civil appropriation bill shall have precedence of every other character of legislation at this time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania promise me this, that after the consideration of the appropriation bill, if I shall be absent from the House, which is probable, he will call up this bill for a vote?

Mr. RANDALL. I can not make a promise of that kind, because I am not certain what bill the gentleman wants called up, and whenever I am at liberty I think I am wedded to call up another bill of like character. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I would also like to call up a bill of like char-

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Now, I think we might have disposed of this bill before this time if this controversy had not risen between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand whether the ques-

Mr. RANDALL. I raise it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. We may as well settle it now and here.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House consider the bill the title of which the Clerk will read?

Mr. SPENINGER. Mr. Speaker is it in order to lear the bill on the

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to lay the bill on the table now?

The SPEAKER. Not until the House determines whether it will consider the bill or not.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of this bill?

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

seemed to have it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 85.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have never been an obstructionist, and I hope I never may be. I have served here for nearly twelve years, and I have never filibustered on a single proposition. I do not intend to do it now. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And inasmuch as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dockery] has promised to call this case up in case I shall be absent, I will not demand the yeas and nays, but will depend upon the generosity of the other side. [Applause on but will depend upon the generosity of the other side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

SPRINGER. You will always win, then.

Mr. SPRINGER. You will always win, then.
The SPEAKER. Then the noes have it, and the House refuses to consider the bill.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves to dispense with the morning hour, and asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to file may be permitted to hand them in to the Clerk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS FILED.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's

HARRIET C. HUNTER.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12033) to refer the claim against the United States of Mrs. Harriet C. Hunter to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE KENTUCKY RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11573) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be

PUBLIC PARK IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12136) authorizing and establishing a public park in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PAY AND RETIREMENT OF MATES, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. BOUTELLE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1646) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EUROPEAN GOVERNMENTS AND INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to report favorably from the Committee on Foreign Affairs Senate joint resolution 122, and ask that it be printed and recommitted, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 122, declaring the sense of the Government of the United States in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky to make this report, have it printed, and recommit it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave to report at any time?

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make an inquiry first. Does the right

The SPEAKER. When the report is made it will come up for immediate consideration, subject to the right of any member to raise the question of consideration and the power of the House to determine whether or not it will consider the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will withdraw his objection. It is due to the country, the Senate having spoken in this connection, that the House should likewise be heard.

Mr. McADOO. No member of this House can afford to make objections.

tion to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I was under a misapprehension as to what it was, and I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. KILGORE. If I knew what it was—

Mr. RANDALL. It is a reassertion of the Monroe doctrine.
Mr. KILGORE. Not the Nicaragua Canal bill?
Mr. McCREARY. No, sir.

Mr. COX. I do not make any objection, but I would like to hear from the gentleman from Kentucky at what time he will call this bill up for consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. This is the joint resolution which has passed the Senate almost unanimously, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, was considered by that committee, and has been reported to this House favorably with but one objecting vote; and it should be considered at an early day. It involves important questions that this House ought to consider at an early day; and my object is to get early consideration.

Mr. COX. The sooner the better.

Mr. RANDALL. There ought to be a prompt, firm utterance on the part of this House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would ask how long it will take to consider this resolution?

Mr. McCREARY. There is no reason why it should occupy the House exceeding two hours.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, what is the question before the We can not hear on this side of the House because of the tur-House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, have it printed and recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with leave to report at any time. Is there objection?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Unless the time for consideration be limited to two hours I shall object. If the gentleman having in charge the measure will say that it shall be limited to two hours, I will not object. I regard it as an important matter; but I do not regard it as necessary to talk about it at any great length. This House ought to pass it unanimously, without any hesitation. Therefore discussion to any great length of time is unnecessary.

Mr. McCREARY. It is not our purpose to have a prolonged de-

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think it is of more importance than the gentleman seems to think it is now. It is a new departure in public policy, so far as I understand that policy, and is not a reaffirmation of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it the Edmunds resolution?
Mr. McCREARY. It is the Senate resolution originally introduced by Senator EDMUNDS, which passed the Senate with only three dissenting votes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Reported back favorably?

Mr. McCREARY. Reported back favorably by the Committee on Foreign Affairs

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not intend to object, but I will object if debate is limited on a question here in the House of Representatives that would commit the American Government to a policy of this kind without any real consideration at all.

Mr. McCREARY. It is the desire of the committee to have as full debate as members wish on this important question. I think that when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckinride] comes to examine it carefully he will find that this is not a departure from the Monroe doctrine, but the resolution reaffirms the Monroe doctrine as applied to existing conditions, and certainly the great importance of this subject is such that there ought to be a time fixed for its consideration.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Will it not be in the power of any member of the House to call the previous question upon the resolution when he gets the floor?

The SPEAKER. It will be in his power to demand the previous question, but the House alone can order it. Is there objection to the question, but the House alone can order it. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCreary]?

Mr. HOOKER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it is impossible to now limit the time for this discussion. There are several members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs who desire to be heard upon the question, and also several other members of the House, and it is not possible to specifically limit the debate at this time.

Mr. McCREARY. The time can be fixed when the resolution comes up.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in view of the great urgency of the appropriation bills, I demand the regular order. [Laugh-

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolu-tion of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 12107) to increase the maximum amount of interna-tional money-orders from fifty to one hundred dollars; A bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy;
A bill (H. R. 6783) to place the name of John A. Griffey on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 2686) for the relief of William Knowland; A bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation and crossing of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to meet the demands of increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889; A bill (H. R. 5870) to punish as a felony the carnal and unlawful knowing of any female under the age of sixteen years; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imerial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded and insisted upon.
Mr. HITT. The demand for the regular order is withdrawn.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Gentlemen have assured me that they will come to an agreement on this question in a moment, and, in view of that statement, I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCreary]?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Unless the time is limited I shall object.
A MEMBER. Limit the time to five hours.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No.
Mr. McCREARY. Let it be limited to one day.
Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; three hours is the utmost to which I will consent. There are other matters of importance before this House which are entitled to some consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] suggests, that the debate upon these resolutions be limited to three hours?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that. I think three hours will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made. Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No objection to what, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. To limiting the debate to three hours.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I object to that, Mr. Speaker. Laughter. If there is to be any limitation of the debate I shall object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I demand the regular order. Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, who objected?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] objected, unless there could be an agreement to limit the debate. He suggested that it should be limited to three hours, but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell] objected, and thereupon the regular order was demanded. The regular order is the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to dispense with that.
Mr. RANDALL. Prior to that I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Before that motion is put, I desire to ask consent to have a matter considered when we go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, a joint resolution relating to a payment due to the heirs of Capt. James The consideration of it will take but a little while. I reported the joint resolution yesterday, the report having been prepared by our late associate, Mr. BURNES, and I would like to have consent of the House to dispose of it at this time. It will take but a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the joint resolution to which he refers is not in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and if he desires to have it considered he had better move to discharge that Calendar of the joint resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. Had we not better go on with the appropriation

This will take only a few minutes, and it is a Mr. RANDALL. measure which will effect a saving to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine object? Mr. DINGLEY. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I object. Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know the character of this claim.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has

Mr. CANNON. I think that if the gentleman from Maine understood the nature of the measure he would not object. It is a joint resolution which will effect a saving to the Government of $125,000. Mr. DINGLEY. Then I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The objection is withdrawn and the Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 257) making an appropriation for payment to the legal representatives of James B. Eads.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 to enable the Secretary of War to pay to the legal representatives of James B. Eads half the sum of $1,000,000 retained by the United States under the act of March 3, 1875, to be paid on the expiration of ten years' maintenance of the channel the maximum depth and width as required by said act of March 3, 1875, and subsequent acts.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, when I reported this joint resolution yesterday I secured consent to have printed in the RECORD the accompanying report, so that members might have an opportunity to examine it, and that the time of the House need not be occupied in lengthy discussion of the facts and the law. I now ask to have read-and I ask silence as far as practicable on the part of members-a portion of that report which I think fully sets forth the necessity for this legisla-I will say that while this resolution makes an appropriation of money it does not relieve the heirs of the contractor from responsibil-Payment is not to be made unless in the opinion of the executive officers of the Government the contract on which the appropriation is based has been executed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this the last installment?
Mr. RANDALL. This is the first of two installments of half a million each which it was provided by the terms of the law should be held in reserve, the first for a period of ten years as a guaranty that the terms of the contract as to the width and depth of the channel to be secured should be fully executed. There will be half a million more of money to be paid at the end of twenty years, if the executive officers of the Government should find that the terms of the contract have been fully complied with.

I now ask that the extract to which I have referred, from the report of the committee, be read; and I hope members will give attention.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It appears from the consideration of the act of March 3, 1879:

1. That the act was intended to cover and provide for all payments thereafter to be made by the Government to Mr. Eads on account of the construction of the works at the South Pass and for the securing and maintenance of the channel. The language of the act is that "in lieu of payments" provided by the act of 1875 the following payments should be made, etc.

There is no provision made in the act of 1879 for any other maximum channel than the channel of 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width.

2. The act of 1879 expressly declares that when a channel 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width shall have been secured, the whole of the contract price agreed to be paid to Mr. Eads by the Government, "$5,250,000," should be deemed as earned by Mr. Eads.

If it was the intention of Congress that any other maximum channel should be secured than the modified channel provided by the act of 1879, the amendatory act would certainly not have provided that the total compensation for the work should be deemed as earned until the maximum channel had been obtained.

The fact that by the terms of the act the total compensation for the entire work is declared to be carred when a channel 26 feet deep. 200 feet wide at the volt is the contract of the act that by the terms of the act the total compensation for the entire work is declared to be carred when a channel 26 feet deep. 200 feet wide at the obtained.

the work should be deemed as earned until the maximum channel had been obtained.

The fact that by the terms of the act the total compensation for the entire work is declared to be earned when a channel 25 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width had been secured conclusively shows that that was the maximum channel that Congress intended should be secured.

3. The $1,000,000 held in reserve by the Government was, under the terms of the act of 1875, distinctly to be held as security for maintenance of the maximum channel. Upon the securing of such maximum channel the money was earned, and interest was payable semi-annually to Mr. Eads or his representatives. The act of 1879 contains an express provision that $100,000 a year for a period of twenty years shall be paid to said Eads or his legal representatives in equal quarterly installments to cover the expense of maintaining a channel 25 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width. Can it be possible, in view of this expressed provision defining the character of channel to be maintained, that payment of the $1,000,000 can be held to be conditional upon the maintenance of another and different channel?

4. The act of 1879 expressly provides that when Mr. Eads secured a channel

4. The act of 1879 expressly provides that when Mr. Eads secured a channel 30 feet in depth without regard to width the sum of $500,000 should be paid, and that the remaining $1,000,000, held in pledge as security by the Government, should be paid "at the time and in the manner" provided by the act of

This provision applies only to the matter of payment. It has no relation to the condition of the channel. The payments were to be made at the times—what times? At the expiration of ten and twenty years after the modified channel was secured, and in the manner—what manner? Upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of War upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

The language means no more than this, and to hold that the word "manner" should be construed as referring to widths and depths of channel would seem to be a distortion of the language of the act and a clear violation of the intention of Congress.

5. For nearly ten years the Government of the United States has been paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum to James B. Eads, and since his death to his legal representatives, by way of interest on the $1,000,000 held as security for the maintenance of the channel, and the channel thus maintained has been the modified channel provided for in the act of 1879, to wit, a channel 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width. To now place such a construction upon the acts as would prevent the payment of $500,000 of the $1,000,000 upon the maintaining of such channel for a period of ten years would necessarily involve the conclusion that large sums of money heretofore paid to Mr. Eads were improperly paid. All of these payments have been made upon the theory that Congress intended by the act of 1879 to reduce the maximum channel required to be secured by the act of 1875. Several Attorneys-General of the United States have considered the question arising from the payments of installments of interest on this $1,000,000, and in no case has it been questioned that Mr. Eads was entitled to receive this interest money upon the maintenance of the modified channel.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that under one section of the statute the Government is obligated, in case the contract is complied with, to either make payment in money, or in default of that, the Government is compelled to issue ten-year bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest. If the Government were driven to the necessity of issuing such bonds, it would incur a loss of somewhere between $125,000 and $150,-000, according as the premium on such bonds might be from 25 per cent. to 30 per cent., which I think a fair estimate.

Mr. LONG. In other words, if we pay in eash, the Government gets off $125,000 cheaper than if we pay by bonds.

Mr. RANDALL. If we pay in cash we pay $500,000; if we pay in bonds, having ten years to run and bearing 5 per cent. interest, we pay what is equivalent to $625,000 or $650,000.

Mr. LONG. That is to say, we save $125,000 by passing this bill

Mr. RANDALL. At least that amount.

Mr. LONG. Then it would hardly seem worth while to read anything more in demonstration of the propriety of passing the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether by the failure of Congress on a former occasion to make an appropriation Mr. Eads did not actually receive bonds which were above par?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the fact, if I remember correctly.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the fact, if I remember correctly. The gentleman from Georgia himself had charge of that matter, and he endeavored to pass a bill here—

Mr. BLOUNT. The bill did pass in this House.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman endeavored to pass here and succeeded in getting passed a bill providing for the payment of money instead of bonds. Somehow or other the Senate failed to act upon the gentleman's proposition; and the actual result was, as the gentleman, I suppose, remembers, that bonds were issued instead of money in part payment of the amount due under this contract; and the Government was thereby subjected if I remember aright to an additional exment was thereby subjected, if I remember aright, to an additional expense of $80,000 or $90,000. I presume the gentleman recollects the circumstances, as he had a closer connection with the matter than I had at that time

Mr. BLOUNT. I only desired to call attention to it, as I thought the facts in that case illustrated the force of the proposition which the gentleman from Pennsylvania now makes.

Mr. RANDALL. They do; and the case now presented is precisely similar—"on all fours" with the case referred to by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer me a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly I will, if I can.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Personally I know nothing about this matter, though much has been said about it in the newspapers. I desire to inquire whether it is certain that this contract has been so completely complied with that there can be no question as to the liability of the Government for the payment of this money?

Mr. RANDALL. In answer to that I want to say that this bill if it becomes a law only makes the money available, and that the duty and responsibility still rest with the War and the Treasury Departments in that connection to see that the contract has been faithfully executed.

Mr. FORNEY. Up to date,
Mr. RANDALL. Yes, up to date; and I want to say and make public here, in order that the executive officers of the Government may know that in passing a bill making this money available neither the House nor Congress takes any responsibility in any manner of seeing that the contract has been executed. That must be left and is left absolutely with the Departments.

But I wish to add somewhat for the general information of the House that under the act of 1879 the original contract for a width of 350 feet of channel was changed to a width of 200 feet with 26 to 30 feet depth. That change was made, I think, by the act of 1879, so that the bill has been so drawn, and the fact so stated in the report, that the Departments of this Government having the payment of this money shall not conclude by this act of ours that they are released from the least degree of responsibility incumbent upon them in connection with the matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask further if, from the information in the possession of the Committee on Appropriations, the committee have any doubt of the fulfillment of the

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to commit myself or the committee in that regard or in any respect beyond the mere placing of the money, making it available to execute the governmental side of that arrange-As to the fulfillment of the contract, that question is left to the parties who disburse the money. Because I do not want to have the executive officers of this Government to lean back, when they come to pay out the money, on Congress, and say in any manner that Congress has determined that this contract had been complied with.

Mr. LONG. . If I may be permitted to state this, the bonds will be available at any rate, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania now desires that the cash may be ready.

Mr. RANDALL. The bonds will be available without further action. The law provides:

SEC. —. That the option of discharging the obligations herein assumed by the United States, either in money or bonds, is expressly reserved, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue the bonds of the United States, bearing 5 per cent. interest, of the character and description set out in the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the public debt," approved July 14, 1870, to said Eads, or his legal representatives, in payment, at par, of the aforesaid warrants of the Secretary of War, unless the Congress of the United States shall have previously provided for the payment of the same by the necessary appropriations of money.

I now read the law under which these bonds would be issued if the money was not paid:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, in a sum or sums not exceeding in the aggregate $200,000,000, coupon or registered bonds of the United States, in such form as he may prescribe, and of denominations of $50, or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in coin of the present standard value, at the pleasure of the United States, after ten years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest, payable semi-annually in such coin, at the rate of 5 per cent, per annum.

Mr. WEAVER. But they can not pay in bonds if we make the cash available.

Mr. LONG. No; they must pay in cash; and the object of appropriating the money now is to save the difference, which will be about $100,000.

Mr. RYAN. We want the cash available so that the Department may pay in cash instead of bonds.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who is familiar with

Mr. KERR. Is there not a report in existence to the effect that only

Mr. RERR. Is there not a report in existence of the effect that $250,000 was due this party?
Mr. RANDALL. No. Under the terms of the original contract $500,000 was held back for ten years, and there is another $500,000 for twenty years, so that the channel and the width of channel prescribed shall be retained in width and depth for that time.

No. DVAN. That is the reserve or indemnity fund.

Mr. RYAN. That is the Mr. RANDALL. Yes. That is the reserve or indemnity fund.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, in 1875 the Government of the United States, by legal enactment, made a contract with James B. Eads by which he undertook to secure, for the stipulated compensation of $5,250,000, a maximum depth of 30 feet depth of water at the South Pass of the Mississippi River, with a width of 350 feet. After pursuing the work of the construction of the jetties for several years and attaining various depths which he had undertaken in his contract to obtain, Captain Eads came to Congress in 1879 and asked a modification of the law of 1875. The matter underwent at that time a thorough examination and investigation in both Houses of Congress, and the result was that the modification asked by Eads was granted by the passage of an act amending the act of 1875.

The modification was this, that instead being obliged to attain a channel 30 feet deep by 350 feet in width, Eads was to attain a channel 26 feet in depth by 200 feet in width with a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width.

Now, from the time of the completion of the jetties to the present time, say ten years, or it will be ten years in September of this year, this channel of 26 feet depth and 200 feet width, with a central depth of 30 feet without regard to width, has been maintained. How has it been ascertained that it has been maintained? Mr. Speaker, the War Department has had for ten years and has now at the jetties, near the mouth of the river, an engineer officer whose duty it is to report monthly to the Secretary of War the depth of water in the jetty channel and as to whether or not Mr. Eads and his associates are maintaining the channel according to the requirements of his contract with The monthly reports of this engineer officer show the Government. that a channel of the requisite depth and width has been maintained constantly, and upon these reports there has been paid Mr. Eads by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of War the annual compensation of $100,000, stipulated for in the contract, for maintaining the channel at the width and depth named.

Also, Mr. Speaker, based upon these monthly reports, there has been paid to Mr. Eads the 5 per cent. interest which the contract provides shall be paid to him annually upon the $1,000,000 reserved as security for the maintenance of the channel during the period of twenty years. So that the executive department of the Government has for years acted upon the conviction that the Eads contract has been completed in full by him, and the $1,000,000 held in reserve as aforesaid earned. That $1,000,000 was to be paid, one half in ten years and the other half in twenty years.

The first installment of half a million dollars will be due in September, and it is stipulated in the contract with Eads that in the event this million dollars, maturing in two installments, payable in ten and twenty years, is not paid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon issue the 5 per cent. bonds of the United States to Mr. Eads and his associates at par for the amount of the defaulted payment. We all know that the 5 per cent, bonds of the Government of the United States are worth from 25 to 30 per cent, premium.

So that if there be default on the part of Congress in making this appropriation all that the representatives of Mr. Eads would have to do would be to go to the Secretary of the Treasury and demand the bonds, and there is no discretion on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse to issue them.

Mr. BLOUNT. And he has done that once.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, as I am reminded by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], Congress did once default in making the necsary appropriation to meet a portion of the indebtedness due Mr. Eads, and the latter demanded and received from the then Secretary of the Treasury the bonds of the United States covering the amount due him. The law on that subject, which I have here, is as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue the bonds of the United States bearing 5 per cent, interest, of the character and description set out in the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the public debt," approved July 14, 1870, to said Eads or his legal representatives, in payment of the various warrants of the Secretary of War, unless the Congress of the United States shall have previously provided for the payment of the same by the necessary appropriation of money.

Mr. Speaker, this is simply a business proposition. Will Congress provide the money, or default and thereby enable the legal representatives of Mr. Eads to demand the bonds?

It will really be of great advantage to the legal representatives of Mr. Eads if this money be not appropriated, as the bonds are worth probably from 25 to 30 per cent. premium; and by their issuance a bonus of about $150,000 will be received by the Eads interest. Common business sagacity and prudence suggest that the money be provided and the issuance of the bonds obviated.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. KERR. I want to call attention to a provision. I see that there has been a former report of the Chief of Engineers to the effect that Eads was only entitled to $250,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that there is any such report in this connection; but if there is, the officers of the Government have no authority to pay beyond what will be due.

Mr. KERR. But the officers have already committed themselves and put themselves on record, because they say it is due. So that is in effect no safeguard at all.

The question was then taken upon ordering the previous question, and on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution had been passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, before going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I move to limit debate on the irrigation amendment to one hour, not to include the time given to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. SYMES. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I control the time in favor of the measure.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I am a fair representative for the distribution of the time in this connection. I have the right to say individually that I did not favor this amendment in the committee in the absence of any mature plans being made by the Committee on Public Lands; but I think that the House can safely rely upon the Chair to make distribution of the time fairly be-tween the two sides. I represent the committee, and shall do it with the two sides. I represent the committee, and shart do it with fidelity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would desire to divide the time equally between the friends and opponents of the amendment.

Mr. SYMES. I shall want about fifteen minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer that the Chair would see that the time is properly divided between the friends and the opponents of the measure, if it has any opponents. I may want a little time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to see that the time is divided equally.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last evening, I was proceeding to explain the map before us, which represents a topographic survey and an irrigation survey made during the months of October and November last, under the personal supervision of Professor Powell. It represents the survey of the irrigation district on the Jemez River or Creek, in the Territory of New Mexico. As I said yesterday, the blue patches upon this map or plat represent the reservoirs. The black meandering line represents the proposed irrigating canal. The red lines below represent and surround the different townships of land, including 155,000 acres, which can be irrigated from these reservoirs.

Mr. Chairman, we have here a practical illustration of what we said could be done last summer if the House would pass the irrigation-survey bill which we asked at that time, namely: We have here the waters of this creek utilized by this survey made in last October and November; we have the sites of these reservoirs reserved from public sale; we have 155,000 acres of land which has been classified as irrigable land and made susceptible of irrigation by that survey. In that connection let me say, Mr. Chairman, that we have here utilized a great many thousand dollars of expenditures heretofore made which would have been practically thrown away but for the passage of the act which we insisted upon last summer.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion at that point?

Mr. SYMES. I can not; I have so little time. Mr. Chairman, there had been a topographic survey extended over the country on the headwaters of this stream in New Mexico, so that the Government engineers, in making this irrigation survey, commenced with their field-notes where the topographic surveyors left off surveying some years ago, and they only had to run the contour lines and lay their levels, and locate these natural sites for reservoirs.

In addition to that they only had to run the line of the proposed irrigating canal and then go below and locate the lands which were made susceptible of irrigation. So we have presented here a practical illustration of the large irrigating district surveyed, as I have said, during the months of October and November last, made irrigable by utilizing a great many thousand dollars' worth of the topographic survey which was made before but was of no especial practical benefit until it was followed by the additional irrigation survey. This Jemez River, from the point on the map where my cane now rests, at Silla, down to the Rio Grande River, is lost in the sand and is nothing but a dry ravine during the dry or irrigating season; so that the waters in these reservoirs, which gather all the waters of this stream in the mountains and make susceptible of irrigation 150,000 acres of land, could never be utilized otherwise for any purpose upon earth, because they are lost in the sand during the irrigating season.

Mr. Chairman, there was a settlement found upon the Jemez River, Mr. Chairman, there was a settlement found upon the Jemez River, where the Pueblo Indians irrigated in 1530, when the Spaniards first marched through that country. A settlement of Spaniards was made on this river in 1710, and they utilized all the waters of the stream that they could practically use for irrigation purposes without having storage reservoirs, and were able to irrigate from the waters of that stream only 2,700 acres of land. Now this irrigation survey, by the creation of the storage reservoirs, reclaims and makes irrigable 155,000 acres. The waters of the Jemez River or Creek in New Mexico are utilized by this survey for the reclamation of 155,000 acres of land, and the inby this survey for the reclamation of 155,000 acres of land, and the industry of man for two centuries previous had been able to irrigate from that stream only 2,700 acres.

Mr. Chairman, the inquiry may be made, how are the irrigating engineers able to report that there can be irrigated from these reservoirs by the utilization of this water 155,000 acres of land? Let me explain that. Major Powell has invented a unit for the measurement of water in reservoirs for irrigation. He has reduced it to what is called an "acre foot" of irrigating water. An "acre foot" of irrigating water means a body or sheet of water 1 acre in area and 12 inches in depth; or it represents a body or sheet of water 12 inches in thickness and containing 160 square rods in area; or, if you want to figure it as the hydraulic engineers have figured it heretofore, it represents 43,560 cubic feet of water. This acre, or this foot of irrigating water, will irrigate annually 1 acre of land. The average number of inches of water in depth required for irrigation on ordinary lands in an ordinary arid region is 12 inches. In some places, on account of the dryness and the character of the soil, it requires from 16 to 18 inches. In some places, on account of the dampness of the soil and the partial humidity of the climate, it requires only 6 inches.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SYMES. Well, I think I am entitled to further time in order to finish my remarks. The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be recognized further.

There was no objection. Mr. SYMES. This, Mr. Chairman, presents a practical illustration. A storage reservoir that is 5 acres in area and 20 feet deep holds water enough to irrigate 100 acres of land. Of course certain allowance must be made for evaporation. In the latitude where these reservoirs are located the evaporation is very little. When the water reaches reservoirs way down upon the plains at lower altitudes the evaporation is much greater.

Mr. Chairman, it is not for me to criticise appropriations which have been for many years reported by the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and his colleagues on that committee; yet as there is objection to appropriating the sum of $250,000 for this valuable work to utilize the public domain of the Government, to reserve from the hands of grasping monopoly the sites for irrigating reservoirs, and to prevent extortion being practiced upon the millions of people who will in the future settle that country, I may be permitted to compare the appropriations in this bill for the Geological Survey, as respects their utility, with the appropriation asked for this particular purpose.

We find in this bill, as we have found in previous years, an appropriation of $40,000 for ethnological researches among the North American Indians. Now, as a branch of pure science, it is an interesting question to ascertain whether the mound-builders of the Middle and Western States are related in affinity, consanguinity, or in some other way to the ancient cave-dwellers of New Mexico; but I submit when we take into consideration the utilitarian value of that appropriation, the $250,000 here asked will be of more benefit to the people of the great West and the teeming millions who in the future will inhabit the arid regions of the United States than many millions expended to determine whether the mound-builder is the relative of a cave-dweller in the mountains.

There is also appropriated in this bill $40,000 for paleontologic researches carried on by Professor Marsh, the great comparative anatomist, who, as illustrated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HER-BERT], has attempted to determine whether a certain fossil bird had one or two teeth in the cycle of centuries passed, when he was alive on the surface of this globe, before the days of Adam. While I am not criticising those appropriations, while I think this great Government can afford to carry on these interesting researches, yet certainly if I should take my choice between the two propositions I would wipe out the appropriation of $80,000 for pure theoretical science and I would expend the amount in making irrigation surveys that shall add to the value of the Government domain and shall conduce to the comfort and prosperity of the millions that will hereafter settle this great country. We can afford to appropriate for both.

Again, Mr. Chairman, we have $6,000,000 appropriated or to be appropriated for a Library building out here in front of the Capitol that is to rival buildings of that character in the Old World. I would have a good Library building; but at the same time, if we have not money enough for all these appropriations, I would certainly survey the public domain; I would segregate these reservoir sites and reserve them; I would classify and reserve this public domain for the benefit of our people in the future.

This appropriation is indorsed by the President. He says on page 26 of his last annual message:

Nor should our vast tracts of so-called desert lands be yielded up to the monopoly of corporations or grasping individuals, as appears to be much the tendency under the existing statute. These lands require but the supply of water to become fertile and productive. It is a problem of great moment how most wisely for the public good that factor shall be furnished. I can not but think it perilous to suffer either these lands or the sources of their irrigation to fall into the hands of monopolies, which by such means may exercise lordship over the areas dependent on their treatment for productiveness. Already steps have been taken to secure accurate and scientific information of the conditions, which is the prime basis of intelligent action. Until this shall be gained the course of wisdom appears clearly to lie in a suspension of further disposal which only promises to create rights antagonistic to the common interest. No harm can follow this cautionary conduct. The land will remain, and the public good presents no demand for hasty dispossession of national ownership and control.

The Secretary of the Interior specially recommends it. He says:

In the last annual report of this Department to the President, which has already been laid before the Congress, I had the honor to submit briefly the expression of my opinion of the desirability and importance of prosecuting the investigating surveys begun under the appropriation in the act referred to, and I think the facts exhibited by the report now presented lend additional sanction to the suggestions then made. I beg leave to earnestly recommend favorable action, with a view to the early development of a scientific system of irrigation and wise legislation for the utilization of the desert lands.

The Director of the Geological Survey reports as follows upon the field-work done since the passage of the act of last session:

field-work done since the passage of the act of last session:

In obedience to the provisions of the above statute, steps were immediately taken to commence the work of an irrigation survey of the arid region of the United States. Before the passage of the act Congress had called upon the honorable Secretary of the Interior for general plans and estimates, and under the instruction of the Secretary the Director of the Geological Survey had outlined the scope of the work and delineated in brief the results that might be expected to follow. He further made an estimate of the total cost and of the amount which it was thought could be wisely expended during the first year's operations. These reports were published by Congress, and constitute Senate Executive Documents Nos. 13 and 163, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

TOPOGRAPHIC WORK.

The necessary topographic work was placed under the charge of A. H. Thompson. A number of topographers already employed in the Geological Survey were selected as his chief assistants, and the force was largely increased by the employment of temporary field assistants, but no increase of the permanent corps was made. Under the direction of Professor Thompson the following-described work has been done:

WORK IN MONTANA.

Work was commenced on the continental divide at the headwaters of the Columbia and Missouri Rivers early in October, one party surveying on the Columbin River side and another on the Missouri River side.

The whole was under the immediate charge of Mr. E. M. Douglas. An area of 2,200 square miles has been surveyed. The topographic features of this country were delineated, the courses of the streams and the sites of all considerable bodies of water were ascertained, and the altitude, position, and general character of irrigable lands were determined. This is a region of abundant perennial streams, and many sites favorable for the establishment of storage reservoirs have been discovered.

WORK IN NEVADA.

WORK IN NEVADA Early in November Mr. H. M. Wilson, with the parties under his immediate charge, previously engaged on topographic work in the gold-belt region of Central California, was transferred to Nevada, near the headwaters of the Truckee, Carson, and Walker Rivers, and immediately began the work of an irrigation survey. This is a region where mountain waters are in great abundance, but where lands to which they can be economically conveyed are limited in extent, Up to the present time the survey of an area of about 800 square miles has been completed. Work will be continued as late into the winter as the season will permit and resumed early in the spring of 1889.

WORK IN COLORADO.

WORK IN COLORADO.

In the latter part of October, and immediately on the passage of the act, a party in charge of Mr. Anton Karl commenced work on the South Platte River. The season was too far advanced to enter the mountain region, so the survey was confined to the foot-hills and the plains extending eastward, embracing the city of Denver and a portion of the great agricultural district of Colorado. About 1,400 square miles have been surveyed.

In this region the waters of the South Platte are already employed in the irrigation of many districts, and the entire volume of the river during the irrigating season is utilized in serving the lands for agricultural purposes. The future development of agriculture in this country is dependent partly upon such an improved construction of irrigating works as will prevent waste and loss, but chiefly upon the construction of reservoirs to hold the waters which through the remainder of the year now flow to the sea without performing their duty to agriculture. The topographic work in this region is now suspended, as it can not be economically carried on in winter, but it will be resumed in the spring.

Early in October a large party, under charge of Mr. W. D. Johnson, was sent to Colorado to operate in the valley of the Arkansas, and work is being prosecuted with vigor. An area of about 1,500 square miles has been surveyed. It embraces some regions which have already been redeemed by irrigation, but which can be further developed by better utilization of the great flow of the Upper Arkansas and by the storage of waters in the higher mountains and the foot-hills. The upper portion of the Arkansas, unlike that of the South Platte is well adapted to this purpose, as there are many valleys, morainal lakes, and basins that can be economically utilized for storage basins. On the South Platte much of the stored waters must be held in lakes created in the foot-hills and on the plains, while the waters of the diverse created in the foot-hills and on the plains, while the waters of th

WORK IN NEW MEXICO.

WORK IN NEW MEXICO.

At the time of the passage of the act above mentioned parties under Mr. A. P. Davis were at work in New Mexico making topographic surveys of certain mountain regions. These surveys were on methods adapted to the purposes of the irrigation investigation, and it was therefore only necessary to enlarge the scale and extend the work into districts of irrigable lands. The entire work of the season is therefore available. The region embraced is that drained by the Jemez River and other tributaries of the Rio Grande rising in the Tewan group of mountains. The most northern river of this series is the Chama, which has its confluence with the Rio Grande above Santa Fé. The most southern is the Puerco, having its confluence with the Rio Grande below Albuquerque, and between these rivers the Jemez and other streams join the Rio Grande. At the writing of this report an area in this region has been surveyed topographically having an extent of about 6,000 square miles.

From the above it will be seen that, although the act for the irrigation survey was not signed until October, and the season favorable for surveys in middle latitude was almost past, yet the work was immediately pushed with vigor, so that at the close of the calendar year five considerable tracts of country have been surveyed—one in Montana, another in Nevada, a third in the Platte Valley of Colorado, a fourth in the Arkansas Valley of Colorado, and the fifth in the drainage basin of the Rio Grande, in New Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to discuss this subject of irri-

Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to discuss this subject of irrigation for the next few hours, but time, which seems always to be the most valuable thing in the House of Representatives when an important measure is up, admonishes me that I must close. I do not think that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee will object to this increase of $100,000, which makes the aggregate appropriation at this time $250,000, when the President of the United States has indorsed the measure, when the Secretary of the Interior has made an estimate and asks for $350,000. We are asking for $100,000 less than the Secretary of the Interior insists should be appropriated.

Mr. Chairman, the land-grabbers are still abroad in the West. song that has been sung by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] for ten years in this Hall against the land-grabbers still leaves them at large, to use the pre-emption law to secure for corporations these natural reservoir sites, which ought to be reserved for the benefit of the people at large. The gentlemen have not been able, it seems—I do not say they are to blame for it, but suffice it to say they have not been able to bring about legislation to prevent these sites for reservoirs and these irrigable lands from being land-grabbed in the future. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that $100,000 additional, making the appropriation $250,- 000, be granted for this great and beneficent purpose.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have a right to say that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I did not favor the insertion of this item, because I did not believe I was sufficiently informed, nor, in my judgment, was the committee sufficiently informed, to justify us in entering upon further expenditure in this direction. The Senate at the last session of Congress inserted a paragraph looking to the prosecution of this work, and in that paragraph made provision for the expenditure of $100,000. It came to the House and was concurred in.

The proposition that comes now from the Chief of the Geological Bureau is a request for $350,000 to be used in this direction. mittee, by a vote, directed me to report this amendment, which provides for $150,000. This paragraph, in my judgment, contains no restraint whatever upon the officer as to the manner of the expenditure, or as to when, where, or how it shall be expended.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. In the act passed last summer, on the amendment adopted here in the House, offered by the gentleman from Kentucky

[Mr. Breckinkings] and prepared by myself, it does require—and a very wise provision in fact, and one that should have been in all the acts heretofore providing for the Geological Survey—a report of how much of this money is used, the manner in which it is used in the field, and what proportion of it is thus used, and what for office purposes. So that I think the gentleman's criticism in that respect is not entirely accurate, and this fund can not be eaten up here in Washington.

Mr. RANDALL. Still that is not a restraint of such character as I think ought to rest on an expenditure of the public money confided to an officer of the Government.

Now, it may be-I do not want to be understood as arbitrarily committed against this work-it may be a very wise provision, but I do think that its friends should recognize the fact that before entering upon the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars

Mr. McMILLIN. Millions of dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. My friend from Tennessee says millions of dollars.

Mr. McMILLIN. They say so themselves.
Mr. RANDALL. That before entering upon such an expenditure, whatever it may be, we should have some foundation or basis of law covering the subject. I quite sympathize with those gentlemen representing the arid region of this western country in their efforts to secure irrigation; but I do not know that anything is very pressing in that direction, especially in view of the fact that all of the public lands that are arable have not yet been taken up, and that there are many hundreds of thousands of acres of good land still available.

Mr. SYMES. Not of arable lands. They are nearly all exhausted, and the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma will open up the only arable lands that are available.

Mr. RANDALL. I heard it asserted in committee, but there were no facts or records to substantiate it or make the statement good.

Mr. SYMES. The records could not do it. It would have to be done by some gentleman familiar with the matter and the land laws.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; by the ipse dixit of some one, I presume.
Mr. SYMES. No; but by the Land Office records.
Mr. RANDALL. That, Mr. Chairman, is all I desired to say. I wanted to act in good faith, and yet I wanted to have myself understood, which is not perhaps a matter of very great importance to others, but is to myself.

Will the gentleman allow a further interrogatory, Mr. SYMES.

which I think will throw some light upon the question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether or not any report has been made or required upon the $200,000 annually appropriated for the topographic survey; and whether they have not been at liberty to expend it wherever they saw fit, for any survey they thought fit, and that we did not know when we made the appropriation to what purpose they were going to apply it, so far as the particulars of the survey were concerned? Mr. RANDALL. In answer to the gentleman I will state that I have uniformly complained of that feature myself.

Mr. SYMES. I am glad to hear it, for I think it is a matter susceptible of complaint.

Mr. RANDALL. But because we have been guilty of laches in one particular it does not operate as an excuse or a reason for entering into another impropriety.

Mr. SYMES. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I have been complaining of not having the provisions covering the Geological Survey and the amount of work in the field more clearly defined.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to hear my colleague who has charge of this bill speak so strongly of his fidelity to his committee in this matter, and yet I think the House will hardly gather from his remarks anything whatever in favor of the proposition which is reported in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you not think it is the privilege of those who favor a measure in committee to speak in its behalf on the floor of the House?

Mr. RYAN. I think that fidelity to his committee would require him to represent his committee and not his own individual views and opinions

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I never heard that doctrine enunciated be-If it had been applied to me, I should certainly kick. [Laughfore. ter.

Mr. REED. I have never seen it carried into practice, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania.

I did not understand the claim that my friend made of fidelity to his committee, unless he intended to advocate, as the representative of his committee, the proposition as reported in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I am able to say that in the committee, on a yeaand-nay vote, my vote is there recorded against this proposition, as the gentleman knows; and to say that I should come in here simply because I happened to be on the floor in charge of a general bill. I happened to be on the floor in charge of a general bill which contains two thousand subjects, and advocate on the floor what I have voted against in the committee, would be an incongruity that I do not expect to be guilty of.

Mr. RYAN. I do not expect the gentleman to be guilty of any incongruity. I was only curious to know where fidelity to his committee appears in his remarks on this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope to be able to say what I am in favor of. Mr. REED. You favor those you want and are against those you

Mr. RANDALL. That is very ungenerous and very untrue.
Mr. RYAN. As reference has been made to the action of the committee, I will state that while-

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman permit me there

Mr. RYAN. I have only a short time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. HERBERT. I understood the time was given between the ad-ocates and those who were opposed to the amendment. I ask whether the gentleman is occupying time as an opponent of the measure?

Mr. RYAN. No, sir; I am in favor of the measure.

Mr. HERBERT. That is all I wanted to ask.

Mr. RYAN. In speaking of the committee I will say it is true that my colleague recorded himself against it in committee. It is equally true that the committee was overwhelmingly for it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I regard this as one of the most important propositions that have come before Congress; one that involves the welfare of the people of this country for all time to come. Four-tenths of the area of the United States and Territories, exclusive of Alaska, are dependent wholly upon artificial irrigation. After careful calculation by those best informed it has been determined that 15 per cent. of that can be irrigated and utilized for the purposes of agriculture; that by that means ten hundred millions of acres which to-day in their present condition can not be utilized for the good of mankind for any purpose can be opened for Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. But they will fall a prey to the monopolists who supply the water.

Mr. RYAN. To utilize these lands and to make them suitable for homes for the increasing millions of our population seems to me among the higher duties of statesmanship; and it is high time that Congress inaugurated a system that shall take that land and place it in a position where it shall be absolutely safe and absolutely secure for homes for our own people in the future, and not allow it to drift along until it shall finally fall into the hands of speculators.

Mr. Chairman, I can not discuss the merits of this question in five minutes, but I may add that lands cultivated under artificial irrigation are always the most desirable and the most valuable. Sometimes they produce a double crop, but always a certain crop, and consequently when these lands are placed in a condition where they can be utilized for the purposes of agriculture they become the most valuable and the most desirable in the United States. I therefore believe it to be the duty, and a solemn one, incumbent upon the membership of this body here and now to make such an appropriation as may be necessary to carry on this great work in the interest of our people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I shall only occupy a few moments in this debate. When this scheme was first put forward, at the last session of the present Congress, it was discussed somewhat fully. It was then contended by those of us who opposed it, and I think it will appear more and more clearly from year to year as we progress in this matter, that the appropriation of $100,000 then made was simply the inauguration of a vast scheme of expenditure, the like of which has nowhere yet appeared in all the past history of this Government, although we have in many things been very extravagant.

It was said at the time by the advocates of the measure that the purpose was simply to make a survey and map out sites in order to put it in the power of private enterprise to reclaim these arid lands. I contended then, as other gentlemen did, that the real purpose of those who are advocating this scheme was that the Government should undertake this scheme. I opposed it, not because irrigation was useless, but because of its extravagance and of its injustice.

I know, and no man can successfully deny, that wonderful results have followed irrigation in many of the countries of the world. There can be no doubt that in our arid regions millions of acres of land can be redeemed, but it will require the expenditure of tens and hundreds of millions of dollars. We can add vastly to the products of that portion of the country; but are we ready to tax the people living in the Eastern States and in the Southern States for the benefit of this great scheme of reclaiming, or rather of improving by irrigation, that vast western domain?

I am opposed to the principle which lies at the foundation of this heme. To tax one for the benefit of another is radically wrong, and that is just exactly what this scheme means if the Government is to improve these lands. It is not a public improvement. It is not for the benefit of all. It is not to create something for the public use. It is to tax the people of the East to fertilize the lands in the West. Many of these lands are now private property. All of them will become pri-vate in the future and that without any compensation to the Government for its expenditure upon them. In fact, the amendment applies alike to public and private lands. What right, sir, has this Government to tax me to ditch the water off of or to ditch it on to the lands of another? We began last year with an appropriation of $100,000. Now the proposition is $150,000, as reported by the committee, and I believe the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] proposes to amend that so as to make the amount $250,000.

It was precisely in this way that the Geological Survey began. When all the surveys in the western country, four in number, were consolidated and wiped out of existence and one new survey erected upon their ruin, with Major Powell (the gentleman who is back of this their ruin, with Major Fowell (the gentleman who is back of this scheme) at its head, the appropriation for the first year was $100,000 or $125,000. That was about twelve or fifteen years ago (I speak from memory, not having lately referred to the figures); but the appropriations ran on from year to year, jumping up from $100,000 to $200,000 and $300,000, until now well-nigh three-quarters of a million of dollars are expended every year by the Geological Survey.

The expenditure embraces reseaches in paleontology, as the gentleman from Colorado says, and it embraces general discussions of geology.

from Colorado says, and it embraces general discussions of geology. The whole of that scheme is built upon a few simple words contained in an appropriation bill. It all rests upon the words "the construc-tion of a geological map of the United States." Upon this little phrase this vast bureau has been built up, and it has gone on, as I have said, until now it costs nearly $700,000 a year. So big has that bureau come to be that its chief is here asking for a public building to hold it. Here he is, too, having gotten $100,000 last session, demanding an appropriation of $350,000 for the present year.

Where is this thing to stop? How much will it all cost? I think that any gentleman who will take the figures that have been furnished here in the last debate and look them over and see how much of this land there is and how difficult it is to irrigate, and who will remember that Major Powell said before the committee that many of these waters would have to be carried as far as 40, 50, or a greater number of miles before they could be utilized—I think that any gentleman who will consider these facts will be appalled at the prospect which this scheme presents. Remember that for years the people in this arid region have been using all of this water that was convenient. irrigated every foot of land that they could afford to put the water on. Now, the Government is asked to step in and do what private individuals can not do-enter upon a scheme of carrying water hundreds of miles to irrigate millions of acres of land. Why, sir, I estimate that this scheme, if carried out, will cost more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman pardon me there? Mr. HERBERT. Yes, for a question.

Mr. SYMES. Does any act that is proposed to be passed, or that has been passed, commit the Government to conveying this water, or digging irrigating canals or building dams? Not at all. It is committed only to a survey of the public domain.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied five minutes, but as all the time has not been appropriated the Chair will recognize the gentleman for two minutes longer.

Mr. HERBERT. In reply to the gentleman from Colorado I say in the first place that the language of this act is very much broader than the language of the act under which Major Powell has already expended upon the geological survey seven or eight million dollars; and it can be much more rationally construed to cover this whole scheme than the words which were put into that legislation can be construed to justify paleontological discussions or geological discussions or the erection of such a bureau as we now have here; and the amendment proposes to leave the Chief of the Geological Survey just as the appropriations in the other case left him, to construe the act for himself and spend the money as he pleases.

But, Mr. Chairman, the argument made in behalf of this measure, the speech of the gentleman from Colorado himself who asked me this question, the speech of the gentleman from Kansas—in fact every argument that is made in favor of this proposition proceeds upon the idea that private enterprise can not and will not do this thing, and therefore the Government must. I ask the gentleman from Colorado himself to answer me this question yes or no: Does he believe that if we make this appropriation the Government will never do anything else than conduct the survey?

Mr. SYMES. It never would, if I could control the matter. On my theory of what the Government ought to do, this matter will be turned over by force of circumstances to the States where there are irrigating bureaus, and the work the Government may now do will be hereafter utilized by those States. I am simply asking the Government to add to the value of its own property by surveying it and preventing it from being "land-grabbed." That is all there is in this proposition.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, there is back of this proposition the idea, which nearly every gentleman who has advocated this scheme has admitted squarely on this floor, although the gentleman from Colorado himself does not, that the Government is to do this work because private enterprise will not.

There are to-day millions and millions of capital in this country seeking investment. If this enterprise promised to be a paying investment for private capital, that capital would be invested in its prosecution. From the nature of things there are questions arising out of the prosecution of a work like this which it would be absolutely impossible for private corporations to deal with. The different riparian rights of different proprietors, the conflicting claims of the State of Nevada, the State of Nebraska, and the State of Colorado, which were argued here before this Committee of the Whole at the last session—all these things when they come to be considered show that the Government must do this work if it is to be done, and that private enterprise never will do anything more in this direction than it has already done. It was not until private enterprise had invested all the money that promised a remunerative return to private individuals and private corporations that the demand was made here for the Government to undertake it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have only a minute and a half in which to say a few words before I yield the floor to my colleague [Mr.

SPRINGER

Mr. Chairman, substantially one-half of the land embraced in our Territories is an arid region. If the water supply can be utilized, a very considerable percentage of that Territory can be irrigated. Congress has provided by legislation that all the reservoir sites, as they shall be ascertained by surveys, and the lands that can be irrigated shall be reserved. Having thus legislated, we appropriated $100,000 to commence the work of surveying all the reservoir sites and the lands which could be irrigated. The proposition embraced in this bill appropriates $150,000 more to that end. The pending amendment proposes to add $100,000. I believe the amendment should be adopted; so that when these reservoir sites are located, and the lands which can be irrigated by utilizing the water supply are designated, the Government will then be in a condition by legislation to devise a proper method to dispose of these water-rights and of these lands, our present land system not be-ing adapted to that condition. And I believe it is the duty of Congress to move vigorously in this direction—in the selection of these sites and of these lands, so that a system can be devised—not for the Government to make these improvements, but to provide by law how the sites and the lands shall be disposed of. There is the whole proposition. I would appropriate $350,000 to be expended for these surveys next year, if I had the power; but as the committee recommends an appropriation of only $150,000 and the amendment increases that by the addition of only $100,000, I shall vote for this amendment, making the amount $250,000 instead of $150,000.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague from Illinois [Mr.

SPRINGER

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has three minutes

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Herbert] are misleading, so far as this proposition is concerned. The text of this bill and the amendments do not contemplate the building of reservoirs, or any other expenditure by the Government, except for the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid regions of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation and the segregation of the irrigable lands in such arid The importance of this survey to the Government and to the people is this: The Government will send topographical engineers to the arid regions for the purpose of ascertaining prospective sites for reservoirs and the lands which can be reclaimed by the aid of such reservoirs; and it will withdraw from settlement under the laws of the United States all such lands. The Government is already engaged in a topographical survey of all this region, making appropriations year after year for that purpose. This proposition will simply make year after year for that purpose. This proposition will simply make these investigations of the irrigable capacity of our arid lands the first question to be considered by the Geological Survey, instead of allowing the bureau, as heretofore, to make a general topographical survey of the whole region.

Mr. Chairman, the importance of this subject can not be overesti-If gentlemen will look at the map now before the House they will see in the center of it, or near the center, a red line extending from the Russian possessions to the Gulf of Mexico. That line is near the one hundredth longitude west of Greenwich, and between that and a line near the coast, 150 miles off, is what is called the arid region. That land will not produce anything except by irrigation. It is a vast area. The object of this amendment is to reserve the arable lands there from public entry, and lands which may be necessary for the construction of reservoirs; to reserve these lands until the Government can establish a system hereafter for the construction of such reservoirs whether through governmental means or by private hands. I was informed, and it was so stated to the Committee on Territories, that the lands embracing 150,000 or 200,000 acres would be worth $140 to $150 an acre when irrigated by a proper system, and in that event would thus materially add to the wealth of the country.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, when this subject was before the House before I made some remarks favoring the general object. While I am still in favor of some legislation for the purpose of reserving the lands necessary for the purpose of constructing reservoirs, and for a survey of this arid region with that view, so as to prevent these valuable water rights and facilities falling into the hands of monopolists, still I am constrained to say at the present time I think these appropriations should wait until we have matured some general legislation and established some general system on the subject. I am not satisfied, Mr. Chairman, with the system now being carried on. It seems to me it is a little loose, and too much discretion is given to the officer in charge of the work.

Mr. SYMES. Will
Mr. BLAND. I wo Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?
I would rather not, but I will before I get through.

Mr. Bland. I would rather not, but I will before I get through.

Mr. Chairman, there is no great necessity at this time for urgency in the matter regarding further entry of public lands for settlement, because we have now large areas in the West which are open to public entry by homestead and pre-emption. In other words, sir, there is no such crowding as would indicate any necessity upon the part of the General Government to enter into the business of opening up these lands and making them fit for cultivation. Of course I can see the necessity on the part of the Government to reserve all the lands necessary for the purpose of constructing these reservoirs and to preserve the great privilege of water rights, without which these arid lands would be worthless

Now, I understand the Committee on Public Lands has under consideration a general land system which ought to be matured and adopted, and in that system there ought to be some provision made under certain regulations and restrictions for these surveys. I do not know whether the lands as fast as surveyed are being opened up to settlement or not. I understand at the last session of Congress that was the provision inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill at that

Mr. SYMES. It was the provision, and those lands are reserved. Mr. BLAND. I think there should be an act passed, and before we enter into this subject so extensively there ought to be a law by which these lands in the arid region should be reserved from public entry. I am in accord with the sentiment that it would not be good policy to permit these lands to be entered by private parties, and these great water rights monopolized by individuals and corporations.

Mr. SYMES. Then why does my friend object to this?
Mr. BLAND. I object to this because it is a loose way to legislate. It does seem to me the money appropriated should be better guarded. I am opposed to appropriating large sums of money at the mere discretion of an officer without any restriction or safeguard thrown around it. Hence I shall not only oppose the amendments of the gentleman from Colorado, but move a further restriction on this appropriation until some general legislation on the subject shall be had.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of a number of gentlemen I would like to ask that they have the privilege of printing remarks in the RECORD on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair thinks that should properly be done in the House, yet if there be no objection the request will be complied with.

There was no objection.

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Chairman, at the present time the great bulk of the public domain lies west of the one hundredth meridian; that is, the portion of it yet undisposed of, and it remains undisposed of—the majority of that public domain—to-day, from the fact that it is arid and famished, and its improvement by irrigation is not within the compass of private enterprise. In order to put water upon it, large expenditures are necessary.

Now, we have a desert-land act which allows a man 640 acres of land if he will put water upon it. It does not give it to him for having made the improvements, but he is required to pay 25 cents an acre immediately upon entering and subsequently to pay the balance of $1.25 an acre, and that is all the advantage now offered under the land laws of this Government to private enterprise to induce men to go upon these arid lands and undertake their reclamation. There is another fact, too, arid lands and undertake their reclamation. There is another fact, too, to be considered, and that is the amount of our public domain suitable for cultivation is diminishing year by year, while the demand is constantly increasing. It is not within the power of the individual to restore these arid lands. In the arid region lying west of the one hundredth meridian there are accumulations of water and moisture in these mountain ranges, and if the Government restricts the individual to the right of 640 acres for carrying water upon lands, why does not the obligation rest upon the Government, if the land is to be restored, to make this land suitable for settlement; and why should not the Government expend some portion of the public funds in making the necessary improvements?

And it is a matter of economy; not only a matter of great public utility and necessity, but it is a matter of very great interest to the Government. No speculation that can be suggested to-day offers such inducements as this speculation does. It is a speculation for the Government to take this immense body of public lands that are now lying arid and waste and which will not bring 1 cent an acre, and by the expenditure of these moderate sums of money in collecting the water in the mountains to provide irrigation, by which they can be brought into demand, and they will furnish homes for hundreds of thousands, and will ultimately make this great desert "blossom as the rose."

Now, this is not a new experiment. I have been over that region, north, south, east, and west, in all of these Territories clear to the Pacific coast; I know by actual observation what has been done, and that long before a European had set his foot upon this country. You go down to some portions of the Territory represented by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. SMITH, of Arizona], and all over this who has just taken his seat [air. Shirth, of Arizona], and are over the broad area of arid region you find the broken pottery of a former civilization upon every hand. To-day that land is arid and waste, and no white man lives on it, but you will find there the remnants of irrigating ditches running in every direction that had been used by a former civilization.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from lifornia has expired.

Mr. VANDEVER. 1 would like to have about two minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks an extension of his time two minutes, not to come out of the hour. Is there obiection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VANDEVER. I will drop the consideration of the subject as to what has been done heretofore, but would like to say what has been done in my own district within the last few years. Private enterprise there by an incorporated company has made reservoirs up in the mountains, and by the construction of a flume some 35 or 40 miles in length has brought water down to the vicinity of San Diego, and to-day they can deliver 5,000 inches of water (miners' inches) upon an arid area of 100,000 acres of land 600 feet above the level of the sea, and, I may also state, supply the entire city with water.

Mr. McMILLIN. Did it require an expenditure by the Government to do this?

Mr. VANDEVER. They did it by private enterprise.

If this thing were done as a matter of speculation it would encourage other great aggregations of capital to go and appropriate these sites for reservoirs in the mountains, and when they have secured the water they have secured the land; and what is desired to be done is that the Government shall protect people against these great speculators and against the system of appropriating land for the few. They must step in for the relief of the people. must step in for the relief of the people.

Mr. HERBERT. As I understand the gentleman from California, he contends that the Government must do the whole work.

Mr. VANDEVER. The Government is under the same obligation to do this for the benefit of the people that it is to improve the rivers and harbors of the country.

Mr. HERBERT. That is exactly what I have been arguing was the position of gentlemen in favor of this scheme.

Mr. VANDEVER. It is better for the people to fall into the hands of the Government and be protected by it than to be left to the tender mercies of speculators, who, if these sites for reservoirs are not reserved now, will in no distant time become wholly dependent upon great companies for supplies of water for irrigation.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. REED rose. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana

Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not be classed as opposed to this measure; yet I fear I am occupying time allowed to gentlemen opposing the entire proposition. My opposition extends entirely to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Symes]. I think that for the present the sum named by the Committee on Appropriations, $150,000, is sufficient. I wish to call the attention of the committee to a few facts. This subject in its present proposed magnitude has never been considered by a committee of the House; nor has any bill been before any committee of the House embracing a plan of such an improvement except the joint resolution which was approved on the improvement except the joint resolution which was approved on the 20th of March, 1888.

But that, in fact, in its terms did not contemplate any general plan such as is now contemplated. It contemplated, as was understood, simply a report based upon the information in possession of Major Powell, the Director of the Geological Survey, as to what extent reservoirs of water in the arid region could be made available for irrigation purposes. That joint resolution was considered by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, as I understand, and by the House Committee on Public Lands. A few days since Major Powell, the Director of the Geological Survey, submitted to the House Committee on Public Lands a very interesting statement of surveys made in New Mexico, but that committee has not taken any action on the subject. This subject has never been fully considered. We are not informed to what extent the Commissioner of the General Land Office has felt authorized to withdraw from public sale the desert lands that would ultimately be benefited by the expenditure now proposed to be made.

The language of the provision in the sundry civil act of last session on this subject is certainly ambiguous, and we have not been able to ascertain to what extent the Secretary of the Interior is willing to assume responsibility in withdrawing from sale desert lands which are to be affected by the proposed expenditures. That provision that I wish to call attention to is the amendment prepared by the gentleman from Colorado and offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckin-

RIDGE], as was then understood:

All the land which may hereafter be designated or selected by said United States surveys for sites for reservoirs, ditches, or canals for irrigating purposes, and all the lands susceptible of irrigation by such reservoirs, ditches, or canals, are from this time henceforward hereby reserved from sale as the property of the United States.

The only way in which that provision can be made effectual, or at least the best way to accomplish that object, is by repealing the desertland law of 1877; for my friend from Colorado will undoubtedly concede that under the present very liberal desert-land law, which authorizes the entry of a whole section of land by any person, the motive to seize upon these lands in anticipation of this Government improvement is very great. I think that ought to be avoided. There are at least two things to be considered: First, the vast area of country which will be affected by this legislation which is already owned by corporations under grants heretofore made, especially in New Mexico, Arizona, California, and in Montana. There are millions of acres already granted to railroad corporations which, in some form or other, will be affected by our legislation, and most beneficially affected, and, I think, increased in value far beyond the expectations of the House. This ought to be considered. These expenditures for surveys, and the ultimate expenditures likely to follow to reclaim desert lands, ought to be confined to public lands and not for the benefit of private parties.

Mr. SYMES. If the gentleman will permit me, I do not see how railroad lands can be beneficially affected. On the contrary I think they will be damaged by this legislation, for the reason that if the act which the gentleman has read is properly followed up by appropriations for this survey, Government lands will be selected for irrigation and the water will be devoted to them, and there will be no water left to irrigate the railroad lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a very good speech of my friend, perhaps, but he does not ask a question. But, Mr. Chairman, the suggestion that the large grants heretofore made by Congress to corporations will not be benefited by this legislation and the expenditures contemplated is hardly, I think, open to question. Under the liberal policy of allowing the entry of a whole section of land under the desert-land law by any person, which has been in operation for several years, vast areas of land have been taken up by speculators. They paid but 25 cents per acre, and could hold the land three years before paying the additional dollar per acre. I think that an appropriation of $150,000 this year for this purpose is quite enough, until we more fully understand this matter and see the effect of these expenditures. Let some proper committee consider the whole subject and devise a general system. If the Senate had passed the general land bill which passed the House early last summer, that would have relieved us somewhat of the difficulty, because that bill makes a very great and a very beneficial change in the present law in regard to desert lands.

Mr. SYMES. I concede that.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the Senate will not act upon the bill.
Mr. SYMES. There is the trouble.
Mr. HOLMAN. But let me call the attention of my friend from Colorado to the fact that 12,000,000 acres of these desert lands have already been reclaimed by private enterprise, 9,000,000, we are told, in the single Territory of Utah, and let me inquire of him what is to be done with these great private enterprises that are already organized for irrigating purposes where they conflict with the plan of the Government? All over the arid country the gentleman will find flumes and canals conveying water for many miles for irrigation, and these works are being constantly enlarged and extended.

Now, how can we safely proceed in this matter without more careful legislation and a more satisfactory basis for legislation than we have at present? The only legislation that we have up to this time is the very indefinite joint resolution to which I have referred, and which passed the House last year without consideration, and the provision in the sundry civil act for this year, which appropriated the $100,000 to commence those surveys. The former measure passed the House with the understanding that it contemplated a report from Major Powell on the basis of information already acquired in the surveys made by his

While I am in favor of reclaiming these lands, and believe that an inexhaustible source of agricultural wealth exists in those arid regions, I do not wish to see Congress precipitately rush into a movement which may be found full of embarrassment, unless proper legislation can be had in advance. We appropriated $100,000 for the present year, and if we follow the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations and appropriate now $150,000 for the coming year, that will certainly be a large enough sum until we have legislation that will obviate the embarrassments that might otherwise arise.

Besides this, Major Powell could in the mean time, with this beginning, organize his force for the new work, and fully consider the fields in which the work may go on without a Government system being involved with individual enterprise.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the question of internal improvements made by the whole nation for the benefit of the whole nation has had, during our history, such frequent and conclusive discussion that I am always amazed when I hear some of the reasoning upon that subject that is brought up here in modern times. The question whether one part of the country shall be taxed for the benefit of another part, whether one section shall pay in order that another may have an advantage, has been so thoroughly discussed and the proposition that that should never be done has been so thoroughly answered that I am always amazed to find it brought forward. The population of this The population of this country is interchangeable. The citizens of Maine are to be found from one end of the country to the other, and I have no doubt that, as in the present and in the past, so in the future, we shall have that free circulation of population which nationality implies. If that is the case, then whatever is for the benefit of one section of the country is for the benefit of all. The annual river and harbor bill which we pass, or attempt to pass, can be justified upon no other ground. There are many States which receive no benefit from it, there are many localities which reap no advantage from it, but it is justified and justifiable upon the ground that the whole nation is benefited thereby.

Now, there lies beyond the Mississippi an enormous area of country a very large part of which is owned by the United States and almost all the balance of it by citizens of the United States. That land can be rendered cultivable only by irrigation. Experiments already made show that that land, which upon its face appears to be nothing but desert, can be made to blossom like a garden. In order to make it do that it is necessary for us to substitute for the rainfall that never comes the flowage of the rivers and streams. As the country becomes settled the difficulty of obtaining reservoirs increases day by day. The proposition which we are now discussing proposes that a reasonable sum of money shall be appropriated for the purpose of securing at this early day the reservoirs which we now know must be had in order to make that region valuable.

And whenever that country is made valuable the United States is made valuable by just so much and the citizens of the United States are to just that extent enriched. Is there any reason that we should

The question, then, of principle being disposed of—and it seems to me that no man can stand up against the reasoning which I have suggested-the matter is one of detail, of what sum should be appropriated by the people of the United States for this great work. mittee on Appropriations propose an expenditure of $150,000. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], faithful after the manner which I have described to his committee, thinks there should be no appropriation. The Secretary of the Interior believes that there should be $350,000 appropriated. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior is certainly entitled to the respectful consideration of the House; and when we bear in mind the vast extent of territory to be affected by this measure and the smallness of the appropriation proposed by the committee, I do not see how any member of this House can hesitate to vote in favor of granting the sum asked for by the gentleman from Colorado. It does not go to the full extent of the demands of the Secretary of the Interior, but it is a fair and reasonable compromise. To my mind this sum is too small; but rather than take 150,000 I would be glad to take $250,000, if I can not get $350,000.

[Here the hammer fell.] The CHAIRMAN. There are four bate in opposition to the proposition. There are four minutes of the time left for de-

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to inquire whether the time to be occupied in support of the proposition has all expired.

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr.

VANDEVER] and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], who perhaps know more practically about this question than any other gentle-men on this floor, who understand the difficulties which beset an un-dertaking of this kind by private individuals, admit that ultimately this work must be done either by the State government or by the Federal Government

Mr. VANDEVER. I stated that I preferred the Government should make the improvement rather than that this valuable property should fall into the hands of speculators.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand that was the drift of the gentleman's argument, and I think I have not misrepresented him. The difficulties are so great, the conflict of rights which will arise are so numerous, that it is absolutely impossible for private individuals properly to do this thing. Speaking in a general way, whatever private enterprise could accomplish profitably has been done. What remains to be done must be done, then, by the State governments or by the Federal Government. States can not do it, for streams run from one State into an-Conflicts have already arisen between citizens of the State of Nebraska and the State of Colorado. The governor of Nebraska complains that the waters of the river Platte have been ditched off by citizens of Colorado and prevented from running down into Nebraska. If any government at all is to do it, the Federal Government must undertake this scheme. I have not time in four minutes to discuss the question of right or power. But just a word as to expense.

Now, sir, what is to be the cost? In the debate we had here last session it was stated, and it is undeniably true, that every acre of land reclaimed by irrigation is worth from $40 to $50 an acre. This system of irrigation has been carried on for fifteen or twenty years. When land can be made worth $40 an acre by irrigation, does not every gentle-man here know that the enterprise of the American capitalist has already utilized all the land that can be irrigated for $10 an acre?

is a plain, practical proposition—that all the lands which can be irrigated for $10 an acre have been improved, because improving them makes them worth $40 an acre. Then we are asked to enter upon a scheme which contemplates the improvement of over one hundred million acres of land. At $10 an acre, that would be $1,000,000,000 to carry out this scheme. And who can do it, who can furnish the money for such a vast undertaking, except the Government of the United States? I warn gentlemen to pause now in the beginning, and not to embark the tax-payers of the country in a scheme as gigantic as this.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, Mr. SYMES taking the chair as Speaker pro tempore, and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announcing the passage of bills of the following titles, with amendments, asking conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and appointing conferees on its part, as indi-

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The committee resumed is session, Mr. Dockery in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the centleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. NELSON. Is not the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Not now, and will not be until the amendment to the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. NELSON. I think the amendment which I wish to propose will be in order. His amendment is an amendment to the amount of the appropriation, while mine is an amendment for the purpose of controlling the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman want to perfect the text? Mr. NELSON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado withdraw his amendment to the amendment at present?

Mr. SYMES. I will do so.
Mr. NELSON. I ask my amendment to the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in or about any other lands than those of the United States; and none of the lands on which any part of this appropriation is expended shall be sold or otherwise disposed of until due provision has been made by law to charge such lands in their disposal with their pro rata share of the money herein and heretofore appropriated for such purpose.

Mr. RYAN. There is nothing for that provision to operate upon

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer that as a proviso?

Mr. NELSON. I offer it as a proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the amount of the appropriation is fixed? Mr. NELSON. I wish it to come in at the end of the amount, whatever that may be.

Mr. RYAN. Why not offer it when the amount has been determined?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota had better withdraw his amendment to the amendment at present.

Mr. NELSON. I will if it is to be considered as pending.

Mr. RYAN. There will be no difficulty about it.

Mr. SYMES. I understand that my amendment to the amendment is before the committee.

is before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.
Mr. RANDALL. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman—
The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] is withdrawn.

So Mr. Symes's amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] can now offer his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I propose to add the proviso which has already been read. The amendment of Mr. Nelson to the amendment was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I beg the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the last act which seems to me would relieve the doubt the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] submits that this is inappropriate

Mr. RYAN. My colleague misunderstood me. I did not mean it was inappropriate here, but I spoke in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, that he should withhold it until the amount had been determined.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not catch the real meaning of the proviso moved by the gentleman from Minnesota. As it was read it seemed to me to interfere with the provision in the last clause.

Mr. RYAN. I think it is a change of existing law, and I make that point of order against it.

Mr. NELSON. Is my amendment to the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is; and the gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order against it.

Mr. McMILLIN. It comes too late. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it comes too late. Mr. RYAN. I insist on it.

Mr. McMILLIN. So far as I can see the amendment is a proper one. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. RYAN. It provides where there is ownership of lands in the vicinity of lands of the United States, then there shall be no surveys carried on. Its effect will be to stop all survey.

carried on. Its effect will be to stop all survey.

Mr. NELSON. Can I be heard on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed on the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto. The Chair is of the opinion the point of order comes too late. The amendment to the amendment was withdrawn by the request of the Chair and again offered, and it could hardly be considered the point of order was in time.

Mr. BREWER. I ask for the reading of the proviso again as but few seem to have understood it.

The proviso was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe there is no debate permitted under the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been closed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask one minute to make a statement.

Mr. DUNN, Mr. RYAN, and others demanded the regular order. Mr. HOLMAN. Then I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment ending, and an amendment to the amendment. As soon as the question is taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, the Chair will entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment submitted by Mr. NELSON.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 62.
Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of having tellers I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. RYAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877, is hereby repealed.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not understand who submitted the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas, Mr. RYAN. Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend has considered this matter. are fast disposing of these lands, and this provision will make it more than ever an object to get them.

Mr. RYAN. While I might be in favor of the gentleman's proposition, I certainly do not want to load this bill down with a great deal of public-land legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but this is directly germane to the pending proposition, and is certainly necessary for the preservation of these lands which are capable of irrigation. The desert lands are only being sold in large quantities, and if we are going to protect any of them which are susceptible of irrigation we must make some provision re-pealing that old law.

pealing that old law.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. If a man can irrigate his land by a little stream from a mountain spring, or by a little branch running from some cafion, are you going to reserve that?

Mr. HOLMAN. These lands are being reserved every day in view of such improvements as are here contemplated being made ultimately by the Government. The provision which I proposed to incorporate, and which has been ruled out on the point of order, is obviously necessary to protect the lands. to protect the lands.

Mr. ROGERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as amended.

The question was taken.

The committee divided, and there were-ayes 72, noes 31.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum, I believe, Mr. Chairman.

To avoid the interruption of the bill, I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; but if the gentleman will yield for a moment to permit the gentleman from Indiana to make a suggestion it may facilitate the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have no objection to that. Mr. HOLMAN. I was asking, Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent, in order to avoid interrupting the progress of this bill, that the pending proposition stand adopted with the right to a vote in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I can say now, in answer to the gentleman's request, that that can be had.

Mr. HOLMAN. My desire is to have a vote in regard to this repeal of the desert-land law.

Mr. RYAN. I think the gentleman is asking something now that is quite unfair. If he wants a vote on this proposition, I do not know that there is any objection to that; but the other matter is certainly not in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did; and I was endeavoring to ask unanimous consent to get a vote in the House on the proposition I have suggested.

Mr. STEELE. Regular order.
Mr. RANDALL. I would like to reach, if possible, an arrangement which would induce the gentleman from Indiana not to insist on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say that my only object is this: You are allowing the desert lands to be sold in vast quantities to speculators, and with this provision, if it be adopted, some further protection must be thrown around those lands. You allow now a man to take four quarter-sections.

Mr. SYMES. But by the act passed last summer we reserved the reservoir sites.

Mr. ROGERS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order that no quorum has voted being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. RYAN were appointed tellers.

Mr. RYAN (one of the tellers). So far as I am personally concerned I care nothing about the gentleman's proposition particularly. I have said that I did not desire this bill loaded down with that sort of legissaid that I did not desire this bill loaded down with that sort of legislation, but I am perfectly willing myself to agree that he can have a vote on his proposition in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all I have asked.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have a vote here.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And finish it now. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the question on the amendance of myself.

ment as am nded.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 46.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. Chairman, to save time I wish to submit a single remark. It is that the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Kansas do not object to a vote in the House on the proposition, and in view of that fact I trust there will be no objection to permitting such an arrangement to be made.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I call for the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the further count by tell-

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the committee having found itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called and now reported the names of the absentees to be spread on the Journal.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call discloses 173 members present, and the committee will resume its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, with amendments, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. Plumb, Mr. Dawes, and Mr. Cock-rell conferees on its part.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise, there being but a bare quorum present.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EUROPEAN GOVERNMENTS AND INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. McCREARY. This morning when I asked leave to report the joint resolution S. 122, and have it printed and recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with leave to report at any time, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Outhware] objected. These gentlemen now withdraw their objection, and I ask leave to report favorably from the Committee on Foreign Affairs the resolution (S. 122) entitled "Joint resolution declaring the sense of Congress in respect of the connection of European governments with interoceanic canals at the Isthmus of Darien and in Central America," and I also ask that it be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with the right to report at any to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with the right to report at any time; and I make the further agreement that when it is so reported for consideration only three hours shall be occupied in the discussion or consideration of the resolution without further permission.

The Clerk reported the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the

Mr. OUTHWAITE. So that it is ordered that debate be limited to three hours, there is no objection on my part.

Mr. McCREARY. We agree to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask to have the bill just received from the Senate, making appropriations for the District of Columbia, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the Senate amendments be numbered and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SENATE TARIFF BILL

Mr. REED. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the tariff bill as amended by the Senate be ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. That has already been ordered, on the motion of the chairman of the committee to whom the bill was referred.

INDEXING JOURNALS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution I reported yesterday from the Committee on Accounts was laid on the table. I merely want to enter the motion at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution and let the House see what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution in relation to the preparation of the general index of the Journals of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

MEMORIAL OF MAINE FORESTRY CONVENTION.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to present a memorial of the committee of Maine forestry convention for the ascertainment in taking the next census of the acreage of land in the United States devoted to tillage, forest growth, meadow, pasturage, etc., and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD. It is short and will take but a small space.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has asked that a memorial be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the motion to adjourn for the present.

The title of the memorial was read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, appointed by a convention of citizens of the State of Maine interested in the preservation and enlargement of the forests, held at Bangor, in the said State, on the 18th and 19th of December last, a committee on that behalf, respectfully memorialize your honorable body to the effect and for the purposes as follows, to wit:

That in the act that may be passed regulating the taking of the next general census of the United States, among other statistics that may be required to be collected and reported, the officers to whom the taking of said census shall be committed shall be required, as to every town, precinct, and census district, to ascertain as accurately as possible and report:

First. The area in acres therein of the land occupied for tillage, meadows, pasturage, streets, buildings, and their appurtenances.

Second. The area of acres therein of land covered with growing timber and wood.

wood.

Third. The area in acres therein of waste, swampy, burnt, mountainous, and rocky land and of land otherwise unfit for agricultural uses or buildings, on which timber or wood might be advantageously grown.

So that a general estimate might be made of the present forest growth of the United States and of every State, county, and census district therein, and of the extent to which said forest growth has been wasted or exhausted, with a view to such national and State legislation as may be deemed necessary and proper to preserve and protect from depredation natural resources so essential to the welfare and prosperity of the people.

GEORGE F. TALBOT,
M. C. FERNALD,
AUG. C. HAMHIS,
Committee of the Maine Forestry Convention.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask leave to make a privileged report.
Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the House adjourn.
Mr. RICHARDSON (to Mr. CULBERSON). I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the motion. I desire to have this privileged report considered at this time. It will take but a moment.
Mr. CULBERSON. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 21, 1889.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in addition to the usual number there shall be printed 10,500 copies of the proceedings, testimony, documents, and consular reports submitted to the select committee to inquire into the importation of contract laborers, paupers, etc., and also the same number of copies of the bill and report of said committee, of which 3,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the accompanying report read. The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the House concurrent resolution to print, in addition to the usual number, 10,500 copies of the proceedings, testimony, documents, and consular reports submitted to the select committee to inquire into the importation of contract laborers, paupers, etc., and also the same number of copies of the bill and report of said committee, of which 3,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,000 copies for the use of the House, and report the same with a recommendation that it do pass.

The estimated cost of printing and binding in cloth, in two volumes, 10,500 copies of the same is $7,158,70.

The report was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNDER-GROUND PASSAGE TO THE CAPITOL.

Mr. BOUTELLE, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Resolved. That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to report to the House the practicability and probable cost of constructing an under-ground passage from the areade of the terrace of the Capitol on the line of the Marshall statue, running therefrom to one of the court-yards at the side corridor leading from the Rotunda to the Library, and for constructing an elevator in connection therewith, to land at the different stories of the building and at the lower stage of the Dome.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELDEN. Iask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory.

Mr. BLAND. I renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker o tempore stated that the ayes seemed to have it. Mr. BELDEN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 23.
So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 28, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CHANDLER. In consequence of some directions given by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Gibson] to the Official Reporter, I desire to withdraw the resolution offered by me for the correction of the RECORD of January 24, 1889.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The resolution referred to by the Senster from New Hampshire will be withdrawn, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communica-tion from the Treasury Department, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, the report of special agent George R. Tingle, in charge of the Seal Islands in Alaska, for the current year; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed. He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in pursuance of the eighth section of the act of Congress approved July 22, 1854, the report of the United States surveyor-general for New Mexico on a certain private land claim, in the name of Josefa Baca, for the Pajarito tract, No. 157, in that Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 22d instant, reports of the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller concerning claims for extra allowances to officers and men of the Navy based on sea service on receiving-ships; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communica-tion from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, pursuant to the provisions of the act of January 20, 1885, the conclusions of fact and law by the Court of Claims in certain French spoliation claims; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON presented the credentials of M. C. BUTLER, chosen by the Legislature of South Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1889; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions of the house of representatives of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring legislation upon the relations between labor and capital; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions of the house of representatives of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring certain legislation relating to the rights of settlers under the homestead and pre-emption laws; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also presents a memorial of citizens of New Mexico, remonstrating against the admission of that Territory into the Union of States.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the memorial be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Washington Terri-the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Washington Territory, representing 450 members, and a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Mexico, representing 222 members, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present what purports to be a petition of 271 citizens of Alliance, Stark County, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill. I find, however, that like some other petitions of the same character, it is signed by one person claiming to represent the number named, 271. I have no doubt that it is done in good faith. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of E. J. Carter and 68 others (56 voters and 13 women), citizens of Akron, Ohio, praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Christian Union Unio

Barlow, of Tacoma, Wash., praying that in enabling acts for the admission of Dakota, Montana, New Mexico, and Washington Territories there shall be incorporated a clause allowing women to vote for delegates to conventions to form State constitutions; which were referred to the Committee on Territories

He also presented the petition of R. Banett and 71 others (33 voters and 39 women), citizens of Asotin, Wash., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a bevexportation, transportation, and safe of all alcohole liquors as a beverage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a petition of the Bar Association of Washington Territory to the Congress of the United States, praying that an appropriation be made for the purpose of providing a library for the supreme court of the Territory, and that such appropriation be made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill at the present secret. ent session.

I have already introduced an amendment to that bill for this purpose, which I have had referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask that the petition be referred to the same committee, and I call the attention of the committee to the reference and ask their atten-tion to it. The petition sets forth the fact that such an appropriation is necessar

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary if there be no objection.

He also presented a petition of the Legislature of Kansas, praying to have incorporated in the law providing for the census of 1890 a provision providing for the enumeration of all surviving soldiers and sailors, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition of the house of representatives of the Kansas Legislature, praying for legislation by act of Congress to prevent and punish combinations of capital known as trusts. subject-matter is now before the Senate, I move that the petition lie

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of Rev. S. R. Lyons, pastor, representing 250 members of the United Presbyterian congregation of Bloomington, Ind., praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of Senate bill 2851, amendatory of the act regulating interstate commerce, now pending before the conference committee having that bill in charge; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State of Texas, representing 1,000 members, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of citizens of Washington, D. C., and a petition of citizens of Plumville, Pa., praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which were referred to the Committee on Educa-

Mr. COCKRELL presented a memorial of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, department of Sabbath observance, remonstrating against the running of interstate Sunday trains, mail trains, and against military drills on the Sabbath, signed by 100 citizens of Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present resolutions from the Tiff City Farmers' Alliance, No. 190, passed by the McDonald County Farmers' Alliance while in session at Pineville, McDonald County, Missouri, January 10, 1889, urging Congress to legislate more in favor of the farmers and laborers and less in favor of the moneyed powers, and urging their representatives in Congress to vote for all bills that will kill all trusts and moneyed combinations. As the bill relating to this subject is now before the Senate, I move that the resolutions lie on the table; and I trust the Senator from Ohio will press that bill to a final conclusion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of 87 citizens of Kentucky, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAWES presented petitions of citizens of Boston, Worcester, Dedham, Blackstone, and Falmouth, Mass., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 550) for the relief of William R. Blakeslee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 66) authorizing appointment of a commission to establish the boundary line between Northern Minnesota and the Canadian provinces, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3483) for the relief of David R. Gregg and William P. Gregg, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the same report on the bill (S. 2965) for the reason that the appropriation therein called for was embodied in the Indian appropriation bill at the last session.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB. I also make the same report on the bill (S. 3318) to provide for the revocation of the withdrawal of lands made for the benefit of certain railroads, and for other purposes, for the reason that the provisions of the bill have all been embedded in a bill which has passed the Senate.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

INDIAN WAR VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I find on my table this morning Senate Executive Document 82, second session Fiftieth Congress, being a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a Senate resolution of January 3, 1889, information relative to the service of volunteers in the Nez Percé Indian war. This document states that on January 22 it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Being unable to imagine why it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I looked up the RECORD and I find that it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The mistake was probably made by the printers.

Mr. MITCHELL. The reference to the Committee on Appropriations is equally inappropriate, and I desire to call the matter to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. The communication should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, to which it properly belongs

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee on Appropriations can be discharged from the further consideration of the report, and it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that that order be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

HEARING ON SUNDAY-REST BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably, with an amendment, the Senate resolution providing for printing the minutes of the hearing before the Committee on Education and Labor on the Sunday-rest bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BLAIR January 25, 1889:

Resolved, That there be printed of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, being minutes of the hearing before the Committee on Education and Labor upon the Sunday-rest bill, 50,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, before the word copies, to strike out "50,000" and insert "8,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to state, with reference to the amendment just agreed to, that that is the limit of the power of the Senate under the law to print under the resolution. The cost of reprinting the therefore, will be $60 per thousand, and the extent of the $500 limit, therefore, will be 8,300 copies.

I understand there is an immense demand from many quarters for the publication of this document, but if a greater number is needed it must be done by the concurrent act of the two Houses of Congress un-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GEORGIA NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3786) to change the date for the commencement of the March terms of the district court for the northern district of Georgia, to report it favorably without amendment, and as I presume there will be no objection to the bill I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that hereafter the regular terms of the district court for the northern district of Georgia, now held on the first Monday in March, shall commence on the second Monday on the first Monday in March, shall committee of the second in March of each year.

Mr. BROWN. Is that reported by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary this morning.

Mr. BROWN. It is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DOLPH. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the pension appropriation bill. I understand that the bill has passed the Senate, but that a motion to reconsider is pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. DOLPH. Upon the supposition that the motion to reconsider will prevail, I present an amendment which I ask to have read, as it is very brief, and lie on the table. I do not ask to have it printed at this time for fear that it may not be here when the bill is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That a check or checks drawn by a pension agent in payment of pension due, and mailed by him to the address of the pensioner, shall constitute payment within the meaning of section 4765 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will lie

Mr. HARRIS. I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the pension appropriation bill was passed, for the purpose of offering, I think, precisely the same amendment that the Senator from Oregon has suggested, and when we reach concurrent and other resolutions I shall briefly explain what I conceive to be the necessity for it.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3881) for the relief of Susannah P. Swope; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 3882) to grant to the State of Arkansas the coal underlying the bed of the Arkansas River within said State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 131) giving consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across the Kansas River, at Topeka, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 132) authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase a suitable site for testing heavy ordnance and making experiments in gunnery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. REAGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3445) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. DOYLE.

Mr. CAMERON. Some time since the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] reported adversely the bill (S. 2596) to increase the pension of John A. Doyle, and it was indefinitely postponed. I move that the vote be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions with the additional papers I now present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection (the period within which a reconsideration can be moved having passed), the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be committed with the accompanying testimony to the Com-mittee on Pensions. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes. I wish simply to enter a motion to reconsider so that the allegations in certain telegrams received by me may be examined. I have sent the telegrams to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I simply want the bill held here so that the allegations may be first examined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote by which House bill 3312 was passed by the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to the motion being entered, of course, but it will have to be supplemented by a request to have the bill returned from the House of Representatives inasmuch as it has been communicated to the other House. it has been communicated to the other House

I will state further that I have no doubt the parties who have communicated with the Senator from Ohio are under a misapprehension as to the action of the Senate. I think the Senate has done precisely what those parties desired to have done, but they have been misled what those parties desired to have done, but they have been misled doubtless by the announcement in the press telegrams of House bill 3312 having been passed without being aware that the Senate substituted its own bill for the text of the House bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know nothing about the merits. Certain telegrams came to me which I referred to the Senator from Vermont as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. All I desire is to have the bill held here until the matter can be looked into.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator state from whom the telegrams are, or are they private?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. I sent the telegrams to the Senator from Vermont, and I do not have them before me. I know they are from lawyers and others

Mr. BROWN. I will state that I know of no opposition whatever to the bill in the shape in which it was passed by the Senate. There was opposition to it in the shape in which it passed the House of Representatives, but as amended and passed by the Senate as far as I know the index and officers of the court and the people of the district to be the judge and officers of the court and the people of the district to be affected by it, together with all the representatives here, are satisfied with it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be all right.
Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, that matter was very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee. Of course any suggestion as to a change of the political relations of certain districts is gestion as to a change of the political relations of certain districts is one which they would be very careful to scrutinize. They were satisfied, I believe unanimously, with the bill as it has passed. I saw the telegrams sent to the Senator from Ohio, and I think it is proper that the matter should be looked at again, though I agree with the Senator from Georgia that probably there is no objection now to the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I have no doubt that the telegrams were sent under misapprehension.

Mr. SHERMAN. Having entered a motion to reconsider, I wish to superadd the ordinary motion requesting the House of Representatives to return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A conference with the House of Repsentatives was asked on the bill and amendment. If there be no obiection, the order for a conference will be reconsidered, and the order appointing the conferees will be reconsidered, and the motion will be accompanied by a request to the House of Representatives to return the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt it will prove satisfactory, and probably an explanation will show that the amendment of the Senate will answer the purpose.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think there is any serious misapprehension about this matter, though it may be a misapprehension controlling for the time. There are only three counties taken from one of the districts and put in the other by the bill, and I am satisfied that the bill gives general satisfaction there as it now stands. However, I can not resist the motion under the circumstances.

PRINTING OF SENATE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. TURPIE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies additional of House bill 9051, with the amendment as the same passed the Senate, be published for the use of the Senate.

There are a great many inquiries for what is commonly known as the Senate tariff bill. The copy of the bill which was originally reported by the committee and laid on our desks is very inaccurate, and it is very unsatisfactory to annotate upon it the numerous amendments which have been passed. Some of the amendments embrace entire sections of the bill and others are important ones. I think the country ought to have the ordinary method of being acquainted with the ultimate provisions of the bill as passed by this body.

Mr. DAWES. How many copies is it proposed to print?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Motions to print additional copies under the rule must be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TURPIE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is so referred.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS. On Friday last I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the pension appropriation bill was passed on that day.

I will state my reason for entering the motion.

A few days ago a constituent of mine sent me the following draft, dated at Knoxville, Tenn., March 12, 1888, upon the assistant treasurer at New York:

Pay to the order of Joseph Cooper $36.

This draft was mailed to the pensioner at his address in Carroll County, Tennessee, was received by him and held by him until his death, some weeks afterwards, leaving the draft without indorsement, not having been paid or negotiated.

My correspondent requested me to see the Third Auditor of the Treasury and ascertain why the draft could not be paid. On calling upon the Third Auditor I learned that the general law was so construed by the accounting officers of the Treasury as that drafts issued for accrued pension and mailed to the pensioner, if not indorsed and negotiated before his death, can not be paid unless it can be shown by affidavit that the pensioner had died destitute of the means to take care of him in his last sickness and to bury him. No such affidavit can be made in this case. I also understand, in conference with the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, that in a number of similar cases private bills have been introduced and passed through both Houses of Congress, as they certainly ought to have been, unless the construction of the general law or the general law itself can be so changed that drafts like these shall be paid when presented at the Treasury.

The Third Auditor of the Treasury furnished me the form of an amendment to come in on page 2 of the pension appropriation bill. I, therefore, ask that the vote by which the bill was passed, and the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading, be reconsidered, and I shall then offer the amendment that I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was passed, and the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading, will be reconsidered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment. The Senator from Tennessee proposes an amendment, which will be read.

the bill should go over until to-morrow that it might be examined, and I thought it entirely appropriate, inasmuch as this memorandum contains decisions made by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Secretary of the Navy on the same subject, and by the Department of Justice, that it should be printed so that it might be before the Senate to-mort

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. HARRIS. It is a very unnecessary incumbrance of the RECORD, as I think, but I shall not interpose an absolute objection. I suggest to the Senator that it is wholly unnecessary to print it in the RECORD.

Mr. DOLPH. It may be in the opinion of the Senator. I, however, think it is a very proper thing to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be ordered printed in the RECORD if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The paper referred to is as follows:

WHAT CONSTITUTES PAYMENT OF A PENSION CHECK-MEMORANDUM.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
August 22, 1888.

August 22, 1888.

Section 4765 of the Revised Statutes provides that upon the receipt of the proper voucher of a pensioner and upon his identification, the pension agent receiving such voucher "shall immediately draw his check on the proper assistant treasurer or designated depositary of the United States for the amount due such pensioner, payable to his order, and transmit the same by mail directed to the address of the pensioner entitled thereto; but any pensioner may be required, if thought proper by the Commissioner of Pensions, to appear personally and receive his pension."

Comptroller Maynard held, on April 5, 1887, (1) that if the pensioner dies before the agent has executed and mailed to him a check for its payment, there has been no payment of the accrued pension; (2) but where the check has been transmitted by the agent to the pensioner and received by him in his lifetime, the payment has become complete, and the subsequent death of the pensioner, either before or after indorsing the check, will not defeat such payment; (3) where the check has been mailed by the agent to the pensioner in his lifetime, but was not received by him, there has been no payment to the pensioner.

On April 16, 1887, the Attorney-General, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior of date April 12, 1887, gave an opinion on the same point. The conclusion of the Department of Justice is "that the receipt of a check by a pensioner, which he has only indorsed, but which has not been transferred by him in his lifetime, is not a payment, but is only one step in the process of payment."

The importance and bearing of this question are shown in the communication of the Commissioner of Pensions of April 11, 1887, upon which the inquiry of the Secretary of the Interior of April 12 is based, namely: "Whether or not, under the provisions of section 4718 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, where a check has been transferred by a pension, payment is so completed, and title

Mr. PLUMB. Would it not be still further in the line of the purpose of the Senator from Tennessee to say that whatever pension remains due and unpaid according to the terms of the certificate of pensions again to the second of the pensioner?

Mr. HARRIS. Up to the death of the pensioner?

Mr. HARRIS. Up to the death of the pensioner; that it shall also be paid.

Some form of receipt to show that the proper person has received the check mailed by the pension agent is, however, necessary and proper, and the simplest that can be conceived is the indorsement of his name upon the check by the pensioner. Following the ordinary rules governing negotiable instruments, such indorsement may be in blank or limited. Under those rules a blank indorsement authorizes payment to any holder of the instrument, such being equivalent to the holding of a check made payable to bearer, which "may be transferred like currency by mere delivery." Once the blank indorsement is affixed the instrument is perfected and may pass from hand to hand without further indorsement.

There are about 450,000 pensioners, to whom 1,800,000 pension checks are issued in the course of a year. It would seem a hardship upon the pensioners if the Government were to surround these pension checks with all the formalities of the check known to the law of negotiable instruments, and this appears when we consider what are some of these formalities. For a clearer differentiation I will use the terms "business checks" and "pension checks." Business checks only purport to be drawn upon a deposit. "It is not the fact that the order is actually drawn on a deposit, but the fact that it purports to be so drawn, which constitutes it a check; and it is more accurate to say that it is upon its face a draft upon a deposit. To hold otherwise would authorize the construction of a written contract by the light of an extraneous fact of which the holder had no notice." (2 Dan'l Neg'ble Inst., 2d ed., sec. 1569; Champion es. Gorman, 70 Penn. St., 474.)

The payee of a business check is bound to see that it is drawn on funds: he is tied down by the with the fact.

constitutes it a check; and it is more accurate to say that it is upon its face a draft upon a deposit. To hold otherwise would authorize the construction of a written contract by the light of an extraneous fact of which the holder had no notice." (2 Dan'l Neg'ble Inst., 2d ed., sec. 1569; Champion vs. Gorman, 70 Penn. St., 474.)

The payee of a business check is bound to see that it is drawn on funds; he is tied down by the rule of diligence that, to preserve recourse against the drawer he must present the check for payment at any time before the close of banking hours on the next day. (2 Dan'l, sec. 1590.)

As against the drawer the indorse or assignee of a business check has no extension of time within which to present his check: and the opportunity of rendering the drawer's liability absolute in the event of the failure of the bank ended when the payee failed to present for payment before the closing of banking hours on the next day. (2 Dan'l, sec. 1595.)

When in the hands of either the payee or the indorsee an unpaid check can not be used as evidence of the drawer's debt until payment has been refused by the bank. (2 Dan'l, sec. 1646.)

One reason for these stringent rules for presentment is that the custom of the sess tringent rules for presentment is that the custom of the sessence of the contract that is embodied in the check itself and of the various contracts incidental to the transfer by indorsement. But the Government gains nothing by establishing strict rules of time limiting the general efficiency of the pension check and rendering ignorant pensioners liable to all-sorts of annoyance.

The principal object or purpose of checks is to enable the holder to demand and receive immediately the amount called for. Negotiability in its full sense is, therefore, not for their essence, but an optional quality. (2 Dan'l, sec. 1651; Mohawk Bank zs. Broderick, 10 Wend, 394.)

Should the "optional quality" existin the pension check? Is it not most desirable that its negotiable qualities should be of the most ex ntes is intended to prevent by regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury the use of Government drafts as a paper currency; but there is nothing in the section or in the regulations thereunder that materially qualifies the limit of time set by section 306.

The only reason for not paying these pensions in Treasury notes or by pension checks payable to bearer is the natural fear that others than the pensioner might get hold of the remittance, to the pensioner's great detriment. Were these pension checks payable "to bearer," would there be any question of payment upon their receipt by the payee? But an indorsement in blank by the payee makes the instrument transferable by delivery as though the instrument were payable to bearer, and the assignment by mere delivery accords with the custom of merchants. Should there be any question of the completeness of the payment? The payee has received the check, and appropriated it to his use by affixing his signature, thus—and until he crases his signature—making the check forthwith negotiable, with no other formality than that of transfer.

The nature of these Government instruments has received few interpretations by the Supreme Court.

In First National Bank of Washington vs. Whitman (94 U.S., 343), action was brought against the bank to recover the amount of a check drawn by Mr. Spinner, the Treasurer of the United States, on the bank as a designated depositary, payable to Mrs. E. S. Kimbro, being a draft on a war warrant issued on the requisition of a head of Department. Mrs. Kimbro's name was indorsed without her authority. The court begins by stating that Government funds deposited by the Treasurer in a national bank are treated by the Government funds deposited by the Treasurer in a national bank are treated by the Government funds deposited by the Treasurer in a national bank are treated by the Government funds deposited by the Treasurer in a national bank are treated by the Government, for the purpose of keeping accounts, as in the Treasurer's own charge and custo drawee.

At the outset I find a clear distinction between the case cited and the case at bar. The case cited involves the payment by the Treasurer, an officer in whom is reposed the power to pay demands upon the Treasurer in eash, if he so pleases, but who for his own convenience chooses to deposit some of the money intrusted to him in some banking institution, and draws against it by check. His relations with the bank are, therefore, purely personal, and the United States is eliminated from consideration, as the court says. The Government gives the Treasurer so much money with which to pay certain claims, and so long as he pays them it is immaterial to the Government whether he pays in cash over the counter of his office, or by check against a deposit of some of that cash in an outside bank, the latter proceeding being authorized.

But the case of the pension agent is different. No money is intrusted to his care. He can not pay in cash, howsoever much he might desire so to do. He is informed that a certain amount of money is deposited to his order at a subtreasury or some designated depository, against which he may draw pension checks. The funds are with the assistant treasurer or the designated depositary, and to make the principle of the case in the 94 U. S. apply to the present case, we must imagine the pension check to be presented to the assistant treasurer, who, instead of cashing it, gives the pensioner his check on some designated depositary. But the statutes clearly do not contemplate such a course; the pensioner is to "receive his pension" by means of the pension check, and not by orders or requisitions upon the assistant treasurer calling for further checks.

The Attorney-General in his opinion cites, in addition to the case of First Nature.

not by orders or requisitions upon the assistant treasurer calling for further checks.

The Attorney-General in his opinion cites, in addition to the case of First National Bank vs. Whitman, various other decisions of the United States Supreme Court in support of his position that there can be no payment by a pension check until it has been cashed. The Attorney-General states:

"A check, then, until presented, accepted, or marked good by the drawee, is only a personal obligation of the drawer. 'When the United States by its authorized officer becomes a party to negotiable paper, they have all the rights and incur all the responsibility of individuals who are parties to such instruments. I know of no difference, except that the United States vs. Stato Bank, 96 U. S., 30.)"

But the Attorney-General does not state the qualifications and restrictions in this statement of law made by the court in the later case of the Floyd acceptances (7 Wall., 666, at page 679). In explaining the Bank of the Metropolis case, Mr. Justice Miller says:

"The opinion of the court, after stating the facts, opens with the declaration that when the United States, by its authorized officer, becomes a party to negotiable paper, they have all the rights and incur all the responsibilities of individuals who are parties to such instrument." And further on it is said that 'an unconditional acceptance was tendered to it (the bank) for discount, * * * all it had to look to was the genuineness of the acceptance and the authority of the officer, like the genuineness of the signature, is always to be inquired into at the peril of the party taking an acceptance purporting to bind the Government."

Clearly the Supreme Court in this latter case intended to limit the rule laid down in the Bank of the Metropolis case. Further, it is to be seen that both the officer logic like the gennineness of the signature, is always to be inquired into at the peril of the party taking an acceptance purporting to bind the Government."

Clearly the Supreme Court in this latter case intended to limit the rule laid down in the Bank of the Metropolis case. Further, it is to be seen that both cases treat of the liability of the Government, and the nature of the instrument itself, when Government officers undertake to bind the Government by Government paper, the nature of which is known to the law merchant, but is not authorized by the statutes of the United States, a point in no way involved in the present case.

In the case of Bank of the Republic vs. Millard (10 Wall., 182), Millard, an officer in the military service of the United States, was, on leaving the service, paid his arrears of pay by an Army paymaster's check, issued upon the Bank of the Republic, a depositary of public moneys. The bank paid the check one on a forgery of Millard's name. Afterwards Millard obtained the check can demanded payment. The court held that the bank was justified in refusing payment in the absence of proof that the check was accepted by the bank or charged against the drawer.

It is plain that the court could not have held otherwise. Whatever the nature of the check, it was paid through a fraud on the bank, for which the bank was in no way responsible. The ruling of the court in the Floyd Acceptances might have been repeated, that all that was necessary for the bank to inquire into wasthe authority of the officer to draw the check and the genuineness of his signature, both of which were clearly proved in this case.

The latest case cited by the Attorney-General is United States vs. State Bank (96 U. S., 30), which holds, in the words of the court:

"But surely it ought to require neither argument nor authority to support the proposition that, where the money or property of an innocent person has gone into the coffers of the nation by means of fraud to which its agent was a party, such money o

At the trial of this case in the court below (10 Blatchford, 280) Blatchford, J., had expressed the same view, relying upon the solidity of the Government's credit:

"With the known usage of the Government to pay its obligations at maturity, and the loss of interest, and the rejection of the privilege of conversion, all of which facts were apparent to Vermilye & Co. by inspection of the notes, there is every reason for holding them to the rule that they took nothing but the actual right and title of their vendor."

I am therefore of the opinion that upon the receipt and indorsement in blank by a pensioner, payment by the Government is consummated, and that such check, with its blank indorsement, may pass freely from hand to hand. Furthermore, if the pensioner, after having made a limited indorsement of this check to some individual, but without assignment thereof to the indorsee, retains it in his possession and dies, the indorsee has no title in the instrument, because never delivered to him, and the representatives of the decedent have the same right to strike the name of the indorsee from the back of the check, and leave the blank indorsement, as had the pensioner in his lifetime, for so long as the check remains in his possession he may do with it as he pleases; and if upon his death it be found either with a blank indorsement or an indorsement to some other person, the payment to the pensioner has been completed, he having done all to the check that was necessary to make it negotiable anywhere. (1 Dan'l, sec. 265; Cahoon vs. Adams, 11 Vt., 604.)

My conclusion, therefore, is:

With all due respect, I feel obliged to dissent from—

1. The ruling of the Secretary of the Interior, that mailing of the check is enough.

1. The ruling of the Secretary of the Interior, that making of the check is enough.

2. The ruling of Comptroller Maynard, that mailing and receipt of the check are enough, in that one more act—an indorsement by the pensioner—is requisite to make the instrument negotiable.

3. The opinion of the Attorney-General that only the actual cashing of the check constitutes payment, for the reason above stated, that once all the formalities of mailing, receiving, and indorsing a pension check have been completed, the instrument must stand, so long as the credit of the United States stands, on a different plane from the ordinary check known to the law of negotiable instruments.

a different plane from the ordinary check known to the law of legislate instruments.

In the future, in the settlement of the accounts of pension agents, rules 1 and 3 of Comptroller Maynard's memorandum of April 5, 1887, will be followed, and rule 2, as he laid it down, will be so far modified as my views above stated demand.

SIGOURNEY BUTLER, Comptroller.

A bill (H. R. 4351) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 4353) to provide a home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 5870) to punish as a felony the carnal and unlawful knowing of any female under the age of sixteen years;
A bill (H. R. 6783) to place the name of John A. Griffey on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 11785) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation and crossing of certain streets in the city of Washington and District of Columbia by the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to meet the demands of increased travel incident to the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th of March, 1889;

A bill (H. R. 12107) to increase the maximum amount of international money-orders from fifty to one hundred dollars; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the Government of the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHAND-LER] coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr.

CHANDLER on the 25th instant:

CHANDLER on the 25th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay or allowances due such officers, known as the longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowance of such claims; and also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire not being in his seat, the resolution will lie over informally until he comes in, retaining its place.

PRINTING OF SUNDAY-REST HEARING.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the following concurrent resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed for the use of Congress 32,000 extra copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fiftieth Congress, second session, being the hearing before the Committee on Education and Labor on Senate bill 2983, known as the Sunday-rest bill, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

If there be none, the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11879.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for a moment that I may ask the Senate to consider a bill for a bridge across the Missouri River, which it is important should be passed as soon as possible and which will cause no debate; if it does I shall not press it. It is Senate bill No. 3663.

Mr. HALE. If it will occasion no debate I shall yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the pending order may be informally laid aside and the bill (S. 3663) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri, taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there is one word that ought to be changed. On page 5 of the bill, line 17, after the word "be," I move to insert the words "commenced or;" so as to read:

And until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, etc.

I presume there will be no objection to that.

Mr. PLUMB. That is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 17, after the word "be," it is proposed to insert "commenced or;" so as to read:

And until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL rose.

Mr. HALE. Let us go on with the regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must beg the indulgence of the Senator from Maine for a moment. Order of Business 2116, Senate bill 3146, is a bill precisely similar to the one just passed for the erection of a bridge near Kansas City, and it is very important that it should be passed in order that the House of Representatives may have time to act upon it. It will consume no time. It is the same kind of a bill and reported from the committee favorably. I hope the Senator will consent to let that be passed, and then he can proceed with his bill.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of going on with the appropriation bill and getting it out of the way. But I will once more yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Missouri?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, after the words "county of," to strike out "Platt" and insert "Platte;" so as to read:

And a point in the county of Platte, Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1, section 3, before the word "said," to strike out "if" and insert "the;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 17, before the word

"built," to insert "commenced or;" so as to read:

And until the said plan and location of the bridge and approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the word "and" in line 16, page 4. It should evidently be "are," and will be so corrected to read

And until said plan and location of the bridge are approved.

Instead of "and approved." The correction will be made if there be no objection.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to insert as a new section.

SEC.6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to change the number of section 6 to 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO ARMY NURSES.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the army nurses bill was reported almost a year ago, and has been a matter of frequent conference between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and myself. He has prepared a substitute which, with some trifling alterations that I have suggested, I think is quite as good as the original bill. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine to give way for its consideration, it being the understanding that if any debate shall arise it may be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HALE. On the agreement that it shall take no time, and then I shall try to go on with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 373) for the relief of women enrolled as army nurses, etc.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill has already been read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be read again for information.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill has been read, and I desire to offer a substitute for it, moving it as an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the original bill. It may be better than the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute will now be

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

That all women nurses during the late war and prior to August 4, 1895, who were approved by Miss D. L. Dix, "superintendent of women nurses," or her authorized agents, or specially appointed by the Surgeon-General or other proper United States authority, and who rendered six months' service as such, or who, prior to the completion of such term of service, were disabled in such service and honorably discharged by reason of such disability, shall be granted a pension during life at the rate of $25 per month from the passage of this act, according to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That such women nurses as are now receiving pensions under special or general laws at a less rate than $25 per month, and may be entitled to the benefits of this act, may, on proper application to the Commissioner of Pensions, receive the said sum of $25 per month.

SEC. 3. No fee, compensation, or allowance shall be paid to, received, or accepted by any agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in the prosecution of any claim for pension under this act. And it shall be the duty of the Interior and War Departments to render all proper aid to applicants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have my friend from New Hampshire explain to the Senate the principle on which this bill rests, making a distinction in favor of female nurses as against male nurses, and as it respects the putting of these lady nurses on the pension-roll. Some of them, I have no doubt, are just as well entitled to pensions as are thousands of soldiers who fought all the time or who came home and have as yet no pensions. I dare say there may be some good ground for it, but I confess I do not quite understand it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am not in a situation to debate this bill, because I only have the opportunity of thus getting it before the Senate; but the Senate will remember a great many efforts during the previous session, and I am sure the Senate understands the general ground on which these few old women are to be pensioned. There are scarcely any of them, and I do not know of any, who are not really dependent, and all of them are getting to be quite old. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] is not apt to err in the line of improperly loading up the pension-roll of the United States with cases which are not meritorious, and after considerable conference this substitute for the bill has been agreed to by him, and I am exceedingly anxious to have it disposed of now if possible. Otherwise we shall get no action during the present Congress. It covers not many cases, as I understand only a few hundred, and they are cases of great need. I do not know of any who are able to get along without this aid. They are required to have rendered six months' service and to have been honorably discharged (and many of them rendered several years' service), or they must have been disabled during the period of their service in order to get a pension at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will permit I will read a letter addressed to me by Mrs. Kate B. Sherwood, who is the chairman of the Woman's Relief Corps, dated Toledo, Ohio, January 13, 1889, in which she says:

which she says:

Dear Sir: Last winter when our bill to pension women who served as army nurses was brought up by General Blair it met with serious opposition on the grounds that it was an indiscriminate measure, and the War Department could not (or did not) furnish a list of the women properly commissioned.

To meet this objection the Woman's Relief Corps have undertaken to ascertain the real condition of the women who held commissions through Miss Dix, Mr. Yeatman, or others of the United States Sanitary Service, by sending out the blank herewith attached. Upwards of one hundred well-authenticated cases are now before us, and I am satisfied that the total number who would be benefited under the act would be but a few hundred.

Of the number before us over eighty are women old and destitute, the most having become enrolled when women under thirty were not received. Their ages run from sixty to eighty-six. Some of them have had no assistance this winter save a small sum from the Relief Corps. These women were the healers on the ghastly fields where their brothers were the smiters. Their service was to humanity. May we ask your co-operation when General Blair brings up this bill?

Yours, very truly,

KATE B. SHERWOOD.

It was in order to relieve the class referred to in this communication that the substitute was prepared.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of women enrolled as army nurses.1

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer an amendment to the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota. I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories, and also the accompanying paper printed in the form that it is for ref-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment with the accompanying paper will be received, referred to the Committee on Territories, and printed.

AMERICAN SHIPPING AND INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE.

Mr. BROWN. I present resolutions passed at the Augusta National Exposition by the Southern Manufacturers' Association and by the Exhibitors' Association, indorsing the American Shipping and Industrial League and indorsing specially what is known as the tonuage act, now pending before the Congress of the United States. There is but a single page of it and it is mostly in coarse print. The petitioners respectfully ask that the paper be filed and published in the RECORD, as it is so short. I ask that leave.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the petition which he has presented may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the nature of the petition. Mr. BROWN. Resolutions passed by the Southern Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to the paper going into the RECORD. The statement of it is already full enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to have it printed as a document?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I will ask that it be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4496) to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River, or its tributaries, in the county of Wabash and State of Illinois.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate concerning the counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I now ask that the Senate proceed with the considera-tion of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, omitting the first formal reading and considering the committee amendments as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Dolph in the chair). Unless there be objection that course will be pursued.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30,

The Secretary began the reading of the bill and read to line 13.

Mr. GIBSON. I offer an amendment, which I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept.

Mr. HALE. The order of the Senate is that the committee amendments shall be first proceeded with. When we get through with those to the end of the bill, then the Senator can come in with other amend-

Mr. GIBSON. Then I give notice of the amendment.
Mr. HALE. What is the amendment of the Senator?
Mr. GIBSON. I give notice that at the proper time, after the words "salaries of," in line 10, I shall move to insert the words "ambassadors and" before "ministers." Mr. HALE. That can be offered after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. GIBSON. Then I give notice that I shall also move to strike out the words "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary," in line 11, and insert in place of them the word "ambassadors;" so that the schedule shall read:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors to France, Germany, Great Britain, and Russia, at $17,500, etc. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Maine whether a comma should not be inserted after the word "Hayti," in line 36.

Mr. HALE. The clerks can regulate that.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in "Schedule A," in the appropriations for "Miscellaneous expenses foreign intercourse," after line 165, to insert:

To enable the President to cause to be paid to the Government of Japan, to be by it distributed among the families of the Japanese subjects accidentally killed or injured by the explosion of shells from the United States steamer Omaha while engaged in target practice near the Island of Ikesima, on the 4th of March, 1887, $15,000, the same to be received as full indemnity for the loss and injuries caused as aforesaid, said sum to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the next two amendments, which will give rise to debate, may be passed over until the remainder of the bill is

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order, if there is no objection.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 188. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in "Schedule

B," in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service," in line 203, before the word "Rome," to insert "Ottawa;" and in line 204, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "twentyone;" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls-general at Constantinople, Ecuador, Frankfort, Ottawa, Rome, St. Petersburg, and Vienna, at $3,000 each, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 206, to insert:

Consul-general at Apia (Samoan and Friendly Islands), $2,500.

Mr. HALE. I move to make the sum $3,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 210, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "seventy-eight;" so as to read:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents, $378,500, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. That should be "79,500" instead of "78,500," to make the totals correct

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 210, before the word "thousand" in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out "seventy-eight" and insert "seventy-nine;" so as to read:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents, $379,500, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service, Class III," after line 232, to insert:

Germany: Consul at Barmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 237, after the word "Manchester," to strike out "Ottawa;" so as to read:

Great Britain and British dominions: Consuls at Belfast, Bradford, Demerara, lasgow, Manchester, and Singapore.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service, Class IV," after line 263, to insert:

Mexico: Consuls at Nuevo Laredo and Paso del Norte.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service, Class V," to strike out lines 286 and 287, as follows:

Friendly and Navigator's Islands: Consul at Apia.

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was, in line 289, before "Chemnitz," to strike out "Barmen;" so as to read:

Germany: Consuls at Chemnitz, Cologne, Crefeld, Dusseldorf, Leipsic, Nuremberg, and Sonneberg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 304, after the words "Acapulco and," to strike out "Nuevo Laredo" and insert "Piedras Negras;" so as to read:

Mexico: Consuls at Acapulco and Piedras Negras.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Salaries conSular service, Class VI," after line 329, to insert:

Caroline Islands: Consul at Ponape.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 356, after the words "Consuls at," to strike out "Paso del Norte" and insert "Matamoras, Nogales;" so as to read:

Mexico: Consuls at Matamoras, Nogales, and Tampico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in Schedule C, Class VII, in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service," in line 399, before the words "at Guaymas," to strike out "consuls" and insert "consul;" and after the word "Guaymas," to strike out "Matamoras and Piedras Negras;" so as to read:

Mexico: Consul at Guaymas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Allowance for clerks at consular offices," in line 430, after the word "consulates," to strike out "fifty-two thousand four" and insert "fifty-three thousand two;" so as to read:

For allowance for clerks at consulates-general and consulates, $53,280, the sum to be allowed at each not to exceed the rate herein specified, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 446, after the word "Nuremberg," to insert "Ottawa;" and in line 448, after the word "each," to strike out "thirteen thousand six" and insert "fourteen thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

Antwerp, Bordeaux, Calcutta, Colon, Dresden, Glasgow, Leipsic, Melbourne, Nuremberg, Ottawa, Panama, Port au Prince, Sheffield, Singapore, Sonneberg, Tunstall, Toronto, and Brussels, at $800 each, $14,400.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. Going back to page 9, on line 197, I move to strike out the word "Montreal."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The SECRETARY. In line 197, after "Kanagawa," it is proposed to strike out "Montreal;" so as to read:

Consuls-general at Berlin, Honolulu, Kanagawa, and Panama, at $4,000 each, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 7, line 138, I move to strike out "50" and insert "80" in the clause relative to unforeseen emergencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. At the beginning of line 138, page 7, it is proposed to strike out "50" and insert "80;" so as to read:

Eighty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I now offer my amendment and ask for its adoption. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are not all disposed of yet. There are two amendments remaining on pages 8

Mr. HALE. I propose that those amendments be passed over until the consideration of the bill is otherwise completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Gibson] will be received and

The Secretary. After the word "of," in line 10, it is proposed to insert the words "ambassadors and;" and in line 11 to strike out "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" and insert "ambassadors;" so as to read:

Salaries of ambassadors and ministers:
Ambassadors to France, Germany, Great Britain, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States Article II, section 2, provides the President of the United States, 'shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls." It is true that he never has yet appointed any one to be the ambassador of the United States to any foreign country, but this is owing to the fact that at the congresses held by the crowned heads of Europe it was agreed on, I think at Vienna in 1814, confirmed afterwards at the conference of Aix-la-Chapelle, that there should be established four grades of public ministers, namely, ambassadors, envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, and chargés d'affaires.

It was agreed at this conference that the ambassadors should be the personal representatives of the sovereigns. But since that time great changes have taken place in the relation between the nations of Europe and in the development of popular government and popular right. The publicists of the world to-day agree that political and religious liberty are inherent in man, not privileges which are granted by gov-And in the development of free thought and free institutions, ambassadors have practically become not the representatives of the crowned head or sovereign of their country, but the representatives of the nation whose citizens they are.

Not only have the general ideas of the relations of the European nations advanced in this regard very much indeed, but the developments of free institutions and the advancement of the United States in population and power and influence have given to them a very important and conspicuous position in the family of nations. We have large external interests of all kinds. Our people go abroad more than they did formerly, and our commerce is extending more widely than at any previous time in the history of our country. We touch foreign nations at every point in the world.

It seems to me now, sir, in view of these facts, that the time has come when we ought to give to our public servants who represent the power of our country and the rights and interests of our people such a position near those foreign governments as will enable them to render better service to our fellow-countrymen. It is not the title or the rank that I suggest as a reason why these public servants should be entitled to be called ampassadors, but because I believe ever Senate. entitled to be called ambassadors, but because I believe every Senator who has been abroad, and every Senator who has given consideration to this question, knows that our interests will be promoted abroad, our public agents will be able to render more efficient service, if we institutions not only by his distinguished services as a historian but for the great service he has rendered this country at critical periods of its history, and especially as our minister plenipotentiary to the court of Berlin, while attending the court was compelled to give precedence to the minister from Great Britain, and, after waiting until his patience was exhausted, secured an audience only by giving notice that the public business with which he was charged would permit no further

Now, why should this be? Why should it be that the ministers and public servants of this great country at foreign courts should be com-pelled to wait upon the pleasure of the ministers and public servants of other nations? This nation is entitled to as much consideration as any other. The people of foreign countries form their estimate of the manners and customs and power and influence of our country, not merely through consular reports and not merely by their commercial relations with the people of the United States, but by the qualifications, the personal bearing, and the surroundings and attentions paid to our min-personal bearing, and the surroundings and attentions paid to our ministers by their governments.

Mr. President, I know that there is a sentiment in this country, perhaps represented in this Chamber, which says, "Why, this is merely giving rank, gewgaws, and tinsel to our foreign ministers." That argument would apply just as well to the rank we bestow upon public servants whom we call into the Army or into the Navy. Why should we confer the rank of general and lieutenant-general and major-general and brigadier-general and colonel upon the officers of the Army, or admiral and commodors and centain in the Navy? Do major-general and brigadier-general and colonel upon the officers of the Army, or admiral and commodore and captain in the Navy? Do these words give offense to the ear of any gentleman? Why do we confer these titles? Not because they give a star more, or a button more to the coat, or because they give some insignia, but because we believe it essential to the organization of the Army and the Navy, and promotes the public welfare and the public service. For like reasons we bestow the titles of bailiffs, sheriffs, mayors, governors, judges, Senators, Presidents. They indicate the office, its honors and responsibilities and duties. So it is with our foreign officers. We do not have, it is true, an organized diplomatic corps, as foreign governments do.

We do not train men from their boyhood to become the public agents of our country any more than we train men from their boyhood to become members of the House of Representatives or the Senate or for the Supreme Court. Nor do we train them for any public position. But if we intend to establish a diplomatic corps to carry on negotiations with the leading diplomatists and publicists of Europe, it seems to me that every gentleman will feel the importance not only of selecting the best men, the truest and firmest Americans, the wisest and most sagacious, but also the importance of conferring upon them rank and position that are commensurate with the power and dignity and influence of the United States. There will be no innovation upon the existing system. We already have titles and grades, envoys, ministers, chargés d'affaires. The system is already established. Ambassador is only more significant than envoy. He speaks for a nation in the first rank in power.

Bearing upon this point, I would like to ask, if I do not violate the rules of the Senate, that some remarks of Mr. Cox in the House of Representatives, in the discussion of the last diplomatic and consular bill, may be read. They are very brief. I have marked them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the remarks will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

If we are to have our ministers respected, and in order to give them their proper status and dignity corresponding with our country's position among the powers of the earth, we ought to strike out the words "envoy extraordinary," etc., and insert "ambassador." If the great powers do not like it let them do their worst. It is not such a great loss to be unrepresented abroad as we may surmise. Then our ministers abroad representing our growing interests, if we must have them, will have precedence of the little powers, which generally have ministers of a lower grade, and be the equals of those who are of a higher rank without representing grander nations.

Why, sir, the representative of Servia, Roumania, Greece, Sweden, Belgium, or Holland, or of any of these smaller nations, can at any time, by calling their diplomats "ambassador," do as little Persia did at the Porte—step in, although arriving late, ahead of our envoy "extra-ordinary." Why should we, because a Republic, be bound to make our salsam before Russia, Germany, or England, by the ridiculous rules of the Holy Alliance, to which we never consented and as to which we were never consulted? Although when minister to Turkey I used to be on time and in advance of others. I was compelled to wait and to wait in an ante-room of the Porte the pleasure of these excellencies, of the monarchies and empires, with the thermometer going up beyond the nineties, from 12 o'clock to sunset. -Congressional Record, May 21, 1888, page 4484.

stand, is to strike out the words "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" and insert "ambassadors."

Mr. GIBSON. In line 11, as to the appointments of ambassadors to France, Germany, Great Britain, and Russia.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, my proposition to counter that would be to strike out the entire paragraph. It seems to me that the Senator from Louisiana proceeds upon an entirely artificial basis. He assumes confer upon them such a position as will give them dignity and influence and power at the foreign courts to which they are accredited.

I believe it to be true, Mr. President, that some years ago, when we were carrying on a very important negotiation with the German Government—I heard it stated; I am not sure of the fact—our minister at that time, George Bancroft, whom we all revere as an ornament to our countered a condition of things not natural but artificial. It is because we have encountered things social and not practical. It is because the cut of a man's jib or of his coat, his form of speech, the fashionableness of his attire, transcends the importance of his representative capacity.

Upon the field of battle where things are settled by might no general on one side would refuse to treat with a colonel on the other side if the colonel was the commander of the opposite forces. But we are asked to conform, to bow down before a state of things in which the relations of nations in international questions are settled by mere accidental questions of fashion; and that is all.

It may be, as stated by the Senator from Louisiana, and I have heard it stated elsewhere and otherwise, that our minister to England has to wait until the ministers from Corea and from Pumpernickel, who are denominated ambassadors or endowed with some other designation which suits the delicate sensibilities of the court at which he serves, have passed in procession into the imperial presence and is thereby humiliated.

No, Mr. President, I can not say that a person of that kind would be humiliated at anything. If he had been a truly American citizen, if he had been of the belief that he represented the most powerful nation in the world, he would have taken his credentials and his person away from the precincts of the court where he was thus slighted-if such discrimination constitutes a slight.

Mr. President, so long as we are content to have our relations with foreign people based upon these artificial distinctions, we shall be humiliated, because by acceding to the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana we are agreeing that the consideration which shall be given to those whom we send to represent us abroad shall be settled by the nations to whom we send them.

The court etiquette of Great Britain may change and the ambassador of to-day may be of less dignity than the consul of to-morrow, and we have got to follow these mutations and these changes and we have got to keep our ambassadors or our representatives, by whatever title they may be known, cooling their heels in the ante-rooms of the sovereigns of other countries according to the caprice which may put one designa-It is not upon this basis that nations ought to confer. It is not for purposes of that kind that they ought to confer. If there is not the basis of respect, of consideration for power and prestige, there ought to be no conference at all.

Mr. President, I intend to move to strike out this entire section, and I would no more consent at any time hereafter that any person should go to Great Britain or to Berlin or to Vienna or elsewhere bearing this title and subject to the conditions of which the Senator has spoken as liable at any time to be imposed. Whoever represents the American people is entitled to consideration not because of his personal character, of which these courts can know nothing, not because of his bearing, for that counts for nothing, but because of his representative character, and whether we call him consul or vice-consul or commercial agent or envoy extraordinary or minister or ambassador, or what not, is of no consequence to those courts in the proper sense of the term.

Mr. President, we have no political relations with the outside world that are settled nearly or remotely by the persons who represent us in our foreign service. The minister in London, the envoy extraordinary our foreign service. The minister in London, the envoy extraordinary we send there, is of the slightest possible consequence to the American Republic on account of anything he can do. He may hurt us, but he can not help us. We have been, as I think, very materially damaged by the representation we have had at that place during the past eight years—damaged not perhaps in a technical way, but damaging to the self-respect of our people and to the just respect they are entitled to be held in abroad; damaged by a subordination which did not comport with the dignity and the nower of the American people, nor with the rethe dignity and the power of the American people, nor with the responsibilities we ought to exact from the representatives of that power everywhere.

We have been damaged because we have sent men there who conformed themselves to the dilettanti who surrounded them, and who found in that the proper way of earning the compensation which they were paid, who have nowhere, and on no occasion, and at no time, and under no circumstances asserted the power and dignity of the American Republic. They have not represented free institutions as contrasted with monarchical institutions; they have not asserted the dignity, the simplicity of American citizenship, and they never will so long as we consent to follow by designation, and in fact, the example set by monarchical governments as to the functions of our diplomatic servicebase it upon social requirements, artificial distinctions, such as are peculiar to monarchical governments. This is where the true humilia-

I admit if we were to send the right kind of men abroad it would make less difference what we called them. If we would send men like Samuel F. Miller, of the Supreme Court, or Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, they would represent the people of the United States and republican institutions in spite of ceremonial and precedent, and would not wait on occasions of importance while representatives of minor Kansas suggests, to have upon his breast some decoration. That does powers went forward. They would not be "cabined, cribbed, con- not necessarily follow. None of our public servants, citizens in public fined" by artificial conditions of any sort. As it is, we send there men who become slavish followers of a condition of things in which international diplomacy, in which matters affecting the interest or character of the people cut no figure whatever. They are simply the bubble on the wave, the froth on the surface of the stream, the mere idlers and loungers and wall-flowers at receptions.

Now, Mr. President, the thing to do is for us to strike out this entire mass, this superincumbent mass of antiquated designation and title, and put some plain designation upon the persons whom we send abroad, to indicate in the first place that we are a people apart so far at least as this question of ceremonial is concerned, and whatever special functions we may endow them with, have it understood that first and foremost and all the time, day and night, in and out of season they shall represent the American Republic in its plainness of speech, in its simpleness of manner, in its overwhelming interests, and in the abiding consequences which we believe are to come from the maintenance of free government upon this continent. If we have no men of that kind, then let us have no representatives abroad.

We know by experience repeated over and over again and emphasized during the past twelve months, that whenever it comes to impor-tant things, to what is called diplomacy, which is said to be only an aggravated form of lying, that is done at headquarters, and the minister at London is not even consulted to-day as to what the cable has conveyed to him from his superiors at Washington. Negotiations are carried on at the capitals of the respective countries by special commissioners appointed for that purpose, and the cable conveys the instructions even in the most minor affairs to be carried out by the minister. The substance has been modernized, why not modernize the form? Why cling to a condition of things which is antiquated, useless, offensive? No government worthy of our consideration will seriously object to any respectable means of communication we may desire. It is the nation back of the cablegram, back of the minister or the consul, to which they will look.

If we are to understand from the speech of the Senator from Louisiana that the American Republic is nothing unless it sends a man to Berlin attired in a particular way and bearing on his breast his particular designation in print plain and unmistakable, then I take it the intercourse between these two governments is of no possible conseintercourse between these two governments is of no possible consequence. Words are not things in that sense and in that domain. The only principle in that domain is one of power, and the only morals that of self-interest. If the self-interest of the German people or of the British people or of the Austrian people, or whatever other people we communicate with, is not concerned in the matter of association with the American Republic, then that association had better stop.

Mr. CLESON. Mr. President the remarks of the Secretar from Kan

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Kansas are like everything which emanates from him, strong and vigorous. I concur with him, that it would be better either to abolish our diplomatic corps entirely, or give them proper rank and position at foreign

The Senator objects to the word "ambassador." I can not see the foundation upon which his objection rests. That is not a foreign word, it is an American word, the word that our forefathers used to designate our public agents on foreign duty, for we find it in the Constitution; it was put there by them, whereas the other phrase, "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary," is a much more imposing and high-sounding phrase. That is not to be found in the Constitution of the United States. That is not the title which the framers of the Constitution declared should be conferred upon the ministers of the United States to foreign courts and nations.

Now, will not the Senatoragree that if we keep up this service at all, it is necessary to give our public servants some title, some designation by which they may be known to foreign courts and foreign nations? And if we give them any, I submit to the Senator we should give them that title which we find in the Constitution of the United States, the title selected by the framers of the Constitution.

I do not intend to defend the eminent gentlemen who have been our envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the court of St. James. We all know that Mr. Lowell, who represented this country there, was highly esteemed by the British people, not only as a minister, but as a man of letters and as an orator who on many occasions gave force and luster to the principles of republican institutions by able and luminous expositions of them. I know of no interest of the United States which was committed to his keeping that suffered in any respect while he was in England; nor do I know of any interest that has suffered while the distinguished citizen of Vermont, Mr. Phelps, has been our envoy at that court. It is true they both probably dressed like gentlemen; they had their coats brushed and their shoes blacked; and they went to entertainments and made themselves welcome everywhere in England by their good manners and high intelligence. ceived honors from the lord mayor of London and other public func-tionaries of Great Britain, and they demeaned themselves like gentlemen and scholars and patriotic Americans.

I know of no reason why if we should confer the title of ambassador upon the American minister, he should be required, as the Senator from Kansas suggests, to have upon his breast some decoration. That does life, either at home or abroad, wear stars or garters. We value men by their character and ability, not by their clothes, whether in fashion or out of fashion. The men who made this Constitution knew very well that the day would come when this country would necessarily have extensive relations with foreign nations. Many of them had been witnesses of the contumely and the contempt with which foreign nations had treated our ambassadors, or rather our commissioners as they were styled then, when they went abroad suing for alliances and for recognition for our infant nation.

They sent then the most illustrious citizens, who gained credit for our country and who did decorate themselves with stars and garters in foreign countries to which they were commissioned, and no man more than that great philosopher, Benjamin Franklin. He felt it necessary to make himself a persona grata to the people to whom he was commissioned, and to accommodate himself to their manners and their customs without sacrificing his own robust common sense, his own representative character, his own devotion to popular government and popular rights; and if we had more Benjamin Franklins among us, I for one would consent that he and such as he might wear knee-breeches and stars and garters at any court in Europe.

But, sir, we live in simpler times. We are more republican to-day than we were even when this Constitution was made; and of course the example and influence of this nation have made European nations more republican. Forty years ago we could not have named an ambassador to any court in Europe. He would not have been received, because it had been agreed upon by the allied sovereigns at Vienna that ambassadors were the personal representatives of their sovereigns. But the interests of nations have superseded the interests of reigning dynasties, of ruling families. Ambassadors now represent nations, not crowned heads. Owing to the development of popular government on the continent of Europe, France and Switzerland send and receive ambassadors.

Why should we not do the bidding of the framers of the Constitution of the United States and give the simple title that they originated? What will be the effect of it? It will not turn the head of any common-sense American. Would he become less robust in his republicanism? Would he any the less represent the power and greatness of the United States if we confer this simple title upon him? Surely not, unless he was already very weak-minded before he was appointed to this office.

This designation of our public servants in foreign employment would probably not be particularly agreeable to the courts of Europe. It would seem to indicate the growth of popular liberty and reveal to the crowned heads of Europe and to their subjects the prestige and power of the great Republic. By receiving an ambassador from the United States they would themselves pay deference and respect to the wonderful advancement which has been made in the last forty years by the people towards self-government. But the strongest reason I can assign for this amendment is founded in the practical benefits to accrue to our citizens and

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the two propositions presented by the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Kansas embody the extreme ground on this subject. The Senator from Louisiana moves to amend the report of the committee by substituting "ambassadors" as a designation in the foreign service for ministers plenipotentiary, and the Senator from Kansas, who will have none of either, desires to strike out the ministers plenipotentiary entirely, thus abolishing the higher grade of missions to foreign powers, whatever that grade may be termed. The committee, in considering the bill before directing me to report it, concluded to leave the law and the practice as they are. It is an old question. It has been up repeatedly in Congress before this, and the practice that was early originated has been maintained and our highest rank in ministers abroad, as everybody knows, is that of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

dinary and minister plenipotentiary.

Mr. PLUMB. Is there any higher rank, and if so, what makes that rank?

Mr. HALE. I will come to that in a moment. So far as the committee is concerned, it has taken no action and is content with the bill as it is; it has proposed neither to advance the title nor to destroy the ministers. Speaking only for myself and not as the organ of the committee, I shall with pleasure and with satisfaction vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana for the reasons that have been given by him.

If we are to maintain diplomatic relations with the great powers of the world, we must needs maintain those relations after the manner and the fashion in which those relations are maintained throughout the civilized world. We may abolish all this, as the Senator from Kansas proposes, and may deal with this subject by the consular service and by special embassies and by negotiations set on foot at a foreign capital or at our capital, and thereby dispense with the whole corps of foreign ministers, but I assume that that will not be done, that what would be revolutionary in this respect—not using the word in a harsh phrase, but as destroying what has long been maintained and recognized—will not now be adopted by the Senate; and assuming that I am earnestly and decidedly in favor of giving to the eminent citizens, whom the Administration from time to time sends abroad to represent us in the great courts of the world, the designations that are given by those great powers when they send agents one to another, and which, if we adopt these designations, they will adopt in sending their representatives here.

And, Mr. President, the title of "ambassador," as operating in actual diplomatic service, is something more than titular. It carries with it something more than designation. There is as much rank in diplomacy as there is in military life. An ambassador at a court has as clear a designation and as clear a meaning and carries with it privileges and powers of representation as clearly as the title of field-marshal, or lieutenant-general, or general, or admiral of the fleet, or any other well-known and accepted designation of office. It is not pleasant, and more than that it is not useful, that the United States in its intercourse with foreign powers should be put aside and its ministers classified with the ministers of small and insignificant powers. The business that our minister at the court of St. James transacts with the British Government, and the business that the ministers at Paris and at Berlin and at St. Petersburg transact with the great powers of which these cities are the capitals represent the American people; and when this business is transacted, for one I desire to see the minister from the Republic of the United States of America clothed with every power, with every rank, and with every attribute that belongs to the representatives of the other great powers.

It is not fashionable, as represented by the Senator from Kansas, to linger in the ante-rooms to wait until a higher class is disposed of. To sit at all proceedings and upon all occasions with the ministers of small powers is not only not a pleasant thing for our minister, but it is in itself humiliating to the people that the minister represents. And as I began by saying, without taking up more time of the Senate, if we are to send these representatives abroad, clothing them with the power that goes with their great place, let them stand before all the nations of the earth equal with the ministers from other great powers, or keep them at home and try the experiment suggested by the Senator from Kansas. That I am not in favor of.

Mr. President, for one, without claiming to represent the committee,
I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. REAGAN Lide not propose to discuss the question as to the

Mr. REAGAN. I do not propose to discuss the question as to the title which shall be given to our representatives at foreign courts, but I simply take the floor for the purpose of stating that if my views could prevail we would abolish the entire diplomatic service. It originated in an age of the world so entirely different from the present age and for purposes and uses so entirely different from what now exist that the world has outgrown this service as it was originally instituted, has gone by it. In times far back ambassadors and ministers were sent from court to court when there was but little intercommunication between the nations of the earth and when they were generally holding hostile attitudes towards each other, and their mission as a general rule in those early ages was to obtain such court secrets as they could by the employment of money or any other agency which their government placed in their power, by the corruption of public ministers and otherwise.

The progress of civilization and of society and government has entirely changed since those times. The agency of steam, of railroads, of steam-ships, of telegraphs, has come into play. Great daily newspapers, collecting information from all parts of the world, distributed by the telegraph to every part of the world every morning, give the information now without the expense of official dignitaries to all governments that care to know what the current information of the times

Our public ministers, by whatever title you choose to call them, rarely now are permitted to settle questions of diplomacy. They go to formally represent this Government, but when any serious question arises, so far as our Government is concerned, it is submitted to the consideration of the State Department and the President, and generally when any course of action is to be taken, notwithstanding we have ministers at those courts, we send special agents to transact that business. I need not go through the list of times and circumstances in which we have employed special agencies to settle such questions when we had ministers at the courts where they were to be settled.

Now, then, whatever governments are doing that they would com-

Now, then, whatever governments are doing that they would communicate to a public minister or an ambassador, they communicate to the gatherers of news, and it is transmitted throughout the world, so that each government knows what is going on in every other government so far as those governments are willing to let their action be

It may be said that we need these officials to protect the rights, the interests, and the property of American citizens.

Public ministers have very little to do with questions of commerce and property. I recognize the great necessity of commercial agencies, consuls, and other commercial agents, whose duty it is to protect the commercial interests and the rights and property of American citizens in the countries to which they are accredited. They answer all the purposes that are useful that a public minister can now subserve. While I would preserve our consular system, our system of commercial agents in its fullest vigor, I would abolish the antiquated idea of ministers plenipotentiary or ministers by whatever title we may choose to designate them, simply because they seem to be useless, and the world through its progress has outgrown the system.

I do not propose to engage extensively in this discussion. I have no expectation that the view which I express will be adopted now, and therefore I do not choose to prolong the discussion of the subject. simply rose to express my own view, one which I have long entertained, that we have outgrown the necessity for public ministers, and that we ought to abolish the system and save the money expended in keeping

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the State of Texas has had a very large body of public land. In case it desired to dispose of 20,000 acres of that land to some corporation in New York City or to some syndicate undertaking to build a state-house down there, why would it not be just as well to do all this business by telegraph and by letter and by public newspapers, as the Senator suggests? On the other hand, however, I think the governor of Texas would do a very wise thing to have a long talk with the Senator from Texas and ask him to go to New York to represent Texas and meet the president of this corporation, and settle the thing in an evening's conversation far more satisfactorily than they could by letter. That is all there is to the foreign minister, and there is not a business man in the world who does not know that it is a great deal better for two representatives of contending interests, corporations, nations, or whatever they are, to get together and have a friendly evening's talk over the subject than it is to write. And moreover it is still quite possible that things may happen to an American citizen abroad that may be disagreeable.

I should be very glad if I were in that condition, if I happened to be one of those unfortunate men in a foreign country, to know that the Senator from Texas was there the representative of my great nation, and that it would not be me, a poor stranger, but he, a man who spoke and that it would not be me, a poor stranger, but he, a man who spoke with sixty millions of people behind him, who had to represent the case. I should appeal to him to go to the chief men of that nation and vindicate my wrong. Would the Senator think he was useless under those circumstances? No, sir. We are not going back beyond barbarism to dispense with representatives abroad, and while we have them a certain precedence among them is inevitable.

The Senator from Kansas thought if we had distinguished men like Justice Miller or Judge Thurman abroad they would speak for themselves; they would not need any name. Certainly they would not in the consideration and respect of their communities; and yet an endeavor to hear men first or march them first according to their own moral and mental merit would give far more offense than obedience to any code, however artificial it might be. If a minister abroad, in giving a great public entertainment or attending to public business, should say, "Why, here is the eminent Judge Thurman; he has got more in his venerable old head than forty men like this fellowfrom Spain, and we will hear him first"-that would not answer. It would make more quarreling than the other, and there would be a great deal more non-sense in it, and a great deal more liability to the commission of errors. Now, sir, I suppose we shall have what the military and naval men call quite a function here in a few days-the inauguration of a Presi-It is necessary that we should come into this room and go out of this room in some sort of order. Shall we endeavor to do it according to the dignity and elegance and mental and moral ability of the several men in their own respective States, or shall we obey a certain artificial code in regard to their official positions? The latter is a good deal the more convenient way. The Senator from Kansas and myself would dislike it very much if we were asked to wait until all the doorkeepers and messengers of the Senate should have gone out on the platform. It is simply a matter of convenience; that is all.

In the construction of our committees also, if the Senator should happen to be second in rank upon one of the strong committees and happen to be second in rank upon one of the strong committees and his chief should die or resign, he would think it quite an unfair thing for those who choose chiefs of committees to go down to the foot of the committee and say, "Mr. A who came here yesterday is a better man than the Senator from Kansas; we do not care anything about his twenty years of service or anything of that sort." It is a great deal easier to observe some of these artificial laws of precedence than it is to violate them.

So I have no difficulty whatever in voting for the motion of the Senator from Louisiana. I think it is simply common sense. I think that to say that the minister from the United States shall not be required to wear any particular uniform is all well enough, but to say that he will absolutely disregard or will vainly endeavor to induce all nations to disregard the established laws of consequence is an impossibility and quite a useless attempt. Indeed, sir, there is a certain aping of humility about it that is prouder than pride itself. The simplest and easiest thing is to agree with the rest of the world about these non-essentials.

I speak of these things because it has been my fortune to hear gentlemen-and I am glad to say we have had some of our most charming gentlemen and ablest men in the diplomatic service, from Benjamin Franklin down, and under this Administration, for I make no dis-tinction of administrations or parties—I have heard those gentlemen on more than one occasion say that it was very annoying; they did not say they were insulted; they did not say they felt that their country was degraded or that they themselves thought any the less of themselves; but it was exceedingly inconvenient to see gentlemen representing some unknown nation going in half an hour ahead and occupying the afternoon, while the representative of the United States of America, because his country only called him an envoy, had to wait until the other man's business was done, or he was the last man to dinner, or the last man to go here or there, I do not care what it is.

These things are not of extraordinary importance; but to pretend to disregard them and to go around with an apron on your shoulder and say, "I am only an envoy; I might be an ambassador, but my country will only call me an envoy," is a false humility in my judgment.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, on the 27th day of March, 1867, the Congress of the United States passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons in the diplomatic service of the United States are prohibited from wearing any uniform or official costume not previously authorized by Congress.

That was designed, as the Senator from Connecticut well knows, to meet a condition of things to the effect that the persons whom we sent abroad were or assumed to be under constraint to don special attire suited to court custom. The Senator from Connecticut wants now to turn entirely back, and he wants to have the persons whom we send abroad entitled to credit, not because of the people whom they represent, but of the costume they wear and the designation we give them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon. The rule about costume is right.

Mr. PLUMB. If he had been a brigadier-general commanding a brigade on the coast of North Carolina in 1863, engaged in conflict with a colonel commanding a brigade of the Confederate army and had constrained his opponent to succumb, he would not have declined to treat with him because he was below him in rank. In other words, he would have recognized that the fact of actually commanding was the significant question, not the fact of rank inferior or superior. Now we are asked to go back to an order of things which has disappeared in every other quarter, and put our intercouse with foreign peoples on a purely artificial, antiquated basis, which remains as a relic of the doctrine of divine right, and this in the name and behalf of sixty millions of American people.

I do not know that I care whether our minister comes in ahead or behind when he goes in procession to sniff the incense that surrounds the persons of the monarchs into whose presence he is ushered. not know but that perhaps after that incense has been tainted by exhalations from the nostrils of forty or fifty of the representatives of other powers it might be better adapted to republican respiration.

The Senator from Connecticut says that if I were denied, as a representative of the State of Kansas, admission into this Chamber, except in a certain order, I would be offended. Not at all. If I were wholly denied admission then I should complain on behalf of my State, but if, owing to some purely arbitrary regulation, continuing from time to time, and affecting all persons alike, I should come in at the tail of the procession, I should accommodate myself to that, and not feel myself humiliated at all, and I would not ask the State of Kansas to give me a designation other than a Senator in order that I might come in at the head of it. I would consider that in so doing I was insulting the State of Kansas, because I was putting names before things. The question of order in a procession is nothing. The question of primacy involved in a representative capacity is another thing, and an entirely different

I think before this bill is passed I will propose an amendment something after this fashion:

And if the persons who may be appointed to office according to the designa-tions and with the rank hereinbefore specified shall not be received or treated with the respect accorded to representatives of first-class powers at the capitals or places where such persons are accredited, then the persons so accredited from the United States shall withdraw and return to their own country.

Mr. President, it is worth something to determine the question of the substance of our relations with foreign governments. impose upon the representatives of foreign governments here distinctions which affect the substance of their intercourse with our people. The dean of the diplomatic representation at the capital of the United States, by an arbitrary rule which is desirable to be established, happens to be the minister from Hayti.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir. Mr. SHERMAN. The rule of precedence in the United States is just as arbitrary as in France, England, Germany, or anywhere else. Every country in the world has its usages, a departure from which would be regarded as improper and wrong, and something in the nature of an insult. We have the very rule to which the Senator alludes, that the oldest in appointment shall take the precedence in all the formal meetings that occur in social or official life. He sits at the head of the table. That rule is just as absolute in this country, not by law, but by universal custom. From the time of Washington to this hour they take their order of precedence according to the time they stay here. Suppose that Great Britain or Germany or Russia or any great power should say, "We are not to be put aside by the minister of Hayti, or of Costa Rica, or of any of these small countries; we are a great people and represent a magnificent empire, boundless in its extent, and therefore we will not travel down to the foot of the line," should we not consider that a piece of impertinence?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is making my own argument much better than I; so I might as well sit down and let him go on.

Mr. SHERMAN. In Europe, let me say, they prescribe a different rule. There are certain grades of rank defined in all the customs of civilized life from Greece and Rome to this time. civilized life from Greece and Rome to this time. There are distinct ranks, and by common consent the ambassador is at the head; then the minister plenipotentiary, and so on down, and they are graded by etiquette—recognized, you may say, in international law in all European countries by the custom of the countries.

I say that when we send our ministers to those countries, our minis-I say that when we send our ministers to those countries, our ministers must conform to their rules just as their ministers must do when they are sent here. We do not stop to ask whether it is reasonable or not. We claim to be a great people, with vast interests all over the world, and we say that we will in those countries where we have important business to transact give to our ministers such a rank, such a title, such pay and emoluments as will enable them with propriety and in accordance with the customs of those countries at all times to see the head of the Government, whether it be king or queen, emperor or

That is all there is about it; and the only reason why I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is because I know it will advance the interests of the people of the United States. It is not to add a feather to the man who is sent abroad, but simply because it will enable him directly to approach the leading man or the controlling figure in the country to which he is accredited. In that view of it, I think the Senator from Kansas, as a practical man, will see the advantage of giving a man such surroundings and such titles, such a position, not according to our rules, for ours are much more democratic or republican, but according to their rules, as will enable our minister in Great Britain to see the prime minister at any moment without waiting for any one, or as will enable our minister in Germany to see Prince Bismarck or the Emperor promptly, and transact his business on a footing of equality with the highest representatives of other nations.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator I think is quite apart from the essential fact. There is no doubt that, notwithstanding this precedence, the man who sits at the foot of the table can eat just as much as the man who sits at the head of it. "Where McGregor sits is always the head of the table." If it is designed simply to enable our representatives to sit at the head of the table and to get into the presence of the Queen first, then we are accommodating ourselves to that artificial condition to which I object.

As I was proceeding to say, the dean of the diplomatic corps here is now the minister from Hayti, and the one who preceded him was minister from the Sandwich Islands, and yet the minister from Great Britain is not offended at that, I take it. He is a sensible man. He does not want the British Government to designate him something else in order that he may sit above the minister from Hayti, because he knows that the power of the British Government which is back of him and which he represents in this capital will enable him to see the President of the United States or the Secretary of State whenever impor-tant measures require that he shall see them. We are providing here for the precedence of our ministers on occasions when the power and the prestige and the consequence of the American Republic is not at e and can not be. We are assuming that the cut of the garb, the fashion of the knee-buckle, and the particular point to the swallow-tail coat, and all that sort of thing, is something that concerns our people in the important relations which they shall have with nations. That is what we are doing, and that is all there is about it.

Did any one ever complain that the envoy extraordinary of the American Republic could not get audience on important occasions with the princes and potentates of another country?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. Mr. SHERMAN. Le Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say to the Senator from Kansas that no country in the world that I know of undertakes to prescribe the dress of any foreign representative at its court.

Mr. PLUMB. They did do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.

Mr. PLUMB. That is to say, not the dress at the court, but the dress in which the foreign representative was to be received on certain occasions

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.
Mr. PLUMB. Then why was the statute passed?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say that in the courts of Europe every representative of any foreign nation is presented in the clothing prescribed by the usual customs of his own country; and so in our own country every person who is sent here has a right to wear that dress which, according to his rank and standing at home, he is entitled to

I remember very distinctly that General Dix wore his uniform as a major-general in the Army of the United States when he was minister to France. Mr. Buchanan, who was a civilian, always insisted, and there was no question about it (it was acceded to and not denied) that the American representative at London had a right to wear the same dress that he would appear in before the President of the United States. He insisted upon it, and there never was any objection to it. Some gentlemen with more vanity, I think, than brains, somebody behind me says, sometimes secured a title, it was said, in order to enable them to appear in uniform. That was a mere personal vanity of the particular individual, but in every country it is usual for the representative of a foreign country to wear the dress which he wears at

Mr. PLUMB. How did it happen that the Senator from Ohio, then a Senator from the State of Ohio, as now, consented to the passage of the law of 1867

Mr. SHERMAN. I can tell the Senator. I shall not mention names, but I can say it was because some gentleman, it is said, did procure some kind of a military title and rank, probably a nominal rank in the Army, in order to enable him to wear a military uniform, and that resolution was passed merely to put a black eye upon that kind of nonsense.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well; that is the kind of nonsense that the Senator is now proposing himself to subscribe to. That is to say, some representative from the United States proposed to commend himself specially to the society in which he wanted to move on the other side by the character of his clothing—not as a representative of the United States; he was willing to merge that in his clothing.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was personal vanity.

Mr. PLUMB. Exactly; and the Senator from Ohio wants to put it now in the statute. We shall have more of that personal vanity and all that sort of thing, and more of that concession to the social usages of the place where the ambassador goes. I do not object to our representative conforming to those usages in a reasonable way, but I object to giving him a name by statute in order that he may be more of a social figure than he otherwise would be.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, nobody sees the point of controversy more clearly than the Senator from Kansas. Why does the Senator insist and keep insisting that this is a question of clothes, of decorations, of gewgaws? The question whether our minister to a great power shall be termed an ambassador, received and accredited as an ambassador, with the privileges in a business line and in negotia-tions that go with that title, has nothing whatever to do with the question of clothes, the question of gewgaw. A chargé d'affaires, who is the lowest in grade, is just as likely to get upset and lose his head and become ridiculous and bedizen himself and appear like a fool as an envoy extraordinary or ambassador. It has nothing whatever to do with the question of clothes.

LUMB. That is true; the ambassador may wear the same But it is the parallel; it is the same line of argument exactly. Mr. PLUMB. We had an important controversy a few years ago, in which the British Government and the French Government were involved, and we had envoys extraordinary in both places. We had more concern about the relations of those governments and their people to the American Republic than we will ever have again. Did Charles Francis Adams or Mr. Bigelowor Mr. Dayton ever complain that they could not be heard by the courts to which they were accredited because they were not denominated ambassadors?

Mr. HALE. Let me say that I do not suppose in the last twentyfive years there has been one minister to those great courts who has not complained and gravely set forth the infirmity he found himself under in transacting business. If the Senator will talk with the ministers as he sees them here as they return to America and give an account of what they have been doing, he will find that every one of them er ters formal complaint, not personally, but in the interest of the peo-ple whom he represents. Each minister I have known anything about for twenty-five years has made this complaint, not in a querulous way, not in a small way, but has said that it was a serious inconvenience.

When the gentleman who represents us at the court of Great Britain was here not many months ago he spoke of this same thing. He said, "It will not affect me; I shall not remain there long;" but he narrated It will not affect me; I shall not remain there long;" but he narrated instances where he was seriously, as the representative of this nation, incommoded and put off because of that fact; and he said, "I should feel, not for myself but for my country and my successors, that a sensible and an important thing had been done if our ministers there could be accredited as those of other great powers."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator actually quotes the present minister to Great Britain as authority on that subject!

Mr. HALE. As authority to a certain extent

Great Britain as authority on that subject!

Mr. HALE. As authority to a certain extent.

Mr. PLUMB. To a very uncertain extent, I should say.

Mr. HALE. I do not think what he said was in any way a matter of privacy, but he talked plainly, and I only mentioned that instance. All of them do the same thing, and have done so for twenty-five years.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to make one suggestion, partly supplementing that of the Senator from Maine, before he proceeds? We have this thing thoroughly established in our diplomatic legislation. We recognize all these grades ourselves.

Mr. PLUMB. For social purposes.

Mr. HOAR. No, for all purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator mean to say right there—

Mr. HOAR. Let me make the idea plain.

Mr. PLUMB. No, I want to interrupt the Senator just as he interrupts everybody else. I want to interrupt him to ask a question. Does the Senator mean to say that we settle the question of the relative importance of Hayti and Great Britain or the precedence which the ministers occupy at the social table?

What I mean to say is that we have established in our Mr. HOAR. diplomatic legislation the distinction between an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary and a chargé d'affaires and a minister resident, according to the importance of the office. To some courts we send an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, at others we have a minister resident, and at others we have a chargé d'affaires. Therefore, it is not a question whether this whole distinction is reasonable or not-whether we should not send plain Mr. A B, and call him an agent. We have conformed to and recognized all these foreign distinctions of rank. They are thoroughly imbedded, and they are in this bill which the Senator, I suppose, is going to vote for.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. At any rate his committee reported it.

The question now raised by the honorable Senator from Louisianais, if we are going to have distinctions of rank in ambassadors established by our legislation and our customs, where we are a nation entitled to take the highest rank, whether we should not take the highest. It is not a question of preserving republican equality in these things; it is a question whether, if you make the distinction between men, we are not entitled to claim to be as highly distinguished as any other.

Mr. PLUMB. If the distinction could be brought about by statute, then we ought not to name these persons ambassadors, but we ought to call them something still higher. Why stop until we have reached the limit of the English language? Why not put the persons whom we send abroad clear above everybody else, because of our fecundity of language being the greatest? The salute the American naval commander gets is not because the pennant flying over his vessel indicates that he is admiral or commodore, but it is the command he has. In the contention which means power it is the power and not the name which I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kansas. Will he ask some of those who advocate the other view of this matter what the minister to England can do after he is called an ambassador that he can not do now?

Mr. PLUMB. I am very much obliged to the Senator for the sugestion, although I was coming to that in a moment. I admit that in the law we have heretofore followed in a certain slavish way after the diplomatic customs and designations of the countries of the Old World, and I admit that because of such designations largely being selected it serves to lower us abroad, to some extent at least. We have had some serves to lower us abroad, to some extent at least. conspicuous instances of that in late years. By just as much as we pile up these foreign titles, or these titles which accommodate themselves to foreign customs, social customs, and so on, by just that much we shall select the men who are conspicuous upon this side of the water, not for their high character, not for the ruggedness of their Americanism, but as representatives of metropolitan society. I hope that the incoming administration will do better in that respect than the preceding ones have done, and that we shall contribute to some extent by law to get rid of the temptation to send abroad the class of people who least represent the American people.

As the Senator from New Hampshire well suggested, an ambassador can not do anything that a minister can not do, and when it comes to that, an envoy extraordinary can not do anything that a chargé d'affaires can not do, and a chargé d'affaires can not do anything that a consul can not do. Whoever we send abroad as our representative, if he is the right kind of man, will look after those interests and have all needful intercourse with foreign ministers and people to that end, whatever we may call him.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question for information.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.
Mr. GEORGE. Have we ever had an ambassador?
Mr. PLUMB. We never have. In that line I will read to the Sen-

Mr. BLAIR. What are we going to do about it?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from New Hampshire asks what we are going to do. The proposition of the Senator from Maine and of our sudden convert to this aristocratic idea, the Senator from Ohio, is that we shall have an ambassador, and of course, if, following the customs of courts abroad, it is found that we must have something else, then we shall have something else, making haste to change our laws accordingly.

Mr. Cox, who was quoted here sometime ago, in a speech made in the House of Representatives when the diplomatic and consular bill was under consideration last year, said:

The reason why the United States has never created an ambassador, except, perhaps, for special embassies, is this: By the treaty of the Holy Alliance in the conspiracy against democratic republicanism they agreed among themselves that no popular government should ever be recognized at their imperial courts and foreign offices if they came by and through an ambassador. An ambassador—oh, he represents a sovereign. He was vicariously in the place of one anointed of the Lord.

of the Senator from Louisiana; that is, the representative of "one anointed of the Lord,"

He was specially dedicated to monarchy and absolutism

That is the office now proposed to be created, according to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, supported by the Senator from Republics should uncover their heads and stand outside with their chargés, ministers resident, and envoys, however extraordinary, until the Lord's anointed passed through the swelling scene.

Mr. HOAR. What authority is that?

Mr. PLUMB. The authority of Hon. S. S. Cox, formerly from the State of Ohio, but now, I regret to say, from the State of New York. Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas, that is the reason why the change is to be made?

Mr. PLUMB. That is the reason, I understand, why the change is In other words, we are to be drawn within the circle to be made now. of the anointed. We have been kept out because of the somewhat odorous character of our republicanism, because we represented what was supposed to be the mass of the people and not the elect, and now we are to get within this charmed circle, the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Louisiana, and the Senator from Maine being the highpriests officiating for the occasion.

Mr. HALE. How old is the speech which the Senator has just quoted from, made by the distinguished Representative from New York?

Mr. PLUMB. It was made on the 21st day of May, 1888.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator from Kansas know that this is under the law as it stands? The diplomatic and consular bill is founded on the law of 1856. That is the law under which these appropriations are made, and it provides-

That ambassadors, envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotenfiary, ministers resident, commissioners, charges d'affaires, and secretaries of legations, appointed to the countries hereinafter named in Schedule A, shall be entitled to compensation for their services, etc.

So the title of ambassador and the rank of ambassador have been recognized in all the laws organizing our service; and it is in the Constitu-

Mr. PLUMB. This country has changed materially since the date of the passage of that law.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio? In fact, was an ambassador ever appointed by the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. They were formerly called commis-

May I ask the Senator a question? It struck me that independence, sovereignty, and nationality must be one of the very highest efforts of diplomacy. never have had an ambassador, the only man who can do this highest form of diplomatic business, and the probability is that we are still in subjection to the Kingdom of Great Britain, and this is not an independent power. It struck me that this is a question attacking our national integrity and independence!

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Ohio quotes the law of 1856. This Government has gained something in republicanism since that date. He might exactly as well quote the fugitive-slave law as to quote the law of 1856. That was at a time when the Republic was under aristocratic conditions.

Mr. SHERMAN. The House of Representatives was Republican at that time, and this measure was framed by a Republican committee, and I was a member of it.

Mr. PLUMB. There were a great many Republicans in those days who were not conscious of the fact.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will pardon me. That is the language of the Constitution. That is what is the matter with it. There is no envoy extraordinary mentioned in the Constitution. It mentions "ambassadors and other public ministers." It does not say a word about envoys extraordinary."

Mr. PLUMB. The Constitution of the United States is a fearfully and wonderfully made concern.

Mr. HAWLEY. Antiquated?

Mr. PLUMB. No, not antiquated. Every one uses it according to his own purposes; that is all. Everybody favors it when he finds anything in it to his own account. A friend of mine who is advocating a universal language said he did not think it would be adopted in this country, because the Republicans would say that under its operations some Democrats, even, might become sufficiently proficient to occupy minor positions in the Post-Office Department, and that the Democrats That is the person we now provide for according to the amendment | themselves would be against it because it was unconstitutional—an instrument he said which few of them read, but which all of them were in favor of when they were in the minority. In other words, we are in favor of the Constitution when it goes our way, and when it is against us we are against it.

Mr. President, we have survived under this title of envoy extraordinary for a long time. We may be coming upon the Augustan era of the American Republic. We never shall go through conditions more the American Repulsion. We lever shall go another to the from 1861 to 1865, and even in the years that followed. If we could get along with an envoy extraordinary during those times when our relations with Great Britain were carried on through the means of a minister communicated with by mails in the absence of cable communications, etc., I think we can get along with him now.

But, Mr. President, I go further than that. I say this whole system should be wiped out. Our relations with foreign people are commercial, not political. Our political relations with them, at all events so far as they exist, are settled, not by communications made through the minister, but by communication made between the powers themselves by means of telegrams and by means of special commissioners, as in the recent case of the Canadian treaty which had so auspicious a beginning and so tragical an ending. So it will be in the future, only more so.

What we want is trade, commerce. We do not need to demonstrate to the people of the world the fact that our Republic will protect itself against internal commotion. We do not need to demonstrate that it can protect itself against foreign foes. We need only to demonstrate that it can protect itself, and maintain itself, and perpetuate itself, and grow and prosper and increase as a commercial power. We need to send wise men of trade to represent us abroad. We do not want to send men who are given to gilded lying. We do not want to keep up and perpetuate the carrying on of the insincerities and the gewgaws of diplomatic intercourse. We should make the compensation sufficient to maintain, at the places where our trade can be affected, men who can aid in extending our trade intercourse and open up new fields to our merchants, manufacturers, and farmers.

The more we do of this kind and the less we do of the other the more we shall serve ourselves and the more we shall commend republican institutions to those who would sit in darkness. A republican government, for the purpose of example, has got to be something separate and apart from other governments, and it has got to discard in a very large measure the instrumentalities that have governed the intercourse be-tween nations for the maintenance of the balance of power, for the settlement of boundaries, and things of that kind which do not concern us and never will. We have no part nor lot in all that character of

We want commercial agents instead.

While I do not know that I would go back to the days of the French Republic and give as the highest designation to the men who are appointed to represent us abroad the title of "citizen," I certainly would not accommodate myself to the artificial distinctions which have grown up through this contention in which we have no part or lot and never can have; but instead of that I would send men abroad for the accomplishment of practical purposes, giving to them such designation as we see fit, and leaving the question of their social prominence, of their precedence at feasts and in the processions of people who are "presented to the Queen," to be determined by circumstances to arise from time to time.

So, while I object to going one step in the wrong direction, as I think it would be to give the title of ambassador to our ministers to Great Britain, Germany, France, and so on, the object I have in view is to strike out the whole provision. I have nothing to substitute in its place, I admit, but I have in mind an instance which indicates that on the whole the world will move in its orbit and the Republic will continue to grow apace notwithstanding we are lacking a minister at

London and at Berlin.

London and at Berlin.

The President of the United States appointed a gentleman from Richmond to be minister to Austria, and the Austrian Government objected to him because he was married to a lady objectionable by reason of her nationality to the virtuous society of Vienna, and he was withdrawn. They had a right to say they would not receive him. He was no less an American citizen because of his marriage according to his own ideas rather than those of Vienna society. It did not in any way depreciate his character as a man or a citizen. For months there was no minister at Vienna. I never heard that there was any interruption of the ordinary course of affairs because of it. So I would be willing to take the chances of having no minister at London or Ber-

The exigencies of the Democratic party required us to disfranchise Great Britain at this capital. Great Britain has had no representative here for months. It was not because the person who was here to represent that country did not wear coat-tails of the proper length, it was not because he had not a sufficiently high-sounding title, but it was because he was too free with his pen. He wrote a letter, which I thought a model of conciseness and caution. I could not have done better myself. Yet the proud-spirited Democratic party would not stand it, and Great Britain has been disfranchised in the American capital ever since, and Mr. Phelps is coming home on account of it. Think of the good food that Mr. Phelps will be deprived of between now and the 4th day of March. [Laughter.] Think of the incense that he might have had at the hands of his friends at the British capital. Oh, I tell you they make much of a man over there in proportion as he is lacking in Americanism.

All these things have occurred, and yet nations go on in their appointed ways. We are having no trouble; we are not likely to have any; and if that condition of absence and disfranchisement should continue for two years more, or four years more, no one of us will know anything about it in any way affecting him, his neighbors, or his country, excepting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] who sits in front of me and is practical to the last degree says, excepting—a very important exception—the fellow who hoped to draw the salary.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Kansas, because I know he would not do an injustice. I believe the gentleman who was appointed minister to Austria was objected to, not on account of any domestic irregularities, but on account of race. He was a

Jew, I think

Mr. GORMAN. His wife was a Jewess. Mr. PLUMB. I understand it. In no sense did I undertake to say anything that would reflect on Mr. Keily as a man or as a citizen. As I said before, there was something about his domestic regulations which was not in accordance with that Puritanic idea which prevails in the Austrian capital, and for that reason he was rejected. If this whole fabric of our intercourse with foreign governments is dependent upon conditions like these, see what an escape we had there, that the whole thing did not collapse! There is not a single interest in which the American people are concerned that is in any wise at stake in the entire range of diplomatic representation.

The consul at Liverpool is of more account to the people of the United States than any minister to Great Britain ever has been since the day that the Atlantic cable was established, and he will continue to be so. We are keeping this thing up for the exaltation and the delectation, and convenience, and comfort, and social standing of a lot of people who might be better engaged, I think, in some productive capacity at

Let us take up this entire question with a view to promoting the interests of the American people as they have been shown to be in the last few years. Let us consider that we have nothing to do or say concerning the balance of power, nothing to do about boundaries; that we do not touch upon the interests of foreign people practically anywhere except in a commercial way, and that wherever we do we resort to first principles and we bring the two interested powers directly together by agencies appointed especially for the purpose

Having got thus far along, then let us put keen-eyed men of traffic into all foreign places, men who know the A B C's of trade, and how to promote it; men who know how to make a good bargain for themselves, and knowing how to make it for themselves will make one for the people whom they represent, and thus strengthen the American people and republican institutions in the only way they need to be strengthened. Republicanism is strong as a sentiment. strengthen it by showing that the sentiment of republicanism has con-centrated itself in a way that makes consequence, profit, and that power for the people, and there will be no occasion to spread republicanism by argument or by proclamation, but the example of the American Republic will some day create a vortex into which every monarchical government of the world will fall as by the law of gravita-

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, though I had not anticipated that at this time any such question would arise.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that all our relations should be governed by the dignity and the interest of the United States in reference to their practical representations abroad. It is for that reason that I shall support this amendment, because it is as practical a measure as was ever brought into debate upon a question of the relation of this country to foreign nations. It has as little to do as possible with the question of the dignity or pride or reputation of any individual. It has nothing to do with court etiquette, nothing to do with court dress, nothing to do with the question whether fit ministers are selected and whether they are good representatives of honest American sentiments, or whether they misrepresent us, and are swallowed up in the flattery and the fashions of foreign courts. This question has nothing whatever to do with any of those topics.

If any question could be presented as of this nation taking its place in its representation as a nation with other nations that were to repre-sent themselves as nations toward us in that assemblage and fraternity, this is the question. It may not be a wise measure, but it is a measure wholly of public interest, and of public dignity, and of practical service to this country abroad.

The relations established either by custom or by agreement in reference to the condition of various representations at foreign courts or with this Government here are of the simplest nature, and they have nothing to do with personal pride or with personal favor. The nations are not equal in power, in importance, in inter-relations of magnitude. They are not equal in population, in wealth, in their revenues, or in their opportunities or duties or interests in their representation abroad.

Nothing can be simpler than the arrangements made by the congress at Vienna, and which are followed here in every respect just as much as they are in any foreign country. They are purely matters of convenience and arrangement, and each nation is allowed to fix for itself its own relative importance in the common representation at foreign courts. It is to choose for itself whether at this or that stage of its growth and its power it claims to be ranked among the first of the earth or is humbler and feebler; whether it will afford the expense of this or that form of representation, or whether it will be satisfied with an humbler title and with humbler resources for its support.

There is neither dictation nor influence among the nations on this subject; but as the nations all choose for themselves, and different ranks are selected by themselves, not for the glory or the embellishment of a minister, but for the representation of the nation itself, it is observed as a mere matter of necessary adjustment of the course of intercourse that the first grade is in the mere rank of age in representation. Without comparing at all the different nations that come under this class of representation or that, in the class that each has chosen for itself the representation at each court shall have preference given in the age in representation there of that grade, and when that grade is exhausted then the next grade, and then the next.

Our arrangement here is precisely the same. We have no other distinctions between the different nations that are represented here in our respect for them than what they fix for themselves in the grade of their own representation, and then we have the rule of the congress at Vienna that the first in rank shall furnish this preference among them by the one minister represented at the court or at the government.

by the one minister represented at the court or at the government.

The highest rank in this arrangement, which is of etiquette and of comfort, that the nations sending representatives here have chosen to figure to themselves as properly to be counted among nations, is that of minister plenipotentiary and minister resident. Our rule is that among the nations thus selecting themselves for that representation, whether it be England, France, Hayti, or the Sandwich Islands, the seniority is given to the head, and of late, after Sir Edward Thornton left, that head, by seniority of representation here, was the dean of the diplomatic corps, Mr. Preston, representing Hayti. Was that a question of pride personally, or of etiquette, or of dress? No; we take each nation at its own valuation in these gradations, and as there is no grade above that of minister plenipotentiary, or minister resident, all nations, however great their value in their own views and in our views, stand upon that grade.

But abroad there is a grade of representation above that which is the highest here, and that is the place of ambassador. Ambassador in its natural meaning and in its natural service is nothing but the designation of the messenger that one state sends to another upon its occasion, having to hold this intercourse. It may be special and critical, or it may be general in the value to the two nations thus to be gained.

Our Government at the outset recognized in the Constitution that the term "ambassador" in a certain sense included the whole range of representation, and by naming only the phrase and description of other ministers recognized the fact that the ambassador was nothing but a minister.

What then are we now to do? We chose at the outset that we would send ministers of this grade which now remains as the highest grade of this country. It is not necessary for us to recall the fact that at that time we were a young nation, a poor nation, not a populous nation, and that we had of all things perhaps the least occasion for intercourse with the European courts or European governments except what might guaranty us our being left to pursue our own career and open to us as far as might be the intercourse of trade.

This is a question wholly of our nation and of the relation of other nations to us. No man has less interest than I have, or less respect than I have, for questions of court dress and etiquette; but this relation is established between nations in their whole assemblage and fraternity. While we treat all nations as equal in a certain sense, yet they must determine it for themselves, coming into these circles, not of dinners, nor of preference, but of relations in our importance to them and theirs to us. If we do not desire that we should be represented as a great nation in this highest form of a nation's representation, it would be impolite in the sense of a reflection upon us if the great nations should volunteer to send an ambassador to us. Yet every great power in Europe with whom we have these important relations regrets that it can not send an ambassador here, because we are unwilling to send ambassadors to them.

In their diplomatic career there is a practical and important relation to these grades of representation, as we all know that diplomatic service has its grades of employment, of promotion, of salaries, and of retiring pensions. We have no right to find any fault with arrangements of that kind. Therefore it has been a matter of mortification in foreign powers of the highest rank, that value us as among the greatest, and in some sense towards them the greatest nation of the world, the nation with which they wish above all others to stand well, that every degree of courtesy and of respect in every form should be shown to us. We have no disposition to repudiate or reject this natural and necessary and useful attitude towards us that has grown out of our strength, our institutions, our freedom, and our democracy.

There is not a nation in Europe that ever bandies for a moment these epithets of democracy as disparaging to this country. None of these idle and, I perhaps might be justified in saying, frivolous considerations that have been brought into this debate are ever thought of in the courts of Europe. The only question is, why can we not receive and why can we not return ministers who shall represent that mutual, that reciprocal appreciation and admiration for this great nation?

This idle notion about trappings and dinner places and all that may have been interesting to this or that minister, though I think there has been more disparagement in that regard than was very suitable; but the question is, why, when there is an established arrangement that has nothing to do with degradation, but yet of arrangements in the representation among nations, why should not the nation that now is abreast of the greatest nation enter into this representation when the greatest nations look on us as abreast of them and with a future that is far to overtop them? There is not a great nation in Europe that does not contemplate the future of this country as a wonder and a power that they can neither gainsay nor check nor retard.

that they can neither gainsay nor check nor retard.

Though I am not disposed to turn the growth and grandeur of this country into a vortex that is to whelm all the world, as the Senator from Kansas seems to think would befit our dignity and power, yet there is no disguising the fact that if we choose to measure ourselves under this or that trivial consideration, under this or that element of phrase or rhetoric, we shall retain only the same position and thus must part with excellent ministers. This country suffered a considerable loss, as I think, in so straightforward and bright and admirable a minister as Sir Edward Thornton, and he would have remained here except for the fact that the exigencies and proprieties of his own elevation needed that he should be made an ambassador. He would rather have remained here. Any one who knew him, I think, felt that in heart, in head, in sobriety of temper, and in firmness in the interest of his government, no man ever stood in personal esteem or in the regard of this Government higher than this distinguished Englishman.

Whatever we decide about this matter, let us discard all the flippery part of the argument, for that is not the question. There is another question, if you please, a great one, but it is a great one only to talk of, to talk of annually, if you please, and that is, that we should not have any representation abroad. If we have no representation abroad, then we have no representation from abroad here. Then because a keen, speculative, and far-sighted business man is adequate for all that kind of representation in the interest of himself and of our trade, somehow or other we are to dispense with any representation that speaks by authority for the United States of America and to a nation in its capacity as a nation in its capacity as a nation.

If the Senator from Kansas desires to press the matter, he would have us cut aloof from Europe and have only the intercourse that belongs to trade, travel, newspaper exchanges, and the telegraph. We can understand the magnitude and value of all those relations. Nobody has reduced them; nobody but should recognize the fact that the intermingled pulses of great nations are now more powerful than treaties and courtesies; but, nevertheless, as all these abundant resources of society within ourselves make us the great nation that we are, we must submit to have a President and Senators and Congressmen and heads of Departments to conduct in the name of the nation and upon its delegated authority its business in these dispersed representations and interests through the collective power of the nation gated authority its business in these dispersed representations and interests through the collective power of the nation.

So is it abroad. Let it be that trade is of more importance. Let it be that the exchange of ideas, that civilization, that learning, that humanity, and all these developments of the communities themselves are greater than the others; nevertheless, this must be preserved; and that being so, there remained but one question for us. It is purely a practical question, and a question not of men, not of agents, but of this country itself. If we have ambassadors and do not send good representatives, they will be all the same a failure if they are sent as ministers resident, or ministers plenipotentiary, or what not. This is purely a question of practical importance.

It is said that no practical injury may come from our representation abroad in a critical case by a minister of this grade, because he is of the highest grade that is known here. We do not take into account the fact that there is a very large representation of ambassadors from other countries, some of them rivals of ours; and as is the etiquette during the hour of reception by a foreign minister, as with ours here, if the time is exhausted because those who have conference accorded to them in advance have occupied the hours of interview, then our country or other countries are cut out for that day.

It is easy to see that you can have a sort of transcendental representation of the power and dignity of the United States of America, and find a transcendental representation with the great powers of Europe with which you have intercourse; but after all, with these immense glories of our civilization, we yet must deal by word of mouth or pen through the agencies of individual men, and the situation which brings us together habitually in these associations is a question to be determined only for this country and our relations to foreign countries.

mined only for this country and our relations to foreign countries.

Therefore, without the least notion that this question touches either the expense or the self-importance of any minister that we shall send, or a question of court dress, or of etiquette, or of the order at dinnertables, I put it upon the point that now, among the associated nations in which we move as one, this stage and this step has been reached which this country should take.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to utter but a sentence or two upon this question and to state the way in which it appears to me.

Men communicate to each other their ideas and thoughts by language; and certain phrases, whatever may be the logic as to their logical acquisition of any particular meaning, have a certain meaning or sense. In the diplomatic language of the world there is a phrase by which a nation says to other nations, "I regard myself as a first-class power, equal in dignity and importance to any first-class power on the face of the earth," and that word is the word "ambassador."

As the Senator from New York has said, it is not a question of any importance in regard to the mere courtesies of life, dinners, or precedence, but in giving audience. All nations give audience to the first-class powers of the world before they do to the second-class powers, and class powers of the world before they do to the second-class powers, and to the second-class powers before they do to the third-class powers. When a nation says, "I send to Great Britain an ambassador," she says, "I am a first-class power communicating with you, a first-class power." That is what it means, and that is all it means. When she sends to some small island in the Pacific, if there be one with an autonomy of its own, a chargé or a consul-general, she says, "I am deal-mount is third class power and I and the programment of the same and ing now with a third-class power, and I send the proper messenger for that;" and that is all the thing means.

that;" and that is all the thing means.

We can not communicate with other nations without diplomatic language and without diplomatic forms. Nobody denies that Great Britain, France, and Germany are first-class powers—that is admitted—whose business is business of the first importance, and that their interest is an interest of the first importance among the nations of the earth. If the United States sends an envoy, or a minister resident, or a chargé to those powers, not denying that they are first-class powers, she says, "I only affect and claim to be a second-class power, and I come to you rating myself at that rate."

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Let me conclude the sentence and then I shall have finished my speech. There was a time unquestionably when the United States was a second-class power.

States was a second-class power. Mr. BLAIR. When?

Mr. HOAR. In the year 1790, in the estimation of mankind.
Mr. BLAIR. I do not think we ever admitted it.
Mr. HOAR. That period has long since gone by; and I vote to call our representative an ambassador and not an envoy or a charge, not because he will dress any differently, not because he will go out to dinner in any different time, but because by the word he claims to be treated as an equal to the highest, and not merely an equal to the second or third or fourth rate nation.

or third or fourth rate nation.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish the sentence, and then I will answer the question, if I can. Let me say further, I do not believe, in intercourse among nations any more than in intercourse among gentlemen, in the notion of the Senator from Kansas, that the United States is to go around the world with pantaloons stuffed in boots, with coat and waistcoat off, and with ragged trousers held up by one suspender.

Mr. PLUMB. That kind of a costume, Mr. President, would be a decoration in Massachusetts, but that extreme is just as much to be avoided as the other. It is not, as the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] well said—although he misconceived, I think, the force of his own argument—the aristocratic intercourse which settles the course of association; it is the international pulse, the pulses of the nations beating in unison and harmony; and when, during the great struggle for the maintenance of the American Republic, it became necessary to appeal from the crown to the people of England, from the aristocracy to the masses, it was not done through Charles Francis Adams, expert and alert as he was in diplomatic phrase and diplomatic ability, but the American Republic sent to appeal to the British people Thurlow Weed, Henry Ward Beecher, and Archbishop Hughes. We appealed from the aristocracy to the public opinion of Great Britain, and it is public opinion to-day that rules the course of empires.

Congress under the Constitution may make war, and yet no man here would vote for a war with any power in the world unless that war was foreordained by the public sentiment of the American people, and Queen Victoria would not dare to make war against the views and wishes expressed of her own people. We are building up here the figment of an aristocratic intercourse which ignores these great sentiments which control the destinies of nations, and the sentiments which are not reached by ambassadors or envoys extraordinary at all, and the intercourse between whom counts for nothing in that great court of years in which patient take a part court of years in which nations take a part.

So we are simply building up something which we must ultimately break down, a card-board house, an arbitrary, ephemeral, and effeminate condition of things, following slowly, after all these years, during which one to represent us having that title, we were asserting our own inferiority; and yet the man who represents, or did represent until Democratic exigencies sent him away, the British empire at Washington was not an ambassador. Did Great Britain advertise her own want of superiority by sending an envoy here? He represented just as much the plenitude and power of the British empire as though he had been named ambassador or any other name to convey a greater idea of con-

Whoever goes abroad anywhere bearing the commission of the President of the United States, deputed to do work that is to be done in the name of the American Republic, whether you call him agent or attorney, represents that power just as fully, and the moment that fact is understood his consequence in regard to all the things that are material to the American people is just as great as if he were given any other title and blazing all over with decorations. It is only a question whether we will set up names or set up things. That is the point.

I turn from my friend from New York, comparatively fresh from the fields of diplomacy in which he cut an admirable figure, not as an ambassador in decorations of this kind, but in all those things which go to constitute the dignity and the sincerity of human intercourse.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President— Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator if he will give way to enable me to put a question to the Senator from Kansas for information?

Mr. STEWART. I shall be through in a few minutes The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from to the Senator from Mississippi? Does the Senator from Nevada yield

Mr. GEORGE. I simply wish to ask a question of the Senator from

Mr. STEWART. I yield. Mr. GEORGE. Something has been said in this debate about the precedence accorded to the various ranks of ministers, the precedence being given to ambassadors. I should like to know, if the Senator from Kansas can answer the question, when several ambassadors from the various courts of Europe are present at once and some of these ambassadors are princes, some are dukes, and some of the lower order of nobility, whether amongst them the precedence is not given to those having the highest rank in the nobility?

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that it is just as in the American Army; the rank of a major-general over another major-general bearing a commission of the same date is fixed by the preceding rank in the military service; and so with these ambassadors, those persons who have these artificial distinctions known as dukes, etc., rank ambassadors from republics, where the highest rank is that of citizen.

Mr. GEORGE. So that if we desire to have our ambassadors to take equal rank with the ambassadors of other countries we shall have to create an order of nobility-create dukes and all that sort of thing.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no.
Mr. HALE. The Senator from Mississippi is entirely mistaken.
Mr. PLUMB. I do not think so.

I have here the law, and there is no distinct Mr. SHERMAN. I have here the law, and there is no distinction made in any form in any foreign country between dukes and others holding the rank of ambassador. Mr. HALE. They take rank according to the date of their service in the grade, the oldest ambassador being first.

Mr. SHERMAN. The precedence is according to the commission.

Mr. HALE. Their precedence has nothing to do with titles. Great Britain is frequently represented, as she has been for years, at the court of Germany, by a plain Mister Edward Malet, who ranks in the order of the seniority of his appointment—

Mr. PLUMB. Among British diplomatists.
Mr. HALE. Among all. He ranks the ambassador from Russia, from France, or from Austria in the seniority of his appointment; and he is just as high, as plain Mr. Malet, as though he were the Duke of Cambridge, or the Duke of Marlborough, or as if he were an Italian The rank is according to seniority.

Mr. PLUMB. The point is, then, that if there happened to be an ambassador from Pumpernickel at Great Britain, as long as he remained there he would rank the American minister. It does not seem to me there can be anything more conclusive than that against this proposition.

Mr. HALE. There are no ambassadors from small powers.

Mr. PLUMB. From any of the powers that might be pleased to send one. Corea, for instance, might send one.

Mr. HALE. They will never do it.
Mr. PLUMB. They may never do it, but they may. This thing is catching.

Mr. HALE. There is no danger of it being catching, that a small nation will become a first-class power.

Mr. PLUMB. No, that is not catching, but the foolishness of this proceeding is very catching.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think this is a question for more we have come to our power and our pride, the course of European diplomacy, of European designation, upon the puerile idea that unless we do so we shall not be considered a first-class power.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] said that unless we sent ourselves and had an ambassador in the field, or unless we start in the we are witnessing every day that I think more than counterbalance

For the last twenty-five years that I have been observing matters relating to our foreign ministers, it has been about this way: They become at once so absorbed in foreign aristocracy that they ape them, they lose sight of their mission, they become British or German or French, as the case may be, and they are anxious to have rank among them, and so become foreign to their own people. It seems to me that to give them higher rank, higher position, only intensifies that desire and gives them greater opportunity to lose sight of their own country and a greater liability to become entirely foreigners. That is the diffi-and a greater liability to become energy are culty.

I believe now it is generally conceded that our foreign ministers in Europe may be useful in some respects, but nearly everything now is done directly between the state departments of the various governments by telegraph and otherwise, and the ministers do little more than simply convey messages between their governments. To decorate them or give them place in society will make them less useful and less American. The aping of the manners of European society is being felt seriously in this country. There is a breed of young men growing up which we call dudes. After being in England for awhile they lose command of the English language. They grunt and become unintelligible, use one eyeglass, perform all sorts of uncomfortable antics, are a disgrace to their country, and cease to be Americans.

unintelligible, use one eyegiass, perform all sorts of uncomfortable antics, are a disgrace to their country, and cease to be Americans. I do not believe that we should pass any law which will give any national countenance or encouragement to the breeding of dudes. If you have a minister abroad who is decorated, or if he has high grade, every American boy that is born rich and who is without the capacity to support himself or make a living will age the manner of the country of the support himself or make a living will age the manner of the country of the support himself or make a living will age the manner of the manner of the country of the support himself or make a living will age the manner of the country of the country of the country of the manner of the country of the co to support himself or make a living will ape the manners of the aristo support himself or make a living will ape the manners of the aristocracy, and he will come back here entirely ruined and useless. There are thousands of young men who have been hanging around the courts of Europe until they are not Americans; they are not good citizens. They are only fit to spend the patrimony that has been earned by their fathers. They are only fit to waste. I think we shall be better off it we abolish the office of anybody that gives such people access to foreign society. If foreign governments will not accept our people as Americans, then let them reject us and we shall have some Americans are rate in foreign.

I am opposed to the idea of giving our ministers any rank in foreign I am opposed to the idea of giving our ministers any rank in foreign courts beyond what is necessary to properly transact our business. To give them the rank necessary for etiquette, necessary for society and place at the table, is giving the Government's indorsement to aping foreign manners, which is fast making the young men of this country who have wealth enough to go abroad worthless when they get home. I think we can afford to let our ministers wait their turn, as we have done for a hundred years, and confer no additional rank upon them, and thus show that the American Congress is not seeking after rank for invlody, and that it is not American to seek after rank anybody, and that it is not American to seek after rank.

If there is business to be done, no matter what title a representative of the United States may have, if he is authorized by this Government to transact that business he will command the respect and he will get a hearing and all the hearing that is necessary at any court in the world. That is all we want.

The consuls, the commercial agents that this country sends out, are highly important. They are officers that the people doing business with those countries constantly consult. They come in contact with the business of this country and it is transacted through them. They are badly paid, very poorly paid in this bill. The compensation paid is not sufficient to secure business men suitable for the offices and the responsibilities devolving upon them.

To give a minister rank simply to let him get into the royal palace first or so as to fix the order he shall go to dinner, so that he can make a greater display, where he should sit at the table, and so on, is an acknowledgment that we recognize such things as titles as important; it is an indorsement of titles, and I think that we had better go along

If the Senator from Kansas does not feel disposed to make a motion to strike out from the bill entirely all ministers and rely solely upon our commercial agents, I think we should not take a step forward towards aristocracy if we are not prepared to go back to simple democra

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George] asks a question which admits of a very ready answer.

The representation by persons has nothing to do with the personal dignity of the ambassador or the minister. All relations of personal dignity are swallowed up in the fact that the man is nothing but a representative of his nation, and there is no gradation among nations except this in the matter of arrangement and convenience and of the importance of the nation, not the importance of the men. The great diplomatists of England and of France and of Germany and of Russia have had their social distinctions and rank earned by their representations of their respective countries, and not been put forward as gaining dignity for their countries by their personal rank.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator a question. Where is the business with England transacted, in the drawing-room or at the foreign office?

Mr. EVARTS. At the foreign office.
Mr. PLUMB. At that foreign office has it ever happened within the Senator's knowledge that any American citizen acting as minister has been prevented from having access to the foreign office for what he had to say because his title was not greater?

Mr. EVARTS. I have no doubt that is a matter of mere routine, as ambassadors are first introduced into the foreign secretary's chamber on business, and if the time is exhausted before the ministers are heard the American or other minister is left out.

Mr. HOAR. The ministers have to wait until the ambassadors get through.

Mr. PLIIMR Has the Senator ever known of any business affecting the interest of this country which was neglected on account of the person we sent there not having the title of ambassador?

Mr. EVARTS. Well, Mr. President, I can not certainly say.
Mr. PLUMB. The Senator says he does not know anything of the kind, as I understand. Mr. HALE. Let me answer the question. The minister of this Republic to one of the most important courts in Europe, to a people with whom we have more close relations of business and importance, not of etiquette, than any other, told me that so great had been the inconvenience, not at palaces, not on occasions of state, not in mere ceremonials, but at the foreign office, that he, after waiting to transact business which had been committed to him by the Secretary of State, and seeing the day wane and pass, and trying it again and seeing the same thing, had been obliged to gain access by requesting that the minister of foreign affairs of that great power should accord him a personal interview in order that he might attend to the business of this country.

That was not ceremonial, it was not gewgaw, it was not frills, it was not dinners, it was nothing fanciful, but it was because the United States of America does not assert herself as a first-class power, as the Senator from Massachusetts so well, tersely, and epigrammatically stated the whole thing in the speech he made. There is where the whole trouble is; and this is not a question of sentiment or of fancy, as it is attempted to be made here. It is a pure business proposition. It is what deals with the business between us and other powers. Aristocracy has nothing to do with its demograph has not him to be not a successful to the control of the contro with the business between us and other powers. Aristocracy has nothing to do with it; democracy has nothing to do with it; status in life has nothing to do with it. The men whom we send abroad are plain American citizens, Mr. So-and-So, and they always will be Mr. So-and-So; but they represent a people of sixty-five millions, who have passed beyond the swaddling-clothes period, and it ought to assert itself as a people equal to Russia or France or Germany or England and wheth to we the term to designate its representatives the has been self as a people equal to Russia or France or Germany or England and ought to use the term to designate its representatives that has been coined and accepted as a measure of that greatness, as has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this debate has occupied a great deal of time and gone over a great deal of ground, I think a great part of it quite unnecessarily. I would not detain the Senate a moment to express my opinion upon the subject at all, but that I have at all times since I have been a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations advocated the establishment in our laws of the foreign minister of the rank and title of ambassador. I am very much surprised to-day to find that that word has produced a very great degree of excitement in the minds of some of our brethren here, and it has led me to inquire why it was that our fathers in framing the Constitution of the United States put in the word "ambassador," as defining the only office that they chose exactly to define, unless they expected that we would put that office in the statute-book and make provision for the exercise of all its duties and functions in our diplomatic intercourse.

Mr. PLUMB. Why did not they do it?
Mr. MORGAN. I presume they did not do it because at that time the American Government had no use for officers of that very high rank I judge that was the historical fact; but, inasmuch as our fathers found no difficulty in the use of that word in designating the officer to represent the American Government in some of the foreign courts of the world at least, I find no difficulty in putting it in the statute-book, and I shall find no difficulty, if it is necessary to do so, in voting whatever of appropriations may be necessary to give to that rank a becoming dignity or a becoming reward, so that the incumbents may maintain the duties and dignities, social and otherwise, of that office creditably among the nations of the earth.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will allow me to say that the word ambassador" is used in the existing diplomatic law of 1856, the gen-

mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I believe in democracy; I believe in that principle which puts the powers of government in the hands of the people of the United States or of any other republic; I believe in a constitutional democracy; but I do not think because a man is a democrat that there is any occasion for his being outlandish, or regarding himself as being inferior, or as taking upon himself the airs of a large and licentious sort of liberty and going where he pleases and "cutting up" just as much as he wants to

I think the Government of the United States of all the governments in this world is entitled to be represented in the most dignified, elegant, and thorough manner that any other government is. I regard the centralization of power, of sovereignty in this country in the hands of our people as by far the highest reach of human endeavor in government. I regard the sovereignty of the people of the United States as being superior to that of any other sovereignty in the world, because it rests in the body of the people and is informed by their conscience and quickened by their energies and strengthened by their power; and I have not any doubt at all that the principles of government laid down in our Constitution will prevail in the world sooner or later, and that we shall become in every possible particular the highest and grandest power that ever was known to civilization.

We have not quite yet worked out our destinies. We have not yet quite accomplished our internal structure. We have bills before us now to mature some five or six States in the American Union, and I suppose we shall have as many as ten to create before our own Government is complete; but when it is complete and has become thoroughly matured, and its resources and powers are entirely developed; taken in connection with the grand basis upon which this structure rests, it must be admitted by all who have respect for mankind as well as for the Christian religion that the Government of the United States is the model government of the world, and the sovereignty it presents is the highest and the most dignified that ever entered into the conception of

I am in favor of having that sovereignty represented according to the views of other nations, in the very highest dignities that they esteem necessary and proper for its recognition. I wish the American Government, when it presents itself to foreign countries, to be the equal of any other government in the world, and to be able to conform to what are their tastes and wishes about matters of this kind, so that when it comes into any form of diplomatic recognition, whether socially or whether in the foreign offices, or however it may be, the American Government will be considered par excellence the government of mankind, the government of the nations.

So, I think, instead of trying to bring down the character of our Government to what I might call a vulgar democracy, we had better try to elevate the growing democracy of this country, whether found in the Republican or Democratic party, to a true and just conception of the dignity and honor that belongs to this great country of ours.

That is the view that I desire to express in regard to this matter, and hence it is that I have always been in favor of putting this rank of ambassador into our diplomatic corps.

ambassador into our diplomatic corps.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is public sentiment in this country which is beginning to be very apparent, and is having an effect on the country and its future. It ignores all distinctions of public service, of distinguished merit of those who have nothing but merit, and exalts the power of money, the distinction of money, the distinction that comes from fortune, from large accumulations. There is nothing republican and nothing democratic in this sentiment. True democracy and true republicanism exalt the public service as well as the citizen, however poor, who shall have attained high and meritorious position in the discharge of public duty and by the contribution of valuable services to the people.

Now, let us examine this question. We are discussing here as if it were a degradation to be a republican, a citizen of this Republic, as if to call a man by a title, a designation known to public service and diplomatic intercourse, would be some kind of a stigma upon his republican character and upon the principle of government by the people. Why shall not a citizen, however poor and humble, who in ability, in integrity, in public service, shall stand first amongst the diplomats of the world, have that position, that appellation, that name in diplomatic intercourse which the highest representative of a sovereign Is it because it will produce some bad effect upon power can have? our own country thus to reward distinguished merit? There is nothing in that idea.

We even hear it suggested here that that method of intercourse which has existed from the commencement of time, diplomatic intercourse through accredited agents selected by a people, shall be done away with. Why? Because this is a commercial age, not an age of boundaries or of questions concerning political relations. Why is it not an age of political questions? No reasons are given. Political questions relating to the autonomy of states, the policy which shall govern their relations with other states, and the effect of their laws are now as important and liable to occur as in any past period of the history of the

The reason for having a minister, an ambassador, is plain and apparent. What is it? Why, as suggested by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], there are Americans in every foreign country. Shall each man appeal to the Government and assert the power and dignity and right of an American citizen in the name and by the authority of his Government? Shall every man be a judge in his own case and apply the power of this nation to his own personal interest? It is necessary that there shall be some accredited head of the Government, and the question whether you shall call him a citizen, or a constable, or a sheriff, or a major-general, or shall use that phrase, as said by the Senator from Massachusetts, which is known to diplomacy and accepted amongst all the peoples of the world, is a very

Shall we say, without reason, that we defy the common custom of mankind, that we assert for ourselves in a swaggering spirit of right to adopt a phraseology of our own, and that we will disregard the customs and the usages and the rules of intercourse which have governed all other peoples? What dignity, what sense, what propriety is there in the assertion that because we are a republic and a government of the people, we shall say when we go to England, or to France, or to Germany, or to Russia that "we will not abide by the rules which you have seen fit to agree to with all other nations for our diplomatic intercourse; we will insist that you shall give precedence to the man whom we call a constable, while you have said 'he shall be designated an ambassador, or we shall not give him equality with others who are known and sent here by that title?''' With what propriety shall we say to those nations, of whom we are but one, that we are the sovereigns of the earth, the hope of all future ages, the American people defy every body and everything, and the American eagle shall scream in mid-air in defiance of all? That is not the language of dignity, of wisdom, or of any kind of useful relationship or useful assertion of the power of

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States-I do not know whether it is to be regarded now or not—but, if so, its language is imperative. It says "the President of the United States shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors"—not "may" but "shall" appoint ambassadors. Why was that language used? Because from the days antecedent to old Rome ambassadors have been the class of persons appointed on important occasions to negotiate questions of peace or war, settlements in reference to trade and to commerce, and all other questions concerning the intercourse of nations. That is the title selected by our own Constitution and our own Government.

Now, why shall we wish to embarrass an American citizen because when he is sent abroad and there are other people who have adopted this rule that persons of the title of ambassador shall have certain peculiar rights, shall be regarded as having a larger degree of confidence from their government than those of other designations—what sense is there in saying that we shall embarrass that useful public servant by saying to him, "We will not give to you the full confidence and power that is given by other people and is understood by the use of this phrase?" There is nothing in that.

There is nothing in the idea that we are making dudes by rewarding the distinguished merit of the American citizen and the confidence the people have in him, for he would not be designated to that place unless he were a man who had made his impression upon the public opinion of his country, unless they had proved him as a true republican, a loyal and faithful citizen of distinguished capacity and usefulness. If he were not such a man it would be the exceptional case.

Our theory of government assumes that being designated for that high place he has the imprimatur of the confidence of the sovereign people of the United States; and shall we then say that, having that confidence and the sanction of this public opinion, to reward him with a designation for your public service equal to that which is given to others is a discouragement of American patriotism and American virtue, and that we are educating dudes by giving this reward when the people before the office is given have designated the recipient of it?

Mr. President, there is nothing in this suggestion. This is a simple question whether or not we shall comply with the usages which exist between all nations in the designation of the agents of our intercourse with them. I shall vote for it, and vote for it with pleasure. Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I take it that it is so late in the day that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will not care to enter upon the discussion of the clauses with reference to Samoa after such a profound and agitating debate as this has been and so long drawn out. Therefore I will express a few of the ideas that occur to me in reference

It seems to me when you come to examine the bill and reflect a lit-tle upon the subject, that it is quite idle for the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] with his splendid rhetoric, which is the ornament of this Chamber and has so long been the pride of American public life, or for any other Senator who may in this debate think it worth while, rather late in thought perhaps, to undertake to dignify the God-forsaken citizenship of America, to claim that there is not after all in this proposition a little of anti-republican catering to the sentiment of aristocratic domination, rank, and power.

The Constitution provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint am-bassadors and other public ministers and consuls." That word "ministers'' is a general term, embracing all agents, the messengers of one country entering upon the performance of diplomatic duty, to transact that form of business with another. So it is a term including ambassadors as well as envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, charges d'affaires, consuls-general, the ministers resident, and the like. It is a general term; and if you observe the structure of this bill you will find that in Schedule A, under the heading of "Salaries of ministers," there are five clauses in which the term "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" is employed.

The first clause in which that expression is employed to designate a minister relates to France, Germany, Great Britian, and Russia. The ministers to those countries are classed by themselves because they have an annual salary of $17,500 each, making a total of $70,000. They are classed together because their salaries are the highest and because of the greater responsibilities and extent of the duties which have to be performed. But in the very next clause, under the same heading, we have "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Austria, Biazil, China, Italy, Japan, Spain, and Mexico," and they receive salaries at the rate of $12,000 each, making $84,000 in all.

Then the same class, "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Chili and Peru at $10,000 each;" the same class of ministers "to Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Salvador," and they are to receive $10,000 each. Then, to "the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, Turkey, Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela, who are the same class of ministers, "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary," and are to receive $7,500 each.

Then follows a classification of ministers called ministers resident. There is a minister resident to the Hawaiian Islands; then ministers resident and consuls-generals in Corea, Greece, Roumania, Servia, Bolivia, Denmark, Hayti, Persia, Portugal, Siam, Switzerland, and one or two other foreign countries.

Now the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] rises in the Senate and moves to strike out this classification of our foreign servants who have been, or who are to be, sent to the Republic of France and to England, Germany, and Russia, and insert instead of that classification a new order of diplomatic nobility, that is to say ambassadors, and Sen-ators tell us that these ambassadors are a certain more fully developed species of the diplomatic servant, the highest of all, in fact the only gradation which can be sent from one first-class power to another firstclass power without there being a contention or an implication that the party sending that agent is a second, third, or fourth, or fifth rate power, as the case may be.

The Senator proposes to give this elevation, to create this new rank with reference to these four great powers, and to no others. I turned to him sometime since and asked him why not make this classification general? Why not let it apply to all our foreign ministers? Why not employ the simple term "minister," which is to be found in the Constitution, and which is all-embracing, unless there is a design here to establish a classification with greater ornament, greater distinction, a sort of diplomatic nobility, if you please, to be created by ourselves— not an order of nobility such as is established in the old country, but an order of nobility in the diplomatic service or in the service of the United States? Unless there be some such idea as that, what argument is there for this proposition? If the Senator will make his proposition general, and strike out this clause "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary" totally from the entire bill, and say "ministers," which includes everybody and raises no distinction of rank whaters he implies the entire bill, and say are the services by the same strike as a service of the services are serviced. ever by implication or in express terms, I could very readily vote for that amendment. That would be employing the language of the Constitution. That would leave everybody upon an exact level of equality in the public service.

But when you select these four great powers, towards all of which we are inclined to conduct ourselves with the utmost ceremony, different from what we do towards Mexico or Chili or Hayti—when you have picked out these four great powers and say "We will send you an ambassador," and to all the rest "We will send you simply an envoy extraordinary," a lower grade, or merely a minister resident—when we undertake to do that we do an unrepublican thing; we do a discreditable and a disgraceful thing (begging the pardon of the Senate), as it looks to my mind looks to my mind.

Mr. President, it is said to us that not to send an ambassador abroad is to confess our own lack of dignity, as though for the last one hundred years we had not been properly represented abroad, just as though there was anything which an ambassador could do, which mortal man as the minister or agent of the United States could do which has not been done in the past. We achieved our independence, we contrived in some way to conduct the negotiations necessary to it, we made treaties after the war with Great Britain, and we have made them repeatedly all the way through, and we have had permanent ministers abroad to all the great powers of the world, at least to the powers of Europe, during the entire period of our national existence. during all this time we have been making our obeisance to these powers abroad as their inferior seems to me to be utterly preposterous. There can be nothing of the kind seriously true.

The real difficulty I find is what the Senator from New York suggested, and the only one that he did suggest, or at least which he did illustrate by any instance that occurred to him, and when he was questioned for other instances he did not give them, and I assume for that reason that he was not able to call illustrations to his mind. But he did say that one British minister here was obliged to quit diplomatic service in the United States in order to attain higher rank in the diplomatic service of his own country elsewhere.

That may be so, but was that the fault of the United States? If the empire or kingdom of Great Britain, as you please, does not consider that in sending a representative of hers to the United States, she is sending a minister to a first-class power, we must endeavor to endure it. We have endured it for a long time, and the Stars and Stripes are flying yet, and are liable to be flying for many years to come and to spread their power over a considerably more extensive geographical area to the north of us in the course of time than they have hitherto, and we can get along very well if Great Britain does not consider when she sends a minister to the United States that she is accrediting one of her subjects to a first-class power. There is nothing in the proposition so far as that is concerned.

To claim that when we send an envoy extraordinary and a minister plenipotentiary, which means with full power—I think the dictionary is good authority for that—when we send a minister abroad with full powers, what more can we do? We may not use precisely the same term that they employ in the diplomatic language of Europe, but we send our agent to every one of these four great select pre-eminent pow-ers whose consideration we are to beg by reason of this amendment. When we send an American abroad with a commission which describes him as our minister plenipotentiary, we have given to him all the power that it is possible to plant in any messenger that we may send, however he may be constituted or however he may be described.

Now, Mr. President, if I were to undertake to criticise this bill, if I were to try to fall back upon the Constitution and to do a good thing for my country, I would strike out the words "envoys extraordinary and" and the word "plenipotentiary," leaving simply all the way through the bill the word "ministers." That would give simplicity and give equality; it would save us the national snobbery of asking special consideration of these four powers by an act which at the same time is a notification to all the rest of the powers of the world that we do not look upon them as occupying the same high status as these four great powers of the world, and while we take the privilege of changing our laws so as to send an ambassador to these four great powers, we are still consistent with ourselves and our own lack of dignity in continuing to insult them, or rather to proffer anew an insult to them, which we never have done before, for we have classed them alike by sending to them an inferior order of representation, which will be the condition in which we shall leave ourselves when we make the amendment the Senator from Louisiana proposes, because then we shall send ambassadors to these four great powers who are liable to whip us any time they conclude to do so, but we shall have left our bill reading just as it does now with reference to the rest of the world.

I do not think that if we are to touch the subject at all, we ought to leave it in this imperfect way for the sake of that respect which we certainly ought to show to our weaker neighbors, who are, nevertheless, as respectable as we are ourselves.

as respectable as we are ourselves.

If we are to adopt the amendment and appoint ambassadors to these four great powers, I shall take the liberty of moving subsequently to strike out the words "envoys extraordinary and" and the word "plen-ipotentiary" wherever they occur, so that the whole bill may be consistent with itself, consistent with our own dignity, and not a legislative insult to any portion of mankind, and then employ the term "ministers," which seems to me a very proper one, and which will relieve us of all these suggested difficulties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 29, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be whereas the Fiftieth Congress of the United States, now in session, closes the one hundredth anniversary of constitutional government as organized and established in the city and State of New York on the 30th day of April, A. D. 1789, when George Washington, elected by the people, did, in their presence in said city, take the solemn oath of office and organized the Government; and Whereas the day has become historic in the annals of our country and arrangements have not been made for an appropriate centennial celebration to commemorate that important event; and Whereas it would seem a fitting manifestation of respect and gratitude to the memories of the first President, his Cabinet, the Senators and Representatives of the First Congress, that this the Fiftieth Congress, closing the first century of our national existence, should be present in New York City on the centennial day, April 30, A. D. 1889: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the pleasure of the Congress to assemble in the city of New York on the day named and participate in the ceremonies of the occasion.

EXPENDITURES IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas the Committee on Expenditures of the Treasury Department has not during either session of the Fiftieth Congress had any time set apart for the consideration of the bills reported by said committee: Therefore,

Be it resolved. That it is the sense of this House that a day or a night should be set apart for the consideration of bills now on the Calendar reported favorably by the Committee on Expenditures of the Treasury Department.

Mr. RYAN also submitted a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas in relation to the census of 1890; which was referred to the Committee on the Eleventh Census, and ordered to be printed.

SAMOA.

Mr. FORD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas recent dispatches from Vice-Consul Blacklock, at Apia, Samoa, to the Secretary of State, and accounts in the public press, have conveyed the intelligence of great indignities offered by the representatives of Germany to American citizens and American interests in Samoa; and

Whereas in the correspondence by the President to Congress on April 2, 1888, touching our rights in Samoa, there appears a letter from the Secretary of State to the British and German ministers, asking permission of their governments to make public the joint protocols of the Samoa conference held between said Secretary and said ministers in the summer of 1887, which permission was refused; and

Whereas it is alleged that the publication of these protocols would show that Germany has violated her treaty rights and obligations solemnly entered into with the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of State be requested to transmit to this House copies of all such joint protocols and memoranda of the proceedings of said conference, if not incompatible with the public interest.

RIGHTS OF SETTLERS.

Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, introduced a bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of Senate

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. LONG. By whom?
The SPEAKER. By the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ran-DALL], as the Chair understands.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the demand is made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. LONG. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMP-HILL] insist upon the demand for the regular order? This bill is one which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It is a bill which I introduced and the committee have asked me to ask unanimous consent to put it upon its passage at this time. It is a bill relating to the twenty-one veterans who have no arms, raising their pensions from $72 to $100 per month.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will not object to that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will not object to that.
The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all persons who, in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, have lost both hands, or the use of both hands, shall be entitled to a pension of $100 per month.

The committee recommended an amendment striking out the words or the use of both hands."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third-time, and passed.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOUNT CARMEL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. LANDES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to put upon its passage House bill 4496, to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?
Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir. There ought to be

Yes, sir. There ought to be an opportunity for one bill on each side.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Mount Carmel Development Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct and operate during its corporate existence, a hydraulic canal from any point on the Wabash River above the lock and dam now in process of construction at the Grand Rapids of said Wabash River, or from any tributary of said river within the county of Wabash and State of Illinois, to any point on said river within the corporate limits of the city of Mount Carmel, Ill.; and to draw from said. Wabash River or tributary thereof such supply of water as may be required for the purposes of such corporation. of such corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES] that this bill be now considered?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be a word of explanation of this bill, as I see that my colleague [Mr. O'NEALL] is not in his seat. the report be read.

The report (by Mr. JONES) was read as follows:

The report (by Mr. Jones) was read as follows:

The city of Mount Carmel is situated on the Wabash River, about 2 miles below the Grand Rapids in said river. The Mount Carmel Development Company has been organized to utilize such water-power as the situation provides, and the purpose of the bill is to grant said company the privilege of drawing through a canal, to be cut from Mount Carmel into the river or its tributary about said rapids, such quantity of water as will answer its purpose.

The Wabash River at Mount Carmel is about 1,000 feet wide at low water, and carries all the year a great volume of water.

In order to provide against the possibility of injuring the navigation of said river by favorable action on said bill, your committee recommend thefollowing amendment, which is suggested by the communications appended from the War Department on this subject. Add at the end of line 14 the following:

"Provided, That such withdrawal be not detrimental to the interests of navigation, and be subject to the direction and control of the Secretary of War."

With the adoption of this amendment we recommend the passage of the bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, June 16, 1888.

Sm: In reply to your request of the 12th instant, for the views of this Department upon House bill 4496, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to authorize the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River or its tributaries, I have the honor to invite attention to the inclosed report of the 14th instant, on the subject, from the Chief of Engineers.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

Hon. N. C. Blanchard, Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington, D. C., June 14, 1888.

Washington, D. C., June 14, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office, for report, of the letter from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives dated the 12th inst., with inclosed resolution of that committee and H. R. 4496, a bill "to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River or its tributaries, in the county of Wabash and State of Illinois;" and in reply thereto to state that no objection is seen to the passage of the bill, provided that no injury shall ensue to the interests of navigation by the proposed withdrawal of water, and to secure this it is recommended that the following amendment be made to the bill, to come in after the word "corporation," in line 14: "Provided, That such withdrawal be not detrimental to the interests of navigation, and be subject to the direction and control of the Secretary of War."

The letter from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and inclosures are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE, Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers,

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that this bill be now put upon its passage?

Mr. OATES. I would like to hear a word of explanation, reserving the right to object.

A corporation has been formed to construct water-Mr. LANDES. works to furnish the city of Mount Carmel with water, and the object of this bill is to enable them to draw the water from the Wabash River, subject to the control of the Secretary of War. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection to that. The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There was no further objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANDES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was assed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

COUNTING OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I rise to present a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Members of the House of Representatives to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The said committee to whom was referred Senate resolution relating to the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States, which resolution is as follows—

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1889, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirement of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States; and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled, as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States; and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses?"—

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate requested the House to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern judicial district, in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which it asked concurrence:

A bill (S. 375) for the relief of women enrolled as army nurses; A bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 3786) to change the date for the commencement of the March terms of the district court for the northern district of Georgia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is, unless some motion having precedence over it be made.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to take up House bill No. 12292, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. That has priority, this day being set apart under the rules for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that bill in the House or the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is on the House Calendar.

Then I raise the question of consideration. Mr. RANDALL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows

A bill (H. R. 12292) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 861, and 862 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the bill demanded?

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to know to what subject the bill re-

Mr. HEMPHILL. It relates to the terms of court in this District, growing out of the fact that sometimes the judges are ill and thus lose a term; and it also relates to the term of service of jurors, reducing their terms from three months to one month.

Mr RANDALL. I raise the question of consideration; and I desire to state that my object is to go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is a great public necessity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the bill the title of which has been read?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 22, noes 107.
Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, as is known by members of the House this day is set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. We have a number of measures which are, we think, of very considerable importance to the people of this District, who are largely interested in their passage. But it is not the desire of the committee to consume the time of the House unnecessarily. If the House is unwilling to transact the business of this committee we do not desire to press it improperly. If the sundry civil bill is so urgent now, requiring to be passed promptly in order that it may be sent to the other end of the Capitol, I would like to inquire whether the House would not give us a day for the consideration of our business-say next Saturday-instead of to-day? The sundry civil bill will then be out of the way, and we can proceed with our business.

Mr. DUNHAM. Why not have an evening session?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The difficulty about an evening session is that we can not get a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMP-HILL ] asks unanimous consent that next Saturday be set apart, in lieu of to-day, for the consideration of business reported from the District

Mr. BLOUNT. I object. There are several other appropriation bills to follow this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] ob-

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, we shall have to call up some more of our bills, I presume. Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina. The sentiment of the House was so strongly against him on the division just taken that I hope he will not consume time in this way, time which would be taken from the consideration of the sundry civil bill, and not utilized by the Committee on the District of Columbia, unless the House has suddenly changed its mind. If the gentleman desires to try the sense of the House in regard to one or two more District measures, I have no objection; but I really hope he will not press the matter any further than that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this matter could be arranged by the Committee on Appropriations taking a night session some time for the consideration of their business. There are other appropriation bills which will go through here with less obstruction than some of these measures from the District Committee. One of the troubles about District business is that every man here understands, or thinks that he understands, all about it; and with the appropriation bills we are apt to leave the question in a great measure to the Appro-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr.

HEMPHILL] call up any other bill?

Mr. RANDALL. Why not submit my motion to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so, unless the gentleman from South Carolina calls up another bill, Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 11701) for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District of Columbia. Mr. RANDALL. Is that bill in the House or in Committee of the

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL Then the gentleman's motion should be to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That would be the proper motion. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, rather than demand the reading of the bill in full, what sort of relief the building and loan associations want?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to open up debate on this question, and must object to discussion until the question of consideration is determined.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania misapprehends me. I simply want the object of the bill brought out; not discussion. The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I can state in a moment the purport of the bill. Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the House will vote that down and let us go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill. Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to make a brief statement to the

Mr. RANDALL. I object. Let us determine the matter without delay, and not consume time. The SPEAKER. Questions relating to the order of business are not debatable. The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, and it was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS. Regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a motion pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is pending, but under the rules of the House the gentleman from South Carolina has this day if he chooses to call up any bills from the District Committee

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 11817. This is for the relief of Christ Church, and that will appeal, I am sure, to every man who has any Christianity in his heart.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11817) vesting in the vestry of Christ Church, Washington Parish, state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill.

in the District of Columbia, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to square south of square 1092 in the city of Washington, District aforesaid.

The question was taken; and on a division there were-ayes 31.

So the motion of Mr. HEMPHILL was rejected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will with-draw his objection to Saturday. Can I ask him to do that?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not withdraw the objection. I have great respect for my friend from South Carolina and the work his committee have in hand, but there are a number of appropriation bills which must be acted upon and which demand prior consideration.

Mr. COX (to Mr. HEMPHILL). Why not take a night session?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I ask that we be allowed a night session, and I would suggest next Wednesday night, at half past 7.

The SPEAKER. At what hour will the House take recess? Mr. HEMPHILL. Take a recess at 5 o'clock to meet at 7.30.

Mr. ROGERS. Not unless the session be limited.
Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he expects to bring up at that time the trust bills or the Rock Creek park bills?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, I can not state to the gentleman. We shall bring up such bills as the committee may direct.

Mr. BLOUNT. Because I think there should be no night sessions on bills of that character.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There are other important bills before the committee. I will state that there are a number of measures to which I think there will be no objection; but, at the same time, let me say that I think these trust bills have not exactly received fair treatment from the House. They ought to be acted on one way or the other. But I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that if it is his wish to prevent proper legislative consideration of those measures, it can be prevented at any time at a night session by calling a quorum if a quorum is not present.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say, in respense to what the gentleman has said, that there are objections to these bills which should manifest themselves in debate rather than by filibustering.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well, then; give us an opportunity to debate them. We may vote against them ourselves after hearing the discussion. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Very likely.

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order. Let us proceed, if we can, to business in some shape.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that objection is made to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Was there objection to my proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia as objecting; but the Chair will submit the request again.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will save time by objecting at once.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I ask unanimous consent for Tuesday night, that the House take a recess at the hour named-

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the same objection. No agreement can be reached unless the gentleman excepts the bills that I have named. Mr. ROGERS. And also limit the session to half past 10.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection whatever to limiting the

Mr. RANDALL. Regular order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up for present consideration the bill H. R. 12154, on the House Calendar.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the title.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

So the House refused to consider the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I now renew my motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a bill here of very general importance, and I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 12136) relating to the establishment of a public park in the District of Columbia.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McAdoo].

Mr. ENLOE. I want to make a suggestion in reference to that matter, and that is, if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will withdraw his objection to fixing a night for the consideration of this business [cries of "Regular order!"], I will guaranty that they do not pass either of these bills without a quorum. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] is not here I will be. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take the word of the gentleman from Ten-

The House again divided; and pending the count,
Mr. HEMPHILL said: I withdraw the question of no quorum.
The SPEAKER. The noes have it, and the motion is not agreed to. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that the sentiment of the House is not in favor of taking up the business of the District of Columbia to-day. I do not want to consume the time and punish other people as well as myself. I will not press this further to-day, but I would like to come to the members of this House with as favorable a plea as I can, hoping that when we come up with our business at a future day they will be more considerate of it and of the people of this District and let the business go through.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. RANDALL to go into Committee of the Whole House, and the motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Dockery in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills; and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the sundry civil bill as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Symes], and on this amendment the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made the point of no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that a new vote be taken.
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will again take

Mr. KILGORE. I think the amendment ought to be read

Mr. RANDALL. I can state the amendment briefly. The amendment as now proposed is to appropriate $250,000 for irrigation instead of $150,000 as reported by the committee.

Mr. KILGORE. For the survey of sites for reservoirs for irrigation?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 45.

Mr. KILGORE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that in an important mat-ter like this it ought to be carried by a quorum. I dislike to obstruct this matter, and hate to delay the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the consideration of the appropriation bill—

Mr. RANDALL. I make the suggestion to the gentleman from Texas that there can be a yea-and-nay vote in the House upon this proposition if one-fifth, as provided under the Constitution, so demand.

Mr. HOLMAN. But you can not separate the two propositions.
Mr. KILGORE. Can we not agree that there shall be a yea-and-nay vote when the bill is reported to the House?

Mr. BLOUNT. The House would not be bound by that.

Mr. KILGORE. But we could agree to report to the House a proposition of that kind.

Mr. RANDALL. That proposition as coming from the Committee of the Whole would not bind the House.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman would be entitled to a yea-and-nay vote on the proposition in the House

Mr. REED. You see how tender he is of the spirit of our rules, for he wants even less than a constitutional one-fifth to call the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make the point of no quorum?

Mr. KILGORE. Will there be opportunity to discuss this matter in the House?

Mr. RANDALL. There will not if I can prevent discussion.

KILGORE. Can we not talk about it a good deal in the

Mr. RANDALL. There was talk all day Saturday on this para-

Mr. RYAN. Nearly the entire day.
Mr. BLOUNT. The only suggestion I have to make to the gentleman is, to get a quorum here and keep it here.

Mr. RYAN. Well, if you are going to do that, you will find a great deal of trouble in passing your appropriation bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I insist upon the point of no quorum for the pres-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas insists upon the point of no quorum, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE].

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 118, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Current expenses of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb: For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, and for books and illustrative apparatus, and for general repairs and improvements, $52,500: Provided, That no more than $25,000 shall be expended for salaries and wages in the institution during the fiscal year 1890: Provided further, That one-half of all expenses attending the instruction of deaf and dumb persons admitted to said institution from the District of Columbia, under section 4864 of the Revised Statutes, shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States, and hereafter estimates for such expenses shall each year be submitted in the regular estimates for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia: And provided further. That deaf-mutes hereafter admitted to this institution from the several States and Territories, as provided in section 4865 of the Revised Statutes, shall only have the expenses of their instruction in the collegiate department, exclusive of support, paid from appropriations made for the support of the institution.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what alterations are proposed to be made in the existing law by the paragraph that has just been read with reference to the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb?

Mr. RANDALL. On that point I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], who will answer the question.

Mr. ROGERS. In advance of the gentleman's explanation I wish to reserve all points of order on this part of the bill until I can get the information I desire.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I would state that the changes proposed in the current law are, first, to limit the entire expenditure for salaries in this institution to $25,000.

Mr. ROGERS. What was the law on that point last year? Mr. CLEMENTS. The law limited the amount to $25,000 from this appropriation. The institution, however, has in practice made that application of the $25,000 appropriated, and, in addition to that, has applied in that way $5,000 or $6,000 more, derived from other contributions to the institution; making the total expenditure for salaries over $30,000. This bill proposes to limit the salaries in the aggregate amount to $25,000, from whatever source the money may come.

Mr. ROGERS. Is there any change with reference to the second

Mr. CLEMENTS. There is a change with reference to the support of the institution. It is provided that one-half of the expenses of the beneficiaries from the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of the District.

Mr. ROGERS. What has been the law on that subject heretofore? Mr. CLEMENTS. Heretofore the National Government has paid it all. This bill proposes to make the District bear one-half the expense of the students from the District. In addition to that, it proposes to remedy what we consider an abuse in another direction. The law provides that the institution may receive from the several States and Territories of the Union forty students free of charge so far as tuition is concerned; their other expenses apart from tuition not to be borne by the General Government.

The practice of the institution has been to receive none from some States and a large number from others, in one instance, I believe, as many as thirteen from one State, Pennsylvania, and perhaps eleven from another; so that more than one-half of the States of the Union have no students in the institution under this provision, while others have quite a number. The amendment introduced here proposes to equalize that, so as to give an equal distribution of these scholarships to the different States of the Union; and it provides also that the entire expenses of these beneficiaries, aside from tuition, shall be borne by the States or by the friends of the students. That is really the provision of the existing law. It requires only that the Government shall provide tuition free; but, under the practice of the institution, as is admitted, they have a way of charging a mere nominal amount to the account of board and expenses, and taxing the balance on the public appropriation and the contributions made to the institution from other sources. This bill provides that the States from which the beneficiaries come, or the friends of the beneficiaries, shall pay their expense outside of tuition, or at least that it shall come from some other source than the Federal Government. These are the only changes from the current law

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am not very familiar with this mat-ter, but for the edification of the House I desire to have read the letter which I send to the desk. It is a letter which I received this morning from a gentleman connected with the education of deaf-mutes in my own State. I have not his personal acquaintance, but I believe that he is at the head of the deaf and dumb institution in my State.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., January 24, 1889.

DEAR SIR: If it is not too late I most earnestly beg you to do what you can for the National Deaf-Mute College of Washington, D. C. An amendment has been proposed to their usual bill that I am told will drive away all of their students who are poor, as it requires them to pay their board. It seems to me that the policy of the Government should be to encourage the poor, and if some plan could be carried through that would entitle each State to a certain number of students free of charge it would be a great thing for all the brighter pupils in our Southern institutes. I have been wishing for a long time to introduce something of the sort, but the college has been doing such good work and has been so very liberal to Southern students that I did not think it wise to meddle with it. Hoping you will do something for them, I am,
Yours, most respectfully,

Hon. J. H. ROGERS, United States Congress,

Mr. ROGERS. This letter reached me since I came to the House this morning, and I do not know that, even with the explanation just made by the gentleman from Georgia, I understand sufficient of the law on this subject as it now is, or of the changes that are proposed, to be able at this time to throw any light upon the real questions involved. I desire, therefore, to reserve the point of order I have made, if I may do so, until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who, I understand, is familiar with this subject, shall have an opportunity to be heard, so that I may determine whether or not I desire to press the point of order.

Mr. Chairman-Mr. HITT.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. HITT. Before we get to that there is another matter which I wish to bring up, which comes in order first. I would be glad, Mr. Chairman, to offer an amendment to the second line on the page—the provision in regard to the amount of the appropriation $52,500, which I desire to have amended to $57,500; and then when we come to the point of order which affects the proviso in the clause further on-

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield a moment, I wish to say that I would like to expedite as much as I can the work of the committee; and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will consent, I would like to have this matter passed over for the present so that we may return to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I will consent to anything that is reasonable.
Mr. ROGERS. I simply desire this matter passed over until I can have an opportunity to examine it.
Mr. HEMPHILL. When shall we take it up again?
Mr. ROGERS. At any time during the day, I presume, or during

Mr. ROCERS. At any the during the day, the progress of the bill.
Mr. RANDALL. During the day.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over infor-

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas will gather what information he may desire in reference to this matter during the discussion, if it proceeds now.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I have no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. As the Chair understands, the point of order is against the paragraph. Now, if the paragraph is to go out on the point of order, all the time that may be consumed in discussion of the merits before the point of order is decided will be wasted; and that waste of time I wish to avoid.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Illinois is going to submit a point of order upon the paragraph, we may as well take it up

Mr. HITT. I would like first to make a motion to amend as to the amount of the appropriation; and then, going on a little further, we shall reach the proviso limiting and cutting off wholly the giving of aid or partial support to the institution; and upon that I would like to raise a point of order. It is to that, I understand, the gentleman from Arkansas thinks the point of order would apply.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon such a statement as that I should have to ask that the point of order be raised and decided at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the gentleman from Arkansas has already made a point of order against the entire paragraph, and it occurs to the Chair that the mode of procedure suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] would expedite business; that is, to dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. RANDALL. We might discuss the merits of this question for an hour and then the paragraph might go out on a point of order.

Mr. HITT. Do I understand the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] to have made a point of order against the whole paragraph?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I was going to correct the Chair in regard to that. I desire to make my point of order against such portions of the paragraph separately as are new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will be kind enough to make his points of order now.

Mr. ROGERS. If I am to make the points of order I would prefer that the paragraph should go over, because I have not examined the question as fully as I desire.

Mr. RANDALL. I have already consented to that course, but some gentleman objected.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The point of order can be first raised and afterward the question of amount.

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman from Arkansas will permit me, I will narrow the point of order and make it to that part of the paragraph which I believe is a departure from existing law.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Illinois can not be prevented from making any additional point of order, for I have reserved points of order upon the whole paragraph. I am willing the discussion should go on, and will endeavor to gather the information I desire as the debate proceeds.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would beg to offer a suggestion. this paragraph involves several propositions, the Chair suggests that the point of order be made against each proviso as it is reached in regu-

Mr. RANDALL. There are three provisos.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the Chair is that the point of order be first considered, as it has been made against the first proviso.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, on the first proviso I make the point of order that the limitation contained in the provision in lines 3, 4, and 5, on page 51, "that no more than $25,000 shall be expended for salaries and wages in the institution during the fiscal year 1890" is a departure from existing law, which has the further words "of said sum." That limitation of the amount to be expended upon salaries and wages, as it has existed in the law heretofore, applied only to the amount appropriated by Congress. The managers could only apply $25,000 of the appropriation for salaries and wages, but they had funds from other sources, and as $25,000 was not enough, they added about $6,000 to it and thus have been able to pay about $31,000 for salaries and wages and kept the institution up in efficiency. By the omission of the words "of said sum" this incidental mention in an appropriation bill became a new and sweeping general provision, which invades and changes the fundamental law of the institution, which alters the general act dating thirty-two years ago, an enactment which is embraced in the Revised Statutes, and which conferred on the directors the management of the institution, the employment of teachers, and fixing salaries. These salaries have been paid out of the appropriations and the other funds of the institution. Heretofore there has been put sometimes in the appropriation bill a limitation on the amount to be applied to salaries and wages from the money appropriated, but never on the amount to be applied to salaries and wages. At one time it was $22,000; at another time $25,000; never before has a committee of Congress proposed to say to the managers of that institution that they shall not so spend more than $25,000, piccing out the appropriation from the resources of the institution received from the charities of large-hearted men, from the tuition fees, and from various sources, with which to eke out the appropriations of Congress.

The omission of the words "of said sum," to wit, of the sum appropriated here, makes this bill a departure from existing law. And unless the gentleman will consent to insert the words "of said sum," I make the point of order that this provision is a departure from existing law, is in conflict with the spirit of the fundamental law upon which the institution is founded as it is set down to-day in the Revised Stat-

ntes of the United States

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will please send up the law which this first proviso changes.

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order against lines 3, 4, and 5 to the word "ninety," as being a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to examine the statute which this proviso is said to change. Is the existing law to which the gentleman from Illinois refers a general statute, or is it a proviso of an appropriation bill of former years?

Mr. HITT. I will send to the Chair the statute of last year, and I call attention to sections 4859 and 4862 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it incorporated in the appropriation bill of last year?

Mr. HITT. Yes; the appropriation bill of last year, with the words of said sum." The CHAIRMAN.

The Chair is of the opinion the point of order can not be sustained if this is merely a limitation of the appropriation and not in violation of any law.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me I will make a statement.

Mr. HITT. I will yield for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in reference to the point of order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I have the rules for the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and they are, I apprehend, the rules for the Fiftieth Congress. Rule XXI provides:

Nor shall any provision changing any existing law be in order in any appro-priation bill or any amendment thereto.

The point I make is, this is a corporation established by law with all the rights which belong to such institutions. It is found in chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes, beginning the section 4862.

If it is a corporation it has existence under United States statutes, and there must be some law for the regulation of such an institution. That law says the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb shall be managed as provided in its present constitution and such additional regulations as from time to time may be found necessary. Now there are certain directors provided for, whose business it is to fix the salaries of these officers, and this bill undertakes to say how much those officers shall receive.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman mean to state that the bill should provide that the president shall receive so much, the vice-president so much, and to fix the other salaries?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; I think what the House of Representa-tives can do is to put the limitation on the money it appropriates itself. It has the right to do that.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is exactly what is done here.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Notatall. If the gentleman was better informed he would not have made such a rash statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am glad to sit at the feet of the modern Gama-

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am glad to have one scholar.
Mr. McMILLIN. I am sorry I am the gentleman's first.
Mr. HEMPHILL. It says:

Provided, That no more than $25,000 shall be expended for salaries and wages in the institution during the fiscal year 1890.

It does not say "more than $25,000 of the sum hereby appropriated." If it said that that is all right, as Congress has the right to direct how its own funds shall be expended; but it has no right in an appropriation bill to take away from the directors of this institution the management of the funds not received from Congress, but, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], which came to this institution from those who founded it before Congress made any appropriation.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does not the gentleman think Congress has the same right to limit the application of funds received under the law passed by Congress as it has to limit direct appropriations?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think it has in an appropriation bill. has some power in an appropriation bill. In an appropriation bill all it can do is to make provision in reference to the appropriation contained in it. The rules provide in an appropriation bill there shall be no general legislation. Whenever you undertake to legislate in an appropriation bill except to make an appropriation it is general legisla-tion. Hence money donated to this institution by large-hearted men interested in the education of these people, money received from tuition and other sources, is not a sum that can be regulated here. Congress can put in any regulation as to the money it is appropriating, but it has no right to refer to anything else. When it undertakes to say there shall be paid $25,000 for salary, and no more, it is clearly wrong. Supposing some one should leave $1,000 or $10,000 to endow a professor, or to pay a certain portion of the professors' salaries, what right has Congress to say it shall not be done?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does the gentleman from South Carolina say that any such state of facts as he has suggested exists in relation to this in-

Mr. HEMPHILL. I say it is as reasonable as that the money they get for tuition and fees can be taken cognizance of and regulated, as far as its distribution is concerned, in an appropriation bill. It is clear that the committee can put in this provise as to the regular expenditure of money they appropriate in the bill; but the money which is outside, which comes to this institution from other sources, they have nothing in the world to do with. This bill does not say that the $25,000 thereby appropriated may be used for this purpose, but it provides that the salaries shall not exceed $25,000, no matter how they get the money to pay the salaries.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it might as well be stated now that the proviso originated in the Forty-seventh Congress as it appears in existing law, and was reported here by Mr. HISCOCK, then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, after an investigation by that committee, in which it was developed that of the amount of money given by the Federal Government to the support of this institution $30,000 or thereabouts was consumed in the payment of salaries. That is to say, of the amount appropriated by the Government $30,000 was paid for salaries, wages, and living expenses of the officials and employes in charge of the institution.

The effort was made at that time to change the law in some other particulars, but it failed, and this restriction or limitation was finally admitted and put upon the appropriation after the point of order had been made against it. The very next year, as I have here the facts to show, while the managers at that time were able and careful men—and we have two able managers of that institution on the floor of the House now in the person of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL]—the very next year the report came that the amount of money expended—
Mr. HEMPHILL. Is the gentleman reading now from the last annual report?

Mr. RANDALL. No; for the year 1883, after the legislation was had upon this subject.

That report shows that there was about $22,000 expended for salaries under the terms of the act of 1882, which provided that not more than $22,000 should be expended for salaries out of the Federal funds. But the very next item of that report shows that they did not live up to the intention of Congress in making the appropriation in that form, but instead of that they expended almost the entire amount of the receipts from outside sources, which was about $6,100, and transferred it all to the salary account, so that if the Congress of the United States intended, by the restriction adopted in the Forty-seventh Congress, to limit the salaries to the exact sum specified in the appropriation bill, that intention was circumvented by the authorities of that institution paying out the sum received from Congress in the annual appropriation bill, and in addition thereto the total amount received for tuition fees, etc., so that the salaries that year aggregated nearly $30,000.

The salaries in fact now, including the support of those at the institution, run up to nearly $34,000. There is not a member in the Committee on Appropriations but who has great sympathy with the desire to promote the best interests of the institution as they understand With that view, the committee have put in a proviso there which does not change the features of the organic law in regard to this institution, but is merely a restriction upon the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit the Chair to interrupt him to ask a question? Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania understand that this first proviso simply limits the appropriation?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the object of it, to limit the appropriation for salary and wages of those connected as teachers and helpers at the institution to $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. But does the gentleman from Pennsylvania understand that it limits the salaries of the institution to the amount appropriated here?

Mr. RANDALL. The effect would be to say that the $34,000 expended heretofore should not be permitted; and this would bring the expenditures down to $25,000; so that the difference between the amounts heretofore paid and that which would be paid under this bill could be used for the purpose of either increasing the number of inmates in the institution or giving additional benefits to those who are already there.

Mr. HITT. As the words of the gentleman from Pennsylvania go on record, I hope he will permit me to call his attention to the fact that the annual report just printed of this institution shows that the amount paid for salaries was in accordance with the limitation of the last act, $25,000 out of the appropriation, and after that $5,951 re-last act, $25,000 out of the appropriation, and after that $5,951 received from various other sources, making about $31,000 in all.

Mr. RANDALL. I am able to show that $25,000, up to the amount of limitation, was paid in salaries and wages, and they took then in addition the entire receipts from outside sources, $6,000 or more, and in addition to that, five of these gentlemen have their homes, and twenty-five additional employes are provided for and supported out of the fund, which is outside of salaries and wages, being an additional expenditure to that extent. So that I think a fair statement of the administration there would show about $34,000 expended practically in salaries and wages out of the amounts received there, and which sum goes to the pay and support of the professors, teachers, and the employés, for wages, living, etc.

Mr. HITT. That is not in accordance with the report. This, however, being on the point of order, I will not go into the details of it

Mr. RANDALL. I will show the gentleman these facts, which are found on page 41 of the report of the committee.

Mr. HITT. I am taking the report of the institution itself. Mr. RANDALL. But I called for information as chairman of the committee, and that information is embodied in page 41 of the report, where it will be found that five of these officers have houses, most of them very comfortable, and twenty-five of the employés, in addition to the wages, are supported at the institution; that is to say, that an addi-tional portion of the fund is expended for the purchase of the necessary groceries, vegetables, etc., for them; so that in fact there is $34,000 out of the aggregate of sixty-three or sixty-four thousand dollars which goes to the support of the teachers and employés of this institution. The desire of the committee is to limit the salaries and to permit the fund derived from other sources to be used for the support of the inmates exclusively, so that the uses and benefits of the institution may be increased rather than diminished.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the question just put by the Chair is the real question involved in this controversy, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he will read the text of his bill, must admit that this first proviso limits the salaries to be paid in the institution to $25,000. Now, whether or not the college has power of its own to use other funds not given by Congress or not I must leave to the discretion of those gentlemen familiar with the facts, for I am not advised. But that this proviso limits the expenditure for salaries to $25,000 there can not be any misunderstanding if the English language means anything at all:

For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, and for-books and illustrative apparatus, and for-general repairs and improvements, $52,500: Provided. That no more than $25,000 shall be expended for salaries and wages in the institution during the fiscal year 1890.

So that if the Committee on Appropriations had intended to put a limit upon the sum to be used for salaries in the amount appropriated by this bill, they have not done so. They should have said that "not more than $25,000 of the amount hereby appropriated "shall be expended for salaries; but they did not say that, but said that for the support of this institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, it shall be limited to $25,000, whether appropriated by this bill or not. If the managers of the institution have the right to use the funds of the institution for that purpose, and this becomes a law, I submit it is an infringement of the law as it now applies to the honest regulation of that institution.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In response to what the gentleman from Arkansas has said in relation to the inquiry put by the Chair, I desire to say that the whole matter falls clearly within the universal practice of this House in limiting the appropriations for public purposes. As stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a moment ago, in the Forty-seventh Congress it was ascertained and believed by that Congress that for the payment of salaries or wages in that institution more than 50 per cent. of the entire amount appropriated was expended.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit the Chair to make an inquiry at this point for information? Under what authority is the salary account of the institution fixed?

Mr. ROGERS. If the Chair will turn to the statute which lies before him he will find that it is alluded to in section 4859 of the Revised Statutes, this being an incorporation chartered by Congress

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to say now, Mr. Chairman, that Congress has appropriated a large sum of money for the support of this institution, for a public purpose, but believed that too great a sum was being consumed in salaries that were fixed by the corporation. Thereupon there was inserted in an appropriation bill a proviso that there should not be appropriated more than $25,000 of this sum for that purpose. So it has been continued in the appropriation bills from that time to this. But the evil that was intended to be stopped has been continued by the managers, who have used the entire sum received from tuition and supplemented the amount of $25,000 appropriated by Congress. The intention is to put a limit upon the entire amount to be used for salaries at $25,000, from whatever source received. By that means we meet the question fairly and squarely, and limit the entire amount to be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. This limitation is not simply a limitation upon the appropriation carried in this bill?

Mr. CLEMENTS. It is a conditional appropriation. We make this appropriation of $52,500 with the condition that the officers of that institution may use $25,000 for salaries, from whatever source they please; and with this condition this appropriation is available; otherwise it is not.

Now, it seems to me that it is quite competent for Congress to do that. Congress has the power to withhold this appropriation entirely. It sees proper to give it with this condition: that the institution may use $25,000, either from that or from any other sum. It may use $25,000 for salaries, but no more. Has not Congress the power to appropriate with a limit, and to say that they shall comply with those terms? It is clearly within the universal practice of this House, and it is clearly competent for this House to say how this appropriation shall be used. Here are five or six thousand dollars received as tuition. The gentleman from South Carolina has spoken of instances of donation. There is no question of donation. The entire sum that is re-ceived by this institution, as shown by their last report, aside from the public appropriation, is from tuition. They use the entire sum received from tuition, and supplement the $25,000 allowed for salary, and thereby make about $31,000 for salaries, making the salaries nearly 50 per cent. of the entire amount received by appropriation and from

Now, has not Congress the power, under the Constitution and by law of Congress, where the corporation has the right to receive tuition, and where it has received tuition in connection with a public appropria-tion, to say, "You have received this appropriation of $52,500, and you receive it upon the condition that you will consume $25,000 and no more for salaries; you can take it all from this sum, or part from this sum and part from the tuition, it makes no difference which?"

think this condition is clearly under the rule.

Mr. PETERS. The law chartered this institution, and the law granting the charter provided that the board of managers should fix the salaries of the officers of the institution. Consequently, when the board fixed the salaries that action of the board becomes the law in relation to the salaries of these officers. Now comes a proposition from the Committee on Appropriations, as confessed by the gentleman from the Committee on Appropriations, as confessed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], to decrease the salaries allowed by the board of managers. Therefore the proposition does change the existing law as to salaries, and is undoubtedly open to the point of order. So far as these outside donations that are spoken of are concerned, they have nothing to do with the Government; the Government does not take them into consideration. The Government chartered this institution and authorized the board of directors to fix the salaries of the officers, and the board have fixed those salaries. If by outside contributions those officers are enabled to get larger salaries, that is something with which the Government has nothing to do. But the question on the point of order is, does the provision in this bill change the existing law? and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] both admit that the effect of it will be to reduce the salaries of these officers, and consequently to change ex-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will submit a further amendment in lieu of that

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That of the above sum no more shall be expended for salaries and wages in this institution during the fiscal year 1890 than shall, with the payments from other sources, make a total for such salaries and wages for said year of $25,000 in all.

Mr. HITT. I make the same point of order upon that. It is the same provision.

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of this amendment is that if the salaries paid from other sources are, say, $6,000, then there shall be only $19,000 taken out of this fund. I want to make its meaning plain, and the proposition is clearly in order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the whole matter might not be settled by a simple amendment providing that "no more than $25,000 of said sum shall be expended for salaries." That would remedy the whole diffi-

Mr. RANDALL. That is the existing law, and it does not remedy the difficulty. They evaded that provision last year and the year before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that the amount could be very readily reduced. Mr. RANDALL. No No; because the amount from outside sources

Mr. HITT.

Mr. Chairman, that amendment is the same as the original proposition.

original proposition.

Mr. KEKR. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] obviates the objection made by the Chair and puts the amendment in a form to which there can be no objection. We have a right to say here that certain conditions shall be attached to the appropriation of this sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will admit this amendment, though with some doubt upon the question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to hear that amendment read again. The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has admitted the amendment.
Mr. McMILLIN. If the House entertained the doubt which the Chair expressed, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was simply expressing the doubts in his own mind, and not presuming to voice the sentiments of others.

Mr. HITT. Will the Chair hear further remark?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can address himself to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that is evidently a proposition to change existing law by a provision in an appropriation bill. It is an interference by Congress with the chartered rights of the managers of this institution. It is a limitation upon the number of teachers that shall be employed in this institution-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has admitted the amendment.

Mr. HITT. The Chair invited further remark.

Several MEMBERS. On the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Only on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Do I understand the Chair to rule that amendment in without hearing any objection to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had heard some objections before he assed upon it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, Mr. Chairman, that amendment is not a proper limitation. It seems to me that it is the same thing as the original proposition in the bill, except that it is a little more verbose; but if the Chair has ruled upon it, of course I shall not address myself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has passed upon the point of order. Then does the amendment come up on its merit? Mr. HEMPHILL.

The CHAIRMAN. It does

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I desire to submit some remarks upon the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina will be rec-

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, this proposition, as I understand it, has for its object the limitation of the salaries which are to be paid this institution to an aggregate amount of $25,000 per annum. So far as I have heard from the committee, they have no information upon which to base their recommendation, except the general statement that there has been too much paid for salaries.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, we have full information, I think.
Mr. HEMPHILL. You have only what is stated in the report, have you not?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the president of the institution was before the committee and was heard.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I understand that the president of the institution sabmitted in writing what he had to say, and that this statement is embodied in the report.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken; the president was heard at length before the committee.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Not at very great length, if I understand the matter correctly. I will ask the gentleman whether he has anything in the shape of a comparison showing the percentage of income paid for salaries in this institution, as compared with similar expenditures in other institutions.

Mr. RANDALL. I have heard that matter brought up before, and I have inquired into it to some extent. These gentlemen desired to draw a parallel between the salaries paid at their institution and those paid at Yale, Harvard, Princeton, West Point, and the Naval Academv.

Mr. HEMPHILL. My friend from Pennsylvania did not get hold of the right data. There are other institutions in this country where persons who are so unfortunate as to be deaf and dumb are taught, but there is no other institution in the United States, and, so far as my in-formation goes—and I have made some inquiry—there is no other institution in the world which undertakes to instruct these unfortunate fellow-beings of ours to the same degree that is undertaken in this institution. In other words, the other institutions of this character in this country are what may be called common schools, while this is a college, bringing up pupils to a higher degree of knowledge than does any other institution of the sort in this or any other country.

Mr. FARQUHAR. This institution has the character of a normal school for the education of teachers.

Mr. HEMPHILL. More than that, it is a college; and some students educated there are as well educated as those who go from the best institutions of learning in this country.

But in order that we might have some information upon which to hase a judgment as to the proper allowance for salaries in this institution, I have obtained and have now before me a statement showing the percentage of salaries paid at this institution as compared with its total income, and similar percentages paid to other deaf and dumb institu-In Massachusetts the current expenses of the institution are $29,718, and $14,952 is paid for salaries of professors and wages of employés, making about 50 per cent. of the total income of the institution. In the State of Connecticut, whose institution for the deaf and dumb is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, in the country, the total income is $51,877, and $26,757 is paid for salaries, etc., being 60 per cent. of the total income. In the New York institution the total income is something more than $36,000, and over $20,000, or 60 per cent. is paid for salaries, etc.

for salaries, etc.

In the institution at Philadelphia, of which my distinguished friend from that city [Mr. RANDALL] ought to know something, and which, judging from its reputation, is, I suppose, one of the most economically conducted institutions in this country, 50 per cent. of the income is paid in salaries and wages. In the Columbia College, the one we have now under discussion, less than 48 per cent. is paid in this way. In other words, the proportion of salaries and wages to income ranges in other institutions from 50 per cent. to 60 per cent., while in this institution less than 48 per cent. is paid.

institution less than 48 per cent. is paid.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman will permit me to call his attention at this point to the institution in my State, the largest in the world, where more in proportion to the whole expenditure is paid for teaching the primary studies than the amount paid for higher tuition in this col-

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; in Illinois they have the largest institution of this kind in the world. Its total income is $107,950, and there is paid in salaries and wages $53,875.

Of course the patronage varies in these different institutions. We all know that in institutions where the lower branches of education are taught the number of pupils is greater than in colleges or institutions where the higher branches of knowledge are taught. The number of pupils ranges from ninety-eight in Massachusetts, which pays 50 per cent. of the income in salaries and wages, to four hundred and thirty-three pupils in Philadelphia, where over 50 per cent. of the income is paid for salaries, etc. At Jacksonville, Ill., there are five hundred students and thirty-three professors. Here we have one hundred and thirty-coren students and clause and clau thirty-seven students and eleven professors. Of course in institutions where the number of pupils in the primary department is large it is easy to classify them, because a large number learning the rudiments of education can be put into one class; but in an institution where the higher branches are taught it is impossible to put a large number of students under the instruction of one teacher.

Mr. Chairman, of course I have no interest whatever in this institution further than that which every other gentleman upon this floor ought to have, except that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] and myself were appointed by the Speaker during the present Congress as trustees or directors to represent the House of Representatives upon the board of directors. I am satisfied that there is not a man on this floor who would not want to see this institution conducted in a proper and who would not want to see this institution conducted in a proper and becoming manner. It is one that appeals strongly to the kindest sympathy of every member here; and I say that when we come to compare it with other institutions in this country it is apparent from the figures I have furnished that we have not paid in larger proportion than other institutions are paying; and we are giving better instruction than is given in any other institution of the same character on the globe. I trust therefore that we shall not act hastily in this matter, and thereby do injustice to this institution.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this institution is fortunate in having on this floor two so able representatives as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMP-HILL], who are concerned in the management of the institution. I feel on this question just as the gentleman from South Carolina does. I have never at any time failed to defend this institution. On the contrary, I have always given the most hearty support in my power to the object involved. In 1882 a restriction was made that it should not be over $22,000, which was subsequently increased to $25,000. Immediately thereupon the entire sum received outside was handed over to the salary account coming from tuition.

Mr. Chairman, there are two sides to the question of sentiment involved in this matter. One side is a sentiment for salaries; the other is really a sentiment which should guide the House in respect to an increase of the number of inmates in this institution. Of course the number of inmates, in carrying out the sentiment upon which the Government has entered here as it has nowhere else, must necessarily be reduced if a large part, say $34,000, of the $64,000 is devoted to paying salaries and wages. The president of this college gets $4,000 a year. He also gets a house, which is equivalent to about $1,000 more. It is a comfortable one; I have been in it and know whereof I speak. In addition, if I am not misinformed, and as the debate when this matter was up before shows that the support of the president and his family, as well as that of his servants, is paid out of this fund.

Now, sir, I say that the position of the Committee on Appropriations is in behalf of the inmates of this institution and in order that all the States may have an equal opportunity to send inmates to be educated in this institution in the higher branches of study.

It has been suggested the inmates are not fairly divided among the States. I do not know how that happened. I find thirteen in number States. I do not know how that happened. I find thirteen in number from my own State. I find, also, ten from Iowa. I find nearly one-half of the States without any immates there at all.

Now, the District of Columbia Committee, which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] so ably represents, ought to bring in some law governing this institution in some way, so that the inmates may be divided, where applications are made, fairly among the States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is proper.

Mr. RANDALL. The very moment the Committee on Appropriations looks to the correction of these matters an effort is made here—I do not say by members of the House, but an impression is sought to be made upon the House—that the Committee on Appropriations are adbe made upon the House—that the Committee on Appropriations are adverse to this institution. I will say for myself that I never voted against a reasonable charity appropriation, and when I stand here and ask the adoption of this provise I am asking it in the interest of the poor people who have been deprived of ability to hear or speak. I know it is needed, and I am not willing to have my record in behalf of charity suspected, nor do I mean to do anything in that direction. If these gentlemen would do with less salary there would be more to be given to these unfortunates. No one would do more than I would to make these poor people happy. I consider education happiness to every man, and in a tenfold degree to these poor people to be educated in this way.

I can not for one moment suppose any one here would consider the Committee on Appropriations were aiming a blow at the usefulness of committee on Appropriations were aiming a blow at the userulness of this institution, when we give $4,000 a year to the president with a house and his expenses paid, and houses for four other professors, with living and wages of twenty-five employés, which amount is taken from the general fund, and which would increase the number of inmates or make them more comfortable. I can not believe this House will consider for a moment that we wish to interfere with this humanitarian institution by what is here proposed in this bill. We do only what the Forty-seventh Congress did, and what every Congress has done since, in respect to an institution which draws nine-tenths of its income from the Federal Treasury

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate most certainly what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said, that the point of order I was inclined to insist on a few minutes since, when I was read a lecture by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. Hemphill], should not be taken as in antagonism to these poor people. I wish to state that in taking the step I did then, and in casting the vote I shall now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I do it in order there shall be less salaries paid to people and more consideration given to the deaf and dumb for whom this in-stitution was established. If that is an offense, then I am an offend er

My distinguished friend from South Carolina was not himself as well posted as it seems he thought he was, for he spoke of a "donation" or "donations" being made to this institution.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why, the gentleman spoke of the donations to this institution

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are no such donations, and any such stateent is misleading. I do not mean, of course, that the gentleman ment is misleading. would intentionally mislead the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not say that there were any donations to this institution. I said that some money had been received by the in-stitution, with which the Committee on Appropriations had nothing whatever to do.

Mr. McMILLIN. And to regulate the donations was the only inference that could have been drawn by the House from the remarks of the gentleman. But, if I misunderstood my friend from South Carolina, I am very glad to be able to make the correction. I wanted the House to understand that there were no donations here at all, and hence whatever remarks may have been made about donations in any way were misleading, or were at least calculated to mislead the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we see here in the case of this institution that one man gets one-tenth of the entire expenses of the institution; and yet we are told that it is wrong to limit the amount paid in salaries. Sixty-four thousand and some odd hundred dollars or thereabouts are expended in the maintenance of the establishment, and $34,000 of that expended in the maintenance of the establishment, and $34,000 of that sum go for salaries and expenses. It is all wrong. I am in favor of restricting the salaried expenses, and thereby increasing the fund that goes for the education of these poor, helpless people.

I think also that the amendment suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] should be adopted, and that there ought to be some regulation by which people admitted there shall come from the States impartially, so far as these people come from the States at all; and that there should not be a dozen States without any representation when the expenditure is paid out of the public funds alike

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he knows as a matter of fact whether there have been any applications from those States which have no students in that institu-

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no information on that question.
Mr. HEMPHILL. I thought so.
Mr. McMILLIN. I am taking the facts as they appear of record and as they have been stated here.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, you are making a point against the institation without any information.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have this information—

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say to the gentleman from South Carolina that, judging from my own knowledge, there are applications.

Mr. HEMPHILL. From States that have no students?
Mr. RANDALL. Yes. There have been some I know from Penn-

Mr. McMILLIN. I know that of the amount appropriated this proportion of the sum has been expended in the payment of people who are educated and who can hear and see.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Has the gentleman ever been there in his life?

Mr. McMILLIN. What has that got to do with it? Mr. HEMPHILL.

Has the gentleman ever been there?

Mr. McMILLIN. No. I never was. [Laughter.]
Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman has never been there. So I supposed. Do you know whether these men can hear or not?

Mr. McMILLIN. I know this, that there are applications made there for entrance which can not be filled, and the gentleman knows it. Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know any such thing.

Mr. McMILLIN. You do not?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; I do not.
Mr. McMILLIN. Well, then, you ought to know. If the gentleman knew more about it he could give more valuable information to the committee. Have you ever been there? [Laughter.]
Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, I have.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then you ought to be better posted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman evidently thinks he is posted.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know the facts as they exist.
Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman knows the facts I hope he will give us the benefit of them.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman evidently thinks he knows all the facts about it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Oh, I know there are some gentlemen who think they know more than all the rest of the world.

Mr. HEMPHILL (pointing to Mr. McMILLIN). Yes, sir; and there is one I see before me now. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I know my friend from South Carolina is a very wise man—very wise indeed; but I hope he will not take offense because some member here on the floor may entertain a doubt that he does not possess all the wisdom in the world. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment will not prevail. There is but one college for the education of deaf and dumb people in the United States, or in the world, and I am glad to say that one is under the auspices of this Government and in this District. It is a very unusual thing to find anywhere persons who are thoroughly competent to instruct the inmates of a college for deaf and dumb. deaf and dumb.

It is a very rare thing to find anywhere persons competent to instruct in a college for the deaf and dumb. The demand is small and the supply is small also; and I suppose that we shall all agree that there is supply is small also; and I suppose that we shall all agree that there is no more unfortunate class of people in the world than those who are shut up in perpetual silence and everlasting speechlessness. At the present time, as we find from the report of the committee, there are paid in salaries and expenses $30,840. I find in this same report that there are at present five persons receiving salaries in this institution in excess of $1,600 a year—a president, vice-president, two professors at $2,400 each, and one principal of school at $2,000. Now, it is proposed to reduce this sum by nearly $6,000. I submit to every candid gentleman that the sum already paid, considering the character of the service rendered, its unusual nature, the rareness with which these individuals can be found that the sums already paid are not excessive. dividuals can be found, that the sums already paid are not excessive, and ought not to be diminished. Certainly none ought to be diminished so as to receive less than $1,600. To reduce this sum by nearly $6,000 will be to reduce the salaries of the five who are now receiving in excess of $1,500 or $1,600 by nearly a thousand, or else it will result in a reduction all along the line of salaries that are already barely sufficient for the living of the people who receive them. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I am proud that the only deaf and dumb college in the world is under the auspices of this Government, but I would not be proud to see this great Government, with its overflowing Treasury, niggardly in the payment of salaries to those people who teach these deaf and dumb people.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] with very great emphasis and eloquence said that he desired to save off the salaries of these professors in order to increase the amount for the instruction of these unfortunates; but unfortunately the only people to instruct them are the very ones whose salaries it is proposed to reduce, and if reduced as proposed it endangers the loss of those individuals and would lead to inefficiency in the instruction.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire unnecessarily to consume time, and if I have any time remaining yield it back.

Mr. CANNON. I simply want to say this, Mr. Chairman, that some years ago I took part in this House in a movement along the line of the committee's bill. After the fight was over, never having been to this institution, I went to see what there was of it, and I did see it.

After I looked through the institution, I saw something of the course of instruction there, ascertained that it was the highest of any institution in this country, and, probably, any in the world. I ascertained that there were many students from the States, and although upon the first reading of the law it looked as though they could not receive any support; but I learned that in fact they received partial support where they were needy. So that when I looked all through I found that I had not comprehended the uses and usefulness of the institution, and I was converted.

And I want to say to gentlemen here now that if they propose to change the law curtailing the salaries or curtailing the support so far as it is given to needy persons that come into that institution from the States, they had better keep away from the institution, for I am satisfied a visit will convert them.

Mr. RANDALL. My amendment does not do anything of the sort. It only touches the salaries.

Mr. CANNON. I think that a provision here does do something of that sort

Mr. RANDALL. We have modified it, if the gentleman— Mr. CANNON. Does the subsequent provision "that mutes here-after admitted to this institution from the several States and Territo-

Mr. RANDALL. That is not up now at all.
Mr. CANNON. Well, if the gentleman thinks that that provision will be stricken out I will stop that part of the discussion—
Mr. RANDALL. I have no right to state whether it will or will

Mr. CANNON. But I think we had better leave the law in that respect untouched. Upon the whole, I think it would be wiser, as this institution has been here in operation a number of years, has been doing good work, and does as good or better work than this class of institutions can elsewhere, and these instructors being, as I am reliably informed, the most competent in this country, if not in the world, it would be the better part of wisdom to let the appropriation and the law remain as now, and for that reason I shall so vote.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not claim to be able to give very full information about this institution, for I confess I have not had time to examine its management and work as fully as I would otherwise have liked to do. But during the first Congress in which I served here I succeeded in having a student from my district admitted to it. He is a bright young man so far as intellect is concerned, but can neither hear nor speak. His family are reputable people, but unfortunately not able to pay for his education in an institution like this. In making an application for this young man's admission to the institute I learned. however, enough of its plans and management to make me now feel very friendly to it.

We have in Pennsylvania an institution for the support, maintenance, and primary education of the deaf and dumb of which we feel proud. But the very best instruction in that institution, in which the young man I speak of had been educated, I found barely fitted him for admission to the Columbia Institution, now under consideration.

All our State institutions give but a primary training, one that is very useful indeed, one that enables the unfortunates deprived of hearing and speech to have some little of the enjoyments of association with their fellow-men. But this, I believe, is the only institution that goes further and undertakes to fit them for usefulness. This gives them not only a higher education, but, impossible as it might seem, actually enables many of its students to become useful members of society.

Some gentlemen who favor the proposed amendment seem to regard this as an institution simply for the support and maintenance of these unfortunate persons. So far as the District of Columbia is concerned, that is to some extent true. But as to its principal object, and so far as the United States in general is concerned, such is not the purpose of the institution, as I understand. It has a higher, broader, and grander work, and it has performed and is performing that work well.

Mr. RANDALL. There are two branches of the institution, the primary and the collegiate. The collegiate branch of education is something that I think the Government of the United States has not entered upon anywhere else than in this particular institution.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the facts I desire to have known. I want to press home upon the committee the idea that only advanced pupils are admitted to this institution. I believe that it is only part of the States that so train their deaf and dumb that they are fit to be admitted. If you reduce the amount that is to be paid for instruction you take from the papils that which they need most. They are not brought here for support and maintenance, but they come to obtain the aid and assistance of educated, skilled, and long-trained to obtain the aid and assistance of educated, skilled, and long-trained teachers and professors that they can get no place else. If you interfere with the teachers and professors, if you give the institution less experienced men in these places, you greatly lessen its usefulness. In fact, I have no doubt you at once lessen the number of students that can be trained there to any great advantage. Hence I think that to maintain an efficient corps of teachers is the very life of the institution. Some of the things which it is alleged these professors receive at this institution in the way of compensation, such as house-room for themselves and families, are just such things as are generally given to pro-selves and families, are just such things as are generally given to pro-fessors in educational institutions all over the country. This I underfessors in educational institutions all over the country. This I understand is universally the case in the several State institutions for the deaf and dumb. It should be borne in mind that the men who are fitted to be teachers in a college of this kind are men of very special and exceptional training, and that their experience in fitting themselves for that in a measure unfits them for anything else. To say the least, it does not fit or improve them for any other calling. I am opposed to this amendment; am in favor of keeping the salaries at least up to the present standard. In fact I regard these as the class of men up to the present standard. In fact I regard these as the class of men who ought to have larger salaries than they have now. It is a calling but few men are willing to engage in. They devote their lives to the most unfortunate of our race; they serve humanity in its broadest sense. They ought to have such remuneration as would offer at least some inducement to other men to fit themselves for service in such institutions.

If this amendment, as seems now to be largely conceded, would be an injury to the institution, or lessen its efficiency, it ought to be voted down. Most of us, I think, are at least not able to say that it will not do harm, and the gentlemen selected to represent the House upon the board of management, who have given the subject most attention, say that it will, and I trust that it will be voted down. The institution is a worthy one, and is doing good work.

We are told that it is regarded by the most humane and intelligent nations of the world as a model of its kind, and that it is visited from abroad by those who desire to learn from it how to improve their own institutions

The amount of money involved is a small matter to the Government, and we should not, to save a few dollars, run any risk of crippling or injuring this institution, which is worthy of our best care and support.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, if the House is not entirely wearied I will say an additional word. This amendment is a proposition to cut down the payment to be made to teachers in this institution from about $31,000 per annum, which it has been for several years, to $25,000; this, too, is proposed to be done when the number of students taught, in whose behalf the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] feels such a pathetic interest, and who require this instruction more than all things else, has been steadily increasing, and is still growing greater. all things else, has been steadily increasing, and is still growing greater. This corps of teachers was thought necessary by the board of managers in 1883, when the pupils numbered only 106, but since that time the number has greatly increased. The next year there were 126 students; the next year, 1885, there were 127; the next year there were 126; the next year 138; the next year, last year, 137, and now there are over 150. The essential, the all-important service given to these unfortunates is higher instruction, not raiment, not food, not shelter, not even primary instruction: these things they might get elsewhere, and the in-mary instruction; these things they might get elsewhere, and the in-struction is to them valueless unless it be collegiate in its character, for they come from the State institutions, where they have been taught the elements, and teaching for them must be instruction of a high order. It is a college, the only one in the world for deaf-mutes, and they must get this advanced education there or nowhere. Through many years of care and effort on the part of its friends, and of great solicitude on the part of those who in Congress have watched over the institution, it has now a body of teachers who stand, in comparison with those elsewhere in this country and in other countries, as the masters, the leaders, the great authorities in a literature and in a movement that is one of the furthest advanced steps in the civilization and the humanity of the age. And if gentlemen think they are paid too high salaries because they are teachers in a college which is out of the common, and as to which, therefore, there is no standard of measure-ment or comparison with other institutions for deaf-mutes, let them compare the salaries paid to the professors in this great institution, the only one of its kind, with the salaries paid at West Point, at Annapolis, at Harvard, to men of equal celebrity in literature and in the history of education, and I think they will find that the managers of this institution have not allowed to the teachers any extravagant or unusual rate of compensation.

As I have gone through that institution, seeing its efficient, fruitful work and the good it was doing in so rapidly and wonderfully changing imbecility and helplessly silent creatures into intelligent thinkers and writers, prosperous artisans and chemists and teachers, I have thought it an honor and true glory of a nation that its enlightened Congress supported such a noble, beneficent enterprise, the only one on the globe of its high grade—an institution which no other can compete with, which nothing else can replace. There are colleges and universities by hundreds for all the rest of us, but not for these unfortunates; its students are excluded from all the other colleges in the world. But this discussion has been so full, and the subject being one which my friend from South Carolina and myself have had to deal with personally, representing this House, I feel that we are liable to suppose that others would feel the same interest we do, and thus talk too long, and I will not go further into details lest I should weary the House. I feel content to leave it to be dealt with in that liberal spirit which I know will animate the representatives of the people.

Mr. PETERS. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. I think the difficulty with this institution is similar to the difficulty with our Army and Navy. Our Army is top-heavy with officers. Our Navy is top-heavy with officers. We have a large number of officers in the Army that are drawing large salaries, and very few privates. We have a large number of officers in the Navy who draw large salaries, and very few seamen. I think, from what has been stated here, that that is one of the troubles of this institution; it is top-heavy with professors. According to the statements made here, there are one hundred and fifty students in the institution and there are eleven professors, or one professor to every thirteen students. Now, any one having any experience in collegiate institutions must see that that is too large a corps of teachers for such a body of students, and I believe that instead of making an attack upon the salaries the attack should be upon the number of professors employed. I know that this method of teaching is a specialty, so far as these professors are concerned, and that they require a certain special education to fit them for it; but surely one professor is not required for werey thirteen students.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman consider that you can not have a college without having all the different courses of study?

Mr. PETERS. I understand that we can not have a college without having all the different branches of education taught there, but I understand also that no man is fit to be a professor in a college unless he is able to teach all the branches that are taught in the institution.

Mr. HITT. I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the statement submitted a few moments ago by the gentleman from South Carolina showing that the proportion of students to teachers is smaller all along the line in other institutions in the United States than it is in this.

Mr. PETERS. I am aware of the statement made in regard to the percentage

Mr. HEMPHILL. But the statement applied also to the number of teachers as compared with the number of scholars. In Northhamp-ton, Mass., there is one professor to seven students; in Hartford, one professor to nine students; in New York and Philadelphia, one professor to eleven students; in Jacksonville, Ill., one professor to fifteen students, and in this District, one professor to twelve students. We have here a larger proportion of students to professors than in any other institution of this kind in the world, except that at Jacksonville, Ill., where the proportion is, as I have stated, one professor to fifteen students; and there they have five hundred students, all of whom are being instructed in the lower branches, so that it is easy to classify them.

Mr. PETERS. I simply mention this point so that Representatives here may give attention to it. I do not claim to have any accurate knowledge of the question; I make the suggestion so that if we have a top-heavy corps of professors in that institution the remedy may be applied.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, there were-ayes 63, noes 61.

Mr. JACKSON. No quorum has voted. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JACKSON and Mr. CLEMENTS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 72.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. JACKSON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it; and the amendment is agreed

Mr. HOLMES. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point comes too late. The Chair had announced the result. A point of order is pending, as the Chair understands, against the second proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that there is any objection to the second proviso.

Mr. HITT. I desire to make a point of order against the proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought the point of order applied only to the first and third provisos.

Mr. HITT. I desire to make a point of order upon the third proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there is any objection to the second proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point waived as to the second proviso? Mr. RANDALL. It is not raised at all.

Mr. HITT. I do not raise it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order, then, as the Chair understands, is raised against the third proviso. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order that the third proviso, in lines 14 to 19, changes existing law. The proviso is-

That deaf-mutes hereafter admitted to this institution from the several States and Territories, as provided in section 4865, Revised Statutes, shall only have the expenses of their instruction in the collegiate department, exclusive of support, paid from appropriations made for the support of the institution.

The law will be found in the Revised Statutes, section 4865. law as it now stands is that "no student coming from either of the States shall be supported by the United States;" whereas by this proviso, in lines 14 to 19, the limitation is much more strict, preventing any aid whatever to the very indigent who are now helped, but not "supported." It is very different and far more harsh in effect than the language of the existing statute-the general law. Under the general law the regulation adopted by the managers of the institution, which has been in operation for many years, provides that—

To students from the States and Territories who have not the means of defraying all the expenses of the college course, the board of directors may render such assistance as circumstances seem to require, as far as the means at its disposal for this object will allow.

Then follows the further provision requiring the students from the States to bring with them clothing and all the means of sustenance they But unfortunately the pupils are usually very poor-some of them utterly without means—poverty and infirmity; and the board of directors has heretofore allotted to them under this general law from the appropriation and resources of the institution some help proportionate to their wants. Those students who have abundant means-and there are such-receive no assistance. There are students now in the college who receive nothing whatever in this way for their support, because their parents are wealthy.

The word "support," which I understand was inserted in the law in the days of Thaddeus Stevens, the gentleman who introduced this pro-vision in regard to admitting students from the States, was meant to refer to paying all the expenditures incident to the life of the student in the college, as is done at Annapolis and West Point; but it was not meant to exclude discreet aid, sometimes small, sometimes more, a contribution wherever requisite. But the language of this proviso, as the Chair will see, would totally prevent this board from giving any aid of any kind to any student coming from a State, however poor, however any kind to any student coming from a State, nowever poor, nowever worthy, and it would keep the very poor out altogether. It is legislation against poverty added to affliction. It is a grave and substantial change in the existing law. I will not weary the Chair by arguing further the point of order, which seems so plainly well taken as the objection to this proviso, which, by the rules of the House, is not admissible in an appropriation bill when it changes existing law.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read section 4865 of the Revised Statutes, which is the law governing this matter. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the statute before him.

gentleman state what his point is and-

Mr. CLEMENTS. My point is that the provision in the bill is in exact accordance with the language of the statute, the existing law governing the admission of students into this institution from the States and Territories. I ask the attention of the Chair to the exact language of the statute as compared with the language in this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4865. Deaf-mutes, not exceeding forty in number, residing in the several States and Territories, applying for admission to the collegiate department of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, shall be received on the same terms and conditions as those prescribed by law for residents of the District of Columbia, at the discretion of the president of the institution; but no student coming from either of the States shall be supported by the United States during any portion of the time he remains therein.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask the Clerk to read the section preceding that, to show how students from the District of Columbia are admitted there.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4864. Whenever the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied, by evidence produced by the president of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, that any deaf and dumb person of teachable age, properly belonging to the District of Columbia, is in indigent circumstances and can not command the means to secure an education, it shall be his duty to authorize such person to enter the institution for instruction.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, the point is simply this: It is provided there that forty students from the States and Territories may be admitted at the discretion of the management of that institution on the same terms as students from the-District of Columbia, which is free of tuition. The language of the first section just read expressly limits it to be free of expense for tuition. We have simply provided this clause in the appropriation bill to give tuition free, but not support, which is in exact accordance with the statute just read.

Mr. ROGERS. I would inquire of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] why he wants to pass this if it is like the other two

Mr. CLEMENTS. For the reason that the institution does not conform to the law as it is.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman think they will conform to this any better than to the other provision?

Mr. CLEMENTS. We hope so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks in an appropriation bill you "hereafter" makes it obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That was put in to save those already in the institution, so that no inmates there now in violation of law would be turned out. It was put in to save them from being disturbed, they having already entered the institution and now there.

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order against the whole proviso that it is in violation of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of Mr. CLEMENTS. I move to strike out the word "hereafter," which was merely included for the purpose I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will admit the paragraph without the word "hereafter."

Mr. McRAE. I move an amendment, which I hope will be accepted.
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "shall," in the seventeenth line, down to and including the word "institution," in the nineteenth line, and insert the following: "be apportioned among the said States and Territories according to the number of deaf-mutes therein as shown by the Federal census."

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that, provided it does not disturb any inmate of the institution at this time.

Mr. McRAE. Such is not my intention.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the paragraph be read as it will be when amended.

The paragraph was read.

Mr. HITT. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. McRAE. That amendment is in the interest of these poor

Mr. HITT. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is ruled out.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations does not oppose the proposition that in the future the States should get their fair proportion of inmates in this institution, but they do not wish those who are there now to be disturbed.

Mr. RYAN. Before any provision of this character should be intro-duced into this bill it ought to be properly considered and carefully for-There are States from which no applications come. mulated.

Mr. RANDALL. The trouble is with some of the States, they do not know they have the right.

Mr. HITT. I made the point of order, not in the spirit of factious opposition, but in behalf of the institution; to prevent any change that is not fully considered. I am not sure that I heard all of the amendment amid the noise in the Hall.

Mr. RANDALL. We represent those who want to get in the institution. Gentlemen may represent the institution, but we represent those who wish to get in there.

Mr. HITT. No one is excluded.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an application myself, but in the face of thirteen from my State already there I have hesitated. I have one from my own district.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman is hardly in a position to complain.

Mr. McRAE. There are people from my State who would like to get into the institution, but that State can not be represented because get into the institution, but that State can not be represented because of the arrangements which have been made with regard to admissions there, the whole number of pupils being already provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to insist upon the point of order?

Mr. HITT. I must insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HITT. The points of order now having been disposed of, I would like, in accordance to what was agreed upon, to move to amend in line 2 of this paragraph—

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Before passing from this paragraph, I want to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter if he desires to offer an amendment.

after if he desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment I now send to the desk, changing the amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

Change the amount of the appropriation from $52,500 to $57,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not necessary at all in view of the limitation just put upon the appropriation by the House.

Mr. HITT. This motion I make in view of the fact that this appro-Mr. HITT. This motion I make in view of the fact that this appropriation is less than the general one heretofore; and to appropriate it now will be simply to avoid waiting for the deficiency bill to provide for it hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. fact, however, that the amount has been $52,500, if I remember, for some two or three years past. Last year there was a deficiency of $2,500. This year I understand it will be about $5,000.

Mr. HITT. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania is also aware of I want to call the gentleman's attention to the the fact that this appropriation has been $55,000, since and including 1883 down to 1887, and $2,500 deficiency was appropriated in 1887. Last year we appropriated that sum, and in addition to that two appropriations of $2,500 each.

Mr. RANDALL. And there is a deficiency now of $5,000.

Mr. HITT. That will be the total deficiency. There is $2,500 now

Mr. HIII. That will be the total deficiency. There is $2,500 how pending, as I understand.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; the last deficiency bill contained a clause appropriating $2,500, which made the aggregate for the year $55,000, if I am correct. Now, this year the deficiency, if I recollect aright, is $5,000, so that it will make $57,500 in all.

Mr. HITT. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania accept the amendment to make it $57,500? .

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I'do not. The committee think they have given the amount that is needed in view of the limitation which we put upon the appropriation, giving an increased amount for an increased number of inmates.

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman objects on the point of order I will not make any further statement as to the facts, but the point of order.

Does the gentleman make the point of order upon it?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not quite understand what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 51, strike out "$52,500" and insert "$57,500."

Mr. RANDALL. I can not make the point of order upon that, for it is in order. But I want to say to the House that the amendment ought not to be adopted, because the proviso which we have put in loosens $6,000 to the additional number of inmates.

Mr. HITT. I send to the desk a letter which I ask to have read in this connection, and which was transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury from the Secretary of the Interior, it being a statement from the chief of this institution.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois is aware of the fact that by the limitation fixed upon the salaries, $25,000 in place of $34,-000, there is an additional amount available for the care of the inmates?

Mr. HITT. I am aware of the action taken to-day; but I can not consent to the adoption of a theory which, in my judgment, will restrict the beneficial effects of this institution. Mr. RANDALL. We have not cut down its usefulness. On the contrary, we have endeavored to increase it.

Mr. HITT. I ask for the reading of this communication. It will show what the institution has required, what has been allowed, and what is now needed.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUME, Kendall Green, near Washington, D.C., December 31, 1888,

SIR: My attention has been called very recently to the fact that the estimate of $57,500 for the current expenses of this institution during the year ending June 30, 1890, submitted to you some months ago by order of our board of directors, was transmitted to Congress diminished in amount to $52,500.

I beg leave to lay before you certain considerations which may, I trust, make it seem just that Congress should be asked to appropriate the larger sum for the purpose indicated.

For the year ended June 30, 1886, as for several years previously, the amount appropriated by Congress for the current expenses of this institution was $55,000.

During the following year the widest.

appropriated by Congress for the current expenses of this institution was $50,000.

During the following year, the subject of providing for the care and education of the feeble-minded children of the District of Columbia being before Congress, an appropriation of $2,500 for the purpose was made, this sum being taken out of the amount allowed this institution for that year.

A similar appropriation and a similar deduction were made for the year ended June 30, 1888.

The attention of your Department and of Congress having been called to the evident injustice of this action, Congress at its last session made two appropriations of $2,500 each, thus restoring the amount allowed this institution for each of the years 1887 and 1888 to $55,000.

In submitting an estimate for the year ending June 30, 1890, our directors were compelled to take notice of the fact that a steady increase in the number of pupils to be provided for was going on.

In 1886 we had 126 immates. In 1887 we had 138. There was a certainty of more than this number in 1888, with a strong probability that there would be upwards of 155 in 1889-'90.

In view of this certain increase of burden and expense the directors felt themselves justified in asking the small addition of $2,500 to the amount allowed for several years.

An increase of pupils from 126 to 185 is equal to nearly 23 per cent., while an increase of expense from $55,000 to $57,000 is less than 5 per cent., while an increase of expense from $55,000 to $57,000 is less than 5 per cent., from which it may be inferred that the amount asked by the directors is based upon a policy of the most rigid economy.

This is indeed the fact, and the directors urge, respectfully but earnestly, that with less than the amount asked for, namely, $57,500, it will be impossible to maintain the institution without serious detriment and loss in some branch of its service.

its service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. M. GALLAUDET, President.

Hon. WM. F. VILAS, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HITT. I also ask that the table appended may be printed. There was no objection.

It is as follows:

Statement of appropriations for current expenses since 1002.
For 1883. Number of pupils, 106 For 1884. Number of pupils, 126 For 1885. Number of pupils, 127 For 1886. Number of pupils, 127	$55,000 55,000 55,000 55,000
For 1887. Number of pupils, 138: First appropriated Deficiency	52,500 2,500
	55, 000
For 1889. Number of pupils, 137: First appropriated Deficiency	52,500 2,500
	55,000
For 1889, Number of pupils (estimated), 145	52,500 57,500

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I want to say that the next paragraph provides for the feeble-minded $2,500.

Mr. HITT. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have one or two observations to make in connection with this institution, and for that purpose move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does the gentleman want?
Mr. ROGERS. Oh, only three or four minutes.
Mr. RANDALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he wanted to ask some time in debate beyond the five-minute rule.
Mr. ROGERS. I want to call the attention of the House to two aspects of this matter, as much for the purpose of bringing it to the attention of the Appropriations Committee and the honorable gentlemen who are trustees of this institution on the part of the House as anything else.

We all know that an ordinary institution of learning with a corps of professors is just as capable of teaching 400 students as of teaching 137 students, which I understand is the full number now in the institution. We ought not therefore, it seems to me, in fixing the number to be apportioned to the States to limit it to 40. The number ought to be increased and distributed among the States either upon the basis of population or on the number of deaf-mutes in each State, so that these poor, unfortunate people, in whose behalf this corps of professors is employed and paid, may in as large numbers as possible get the benefits of this institution.

We all know that in very many of the States these institutions are in embryo as it were, and that the grade of studies is far below that in this college. They do not even attain a standard in some of the States that would enable students to enter upon the collegiate course at this institution, so that young men who have taken the full course of studies in the State institutions when they come to this institution are compelled to go into the primary department in order to gain access to the collegiate course.

It is of the utmost importance for the education of these people who live in the States that they should have this collegiate education, so that they can go back to their homes and be enabled to teach the unfortunate that are found in the State institutions. Then, again, Mr. Chairman, we all doubtless are aware of the fact that there are a large number of these persons, perhaps the larger part of them, who are in the most indigent circumstances. They are utterly incapable of supporting themselves in the States, much less in this institution. I had hoped that while the Government supports this college, one that is the superior of any similar institution on earth—because other retires have superior of any similar institution on earth-because other nations have even sent deputations here to visit it to learn something of the methods pursued in it-that while we are maintaining such an institution, that we would so govern it as to make it accomplish the greatest possible amount of good.

These two things ought to have the attention of the House and the country, namely, that this corps of professors, paid by the Government, should be compelled to teach as many applicants who apply to this institution as they can without increasing its force, and where a man is shown to be indigent, and shown to be capable of instruction and possessed of talent that would enable him to become a valuable professor in the State institutions of our country, we ought not to prevent him from coming here, and from enjoying this institution; but, on the contrary, the Government ought to give this opportunity to such applicants to the fullest extent.

Moreover, if they should not have information sufficient to enable them to enter the collegiate course after going through the course of studies at State institutions, they should not be denied access to the primary department of this institution, but, on the contrary, the primary department should be made the bridge from these State institutions to this collegiate institution.

Having said this much by way of calling attention to the condition of things, I regret that I am not prepared to present an amendment that will reach the end I desire on the spur of the moment. Indeed, I do not pretend that I am sufficiently advised about the management and conduct of this institution to justify me in asking the committee to follow my suggestions; but I do think the matter of great importance, worthy of a kindly interest, and as such I commend it to the con-tance, worthy of a kindly interest, and as such I commend it to the consideration of those who are charged with the management of this school.

A single visit to it impressed me with the conviction that the United States had not engaged in any nobler or more philanthropic work in this District than the maintenance of this institution.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to what I understand will result from the adoption of this proviso, the proviso beginning on line 14.

Mr. RANDALL. We have passed from that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I said, Mr. Chairman, before we passed that point that I desired to speak upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. We have passed it.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to strike it out. I only want to

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment of the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment of the gentleman, but there is an amendment pending, and as soon as that is disposed of the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. I concur very fully in all that the gentleman from Arkansas has said. This law, which assumes to govern this institution, does not govern it, and it is confessedly inapplicable to the existing condition of things. There is no doubt in my mind but that as the money comes from the Federal Government all the States ought to have an could participation in the hencits of that institution if it is have an equal participation in the benefits of that institution if it is possible, but just now we can not do that unless we disturb some of those who are now there. We can not make that fair and equal distribution in the States. In addition to that I would much prefer to give the indigent an opportunity to receive this instruction rather than those who are able to pay, because there are other institutions, that are conducted by private enterprise and donation, where those persons who are able to pay can get in. There ought to be some place where those who are not able to pay can get instruction. But it does not belong to the Committee on Appropriations, but to some other committee of the House, to offer a change of this law which governs this institution. And they ought to look closely to the institution itself in its present wants, and in the attempt by the managers to live up to a law which is impracticable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the word "hereafter" having been ruled out of order, under the statement of the chairman of the committee, the rule of absolute exclusion from all benefits other than instruction will apply to all the inmates of that institution. I am informed that there are sixty inmates from the various States and Territories who are now supported in the institution, in addition to receiving instruction. This rule, in its application, would necessarily exclude them from that benefit, and if that is the intention we should land [Mr. McComas].

know it. In the next place, if the rule is to be arbitrary that those inknow it. In the next place, if the rule is to be arbitrary that those inmates of the institution who come from the States and Territories shall get only the benefit of instruction, then, in line 17, after the word "from," should be added the words "the District of Columbia," so as to make the same rule apply to inmates from the District which applies to inmates from the States and Territories.

Mr. RANDALL. In the one case the money would come out of the District treasury and in the other it would come out of the Eederal

District treasury, and in the other it would come out of the Federal Treasury. I suppose the gentleman does not object to that so long as the money is not required to be paid by those who are not able to pay it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all right; but there are now about sixty inmates from the States and Territories and about eighty about sixty inmates from the States and Territories and about eighty from the District of Columbia, and while the District pays only onehalf the cost of the support of its inmates, the General Government pays one-half for the support of the inmates from the District, and yet it has only the privilege of obtaining instruction for those that are sent from the different States and Territories.

Now, my judgment is that the rule should be broader in the matter of extending aid to the absolutely indigent deaf-mutes. We can afford to be generous in this matter, and whenever it is known that a pupil from any State is absolutely indigent and unable to obtain the benefits of this special education himself, I am in favor of incorporating a provision here which will enable the institution to extend those benefits to such a person. I propose, therefore, that the words "except when absolutely indigent" be inserted, so as to give to such persons the benefits of this institution. As I have already said, we can afford to be generous when it comes to acts of humanity, when it comes to extending aid to this unfortunate mass of people, and, instead of drawing a rigid line, I think we should relax the rule so that the benefits of this institution may be still more widely extended. I move to amend by adding, in line 17, after the word "statutes," the words "except when absolutely indigent." That will leave a broad discretion in the managers of the institution which they can exercise in a spirit of charity, so that when persons come there seeking admission who are absolutely indigent they can receive both instruction and support, while on the other hand in the cases of those who can afford to pay their own expenses the benefits of the institution can be limited to instruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "statutes," in line 17, insert the words "except when absolutely indigent."

Mr. HITT. Why not strike out the whole proviso?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to the indigent having a prefer-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT moved to strike out the whole proviso, but subsequently withdrew the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:
Inquiry concerning Alaska: That a committee consisting of seven membersclect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-first Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress, shall, prior to the first Monday in December next, inquire into and investigate the expenditure of appropriations which have been made for the support of the government and for educational purposes in the Territory of Alaska, and for the preliminary survey of the frontier line between the Territory and British Columbia; and they shall make full inquiry and report concerning the resources of Alaska, and what changes, if any, should be made in the laws of the United States governing and having reference to said Territory. That said committee shall have power to appoint subcommittees and visit Alaska; and in so doing they are authorized to use Government conveyances and means of transportation. Said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have power to send for persons and papers and to appoint a clerk and a stenographer; and the committee may report, by bill or otherwise, to the Fifty-first Congress. A sum sufficient, not exceeding $7,500, to pay the expenses of said committee hereby authorized, and of witnesses that may be summoned before it, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be immediately available and payable on the draft of the chairman of said committee in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order on that paragraph.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the point of order.
Mr. RANDALL. Do not reserve it. Let us have the point of order decided now

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that it is for an expenditure not authorized by law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to offer an amendment at this point.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have the point of order decided first. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt that the point of order is well taken. The present occupant of the chair makes this ruling with reluctance, first, because he is in hearty sympathy with the proposition, and secondly, because it was prepared by his late colleague, Mr.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, we would like to hear what is going a. What was the point of order made against this paragraph?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. McCOMAS. The point was that there is no law authorizing it. I have been trying to hear the point of order. How about having the regular order, Mr. Chair-Mr. KILGORE. an? [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN.

The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mary-

Mr. McCOMAS. The regular order is the right of a member to hear the proceedings of the House, and I have been trying to hear and to catch the eye of the Chair for some time back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] submitted a point of order against this paragraph upon the ground it proposed to change existing law.

Mr. McCOMAS. And did the Chair rule at once upon that point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled at once upon that point, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RAN-DALL], the gentleman having in charge this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. No; I insisted upon the point of order being determined before amendments were offered to the paragraph. I did not wish to cut off debate on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as desiring to cut off debate on the point of order. But the Chair did not observe any gentleman rise to discuss the point of order.

Mr. McCOMAS, And the Chair has decided it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided it; but will hear the gen-the Charland. The Charland is the insists upon it.

Mr. McComas] if he insists upon it.

Mr. McComas. I appreciate the courtesy of the Chair; but as the point of order has been decided I will not occupy time in discussing it, but will offer an amendment to be inserted in lieu of the paragraph stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Education in Alaska: For industrial and primary education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska without reference to race, $50,000.

Mr. KILGORE. I make a point of order on that amendment.
Mr. McCOMAS. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he will not consent to this amendment providing for education in Alaska?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the sum proposed is too large. Last year we appropriated $40,000, and I believe a good deal of that was wasted. Mr. KILGORE. I desire to make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHATRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not wish to be put in the attitude of waiving the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I can prevent it, I will not allow the gentleman from Texas to lose his rights. I have so often sympathized with the efforts of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will state his point of order.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not know what the law is on the subject of education in Alaska [laughter]; but I will submit, at a venture, the point of order that this amendment does not come in at the proper place, and that the expenditure proposed is not authorized by previous legislation.

Mr. McCOMAS. That point of order, Mr. Chairman, scarcely requires any serious answer. This appropriation is authorized by existing law, is enjoined by the act of 1884, and promised by the treaty under which we acquired Alaska. These ought to be recognized as good reasons to establish the position that the amendment is in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. KILGORE. Is there not an appropriation in this bill for this

Mr. McCOMAS. There has been such an appropriation every year for a number of years until now; in this bill there is none.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman knows the reason?

Mr. McCOMAS. Of course I understand it.

Several MEMBERS. What is the reason?

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to hear the reason.

Mr. McCOMAS. In view of the general inquiry which was proposed into the institutions of Alaska, the condition of the Territory, its educational facilities, the surveys, the fisheries, and the like, the Committee on Appropriations thought it proper to omit this provision until this general proposition for an inquiry had been considered and passed upon. The Chair has ruled out that provision; and now we have schools to provide for. Mr. Chairman, I presume the point of order is dismissed without further discussion. Now, upon the merits of this question I desire to say The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair is ready to rule upon the question

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say a word in this connection. I did not favor this clause in committee, although I can see that great good would result from this proposed inquiry. Just as great good resulted from a similar inquiry in reference to Indian affairs, which brought about the adopting of a policy by Congress in regard to that matter. This proposed inquiry was based upon the fact that there had been grave charges made in the public press as to the manner in which the money heretofore appropriated had been expended. It was thought that if this inquiry should be undertaken there need be no money given this year for purposes of education. But if the inquiry is not to be undertaken, then the question is presented in another form and may suggest the propriety of the amendment which the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The point is overruled.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, upon this proposition I desire to occupy some time.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe there was an agreement on that point.

How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. McCOMAS. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. It was the understanding when general debate was cut off that the gentleman from Maryland should be allowed some time at this stage of the bill. He would have taken time then, but I wanted to enter upon consideration of the bill by paragraphs at once; and I assented to an understanding that the gentleman should be al-The CHAIRMAN. Unarimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Maryland be allowed to speak fifteen minutes on his amendment,

Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to offer and have read an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will be read, after which the Chairwill recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McComas].

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON, as follows:

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. CUTCHEON, as follows:

Add the following:

"Provided, That the land, not exceeding $40 acres at any station, occupied at the date of the passage of this act as a missionary station among the native tribes in the Territory of Alaska, with the improvements thereon erected by or for such societies, shall be continued in the occupancy of the several religious societies to which said missionary stations belong, as provided in the act of May 17, 1834, entitled "An act providing a civil government for Alaska;" and such tracts of 640 acres are hereby confirmed to such religious societies, to be used for such missionary and educational purposes connected therewith. (The lands occupied by the Metlakatla Indians on Annette Island, in Alexander Archipelago, shall be permanently reserved for the homes of said Indians, and it shall be the duty of the register and ex officin surveyor-general to survey, fix, and mark the boundaries of the several tracts and bodies of land mentioned in this section, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and in like manner, as soon as may be, to survey, fix, and mark the boundaries of any lands occupied by other Indian tribes. The native inhabitants of the country shall not be disturbed in their town, village, or community settlements, nor in the possession of lands actually in their occupation, not to exceed 160 acres to each, nor shall other persons now resident in said Territory be disturbed in the possession of any lands, not being timber lands, which are actually in their own use and occupation for purposes of residence, trade, or business, until such time as they shall have had opportunity to acquire title thereto under laws of the United States enacted for that purpose."

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to reserve points of order on that amend-

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to reserve points of order on that amendment

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to have a few minutes, Mr. Chairman, in which to explain the amendment.

Mr. RYAN. I reserve the right to make the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Shall I make my explanation before that is

Mr. McCOMAS. A little later, I suggest to my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], as I have the floor now and wish to proceed with my remarks.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Go on. Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I have observed for years the neglect of the Territory of Alaska by Congress. It has not any votes to bestow. It has not to-day any political influence, although it comprises an area equal to one-sixth of the extent of the whole Union.

This American Congress has, in the last few years, been too indifferent to our colonial and fishery rights. We have been entirely too tame in respect of the fisheries off the coast of Newfoundland. We are now too dilatory with respect to the Samoan Islands, in the track of our commerce with Australia, and in the new track which this country will soon have by way of the Panama Canal from Europe to China, Japan, and India. Here, off our own coast, by a lucky purchase, we have another, a vast, dependency. Without contention with Great Britain or Germany we can take care of Alaska. It is our duty to take care of this empire.

Alaska has 581,000 square miles and 45,000 people, a climate equitable, mild, and salubrious; resources unexplored, yet of immeasurable value. Her fisheries last year were worth $3,000,000. Canning and packing establishments are increasing. Two years ago fourteen of these produced nearly $2,000,000 worth of canned salmon. Her whale fisheries and halibut and oil herring yield nearly a million gallons of oil. There is every reason to believe that the cod-fisheries rival those of Newfoundland, while the fisheries in value vastly exceed those of the Eastern coast.

In Alaska we have 25,000 miles of sea frontage where the mainland and islands border one great reservoir of fish, while the creeks and rivers literally swarm with salmon, and if the Government prevents the wholesale and wanton destruction now going on of the spawn, Alaska can supply the whole world with salmon. The codfish banks alone are worth far more than the whole amount of money we paid for the Territory, and yet these are only two out of seventy-five food-fishes found in Alaskan waters.

The commerce of Alaska last year amounted to over $4,000,000, in spite of every effort of this Congress to prevent there being any commerce in that Territory at all.

The people there can not acquire land. They are building a town, the city of Juneau, and all the houses, all the stores and shops, all the dwellings there are built upon land to which the people can not ac-

They have discovered coal in this Territory, enough to warm the whole Arctic region, enough to melt the north pole if you had furnace and flue with which to do it. [Laughter.] But there is little chance to develop it.

Neglected as the Territory has been, commerce has grown in spite of neglect. The fur-seals during the past eighteen years have probably yielded the Government in rent and royalty alone $5,700,000, and the annual fur trade is worth two millions and a half, but if we do not soon claim Behring's Sea to be an inland sea the rookeries or breeding grounds of the seal will be desolated and this industry destroyed. Gold dust and bullion amounted last year to $1,350,000, while lumber and ivory are beginning to yield. Interminable forests of pine, spruce, and hemlock are there uncared for, while grazing lands are extensive and valuable.

In this sundry civil appropriation bill we have appropriations of $50,000 for the revenue-cutter service, $20,000 for Alaska's boundary survey, $13,000 for coast survey, and $22,500 for Territorial salaries Repress as we may by neglect the vast undeveloped resources of this empire, embracing one-sixth of the territory of the Union, this population of 45,000 must steadily increase, and we should now give them schools commensurate with their population. Secretary of the Interior asks only for a common school in every settlement where there are children in sufficient number, and one school in every tribe of Indians or native settlement. This would require $75,000, and the very least sum, to include the pay of teachers and provide comfortable school-houses, is $50,000.

In the last year we had but sixteen public schools in Alaska, with a total attendance of 1,299 pupils, a couple of hundred of these being in the Sitka Industrial School. It would be far better if the mass of them It would be far better if the mass of them were supplied with industrial training. My amendment provides $50,-000 for industrial and primary education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race; and the statement I have made is conclusive, that out of the millions of revenue we have received from that Territory we ought to vote back to these people this pittance for industrial and primary education.

The opponents of education in Alaska reply that we ought not to give these children schooling on account of the immorality of the natives. The 6,500 white people are entitled to some consideration. The creole whites, the Aleuts, and civilized natives, in the aggregate 13,000 people, ought not to be deprived of schools because the uncivilized natives are immoral.

Russia gives annually to the people of our Territory $45,000 to support seventeen public schools, while we only maintain sixteen out of Government funds, and the Commissioner of Education reports that he is exceedingly embarrassed for want of funds to sustain thes

It seems that the native women and girls of Indian tribes in Alaska do not regard chastity as a virtue. The difference between those who attend the schools and those who do not is, that with the temptation increased by the presence of white miners and sailors, all those untaught yield, while many of those taught in the schools have become virtuous women, and just as far and as fast as these natives are brought under the influence of the schools, supplemented by the powerful influence of the various denominational missions, just so far and fast are increasing numbers rescued from the prevailing immorality

To deny schools to a whole Territory because some of the native population are heathens who do not regard chastity as a virtue, and because our neglect has allowed them to sink back to ignorance and barbarism from which the Russian Government, priests, and school-masters were saving these people, is not statesmanship; it is not hu-mane; it is a disgrace to this Christian nation.

We as Americans feel guilty when we see the seventeen schools in Alaska established and maintained by the Russian Government, giving a gratuity of $45,000 to educate our citizens, as a matter of humanity and Christianity, out of the treasury of Russia, while we ourselves gave last year only $40,000.

It can not be this Congress will refuse to give back a pittance of $50,000 to the Alaskans for education and to betaken out of their own revenue. I have the last report of the governor of Alaska, from which it appears there has been paid to our Government, for rent and royalty since 1870 from the seal fisheries alone, $5,700,000; and that, too, in spite of our neglect of this great Territory and its great future. Out of that $5,700,000 you ought at least to give $50,000 for the purpo of education of a people who live in a climate where not only schoolmasters are necessary, but where school-houses are required.

The superintendent of education says he wants $25,000 to build school-houses. There is one for each settlement in Alaska, and there is only one for each tribe of Indians. And yet of five thousand children of school age all save twelve hundred are still without schools. of school age all save twelve fundred are still without schools. And why is it? Not that we have not the money, because we have their money, as I have shown, and a great deal of it; not that we ought not to give them the schools, because by our treaty stipulations under which we acquired possession of Alaska we agreed to do so, and when we took that country we solemnly promised to keep them up; but that we are schooling girls to be debauched by the sailors and miners of Alaska.

Now, sir, we certainly would fail to reach a statesmanlike conclu-Now, sir, we certainly would fall to reach a statesmanlike concussion, it seems to me, simply because of the allegation that immorality is found among the aboriginal population, if, therefore, we will not have anything to do with the Alaskans as far as their education is concerned. Education does not make people moral, but it tends to help all the inducements to morality; and certainly it is not statesmanlike on account of the immorality of the Indians that we deprive one-third of their population, now civilized, of the right of common and industrial school training. It is neither right nor humane nor Christian like to refuse this aid. tian-like to refuse this aid

But, sir, there is something to be said about the amount I ask for in my amendment. If we are going to educate these people, enduring a climate rigorous in the extreme in the winter season, we can not possibly get along without proper school structures and with less than the sum of $50,000 that is asked here. The Commissioner of Education has visited Alaska, and has come back, and in his report states explicitly that he ought to have $75,000 for this purpose. My amendment appropriates but $50,000, not because I did not think the sum ought to be $75,000, but because I feared we might not be able to get more, and I did not want to jeopardize the possibility of getting even that much. The effect of the meager appropriations heretofore made is developed in the fact that in some parts of the country with a population of one hundred school children they have been unable to get a single school. It did not afford money enough to build a school-house, and Alaska is a cold country in which to keep school in the open air, especially in the

Why higgle between the sum of $40,000 and $50,000 of the money that actually belongs to these people for the education of their children? It is not your money; it belongs to them. You deserve no credit for it; it is here in your hands partly because you have disgraced the civiliza-tion of the century by depriving them of their schools because of the alleged immorality among some of the aborigines. You have dishonored the country by breaking your treaty stipulations in regard to this It is no answer to these allegations to say that you have school officials, that you have school superintendents, and that you have a governor for the Territory, in whom you do not confide, and that these officials come back here too often to the capital and report from time to time. It seems to me that somebody ought to come back here and hold up this picture to you, so that you could see and the country could see what it is. It is time that steps should be taken by somebody who knows the facts to lay them before you in proper form; not that these officials ought to come, for they should stay there and attend to their duties. Let the true state of affairs be known out there. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, my friend on the right says this amendment comes in after the Alaska junketing expedition is stricken out on the point of order. I want to say that it requires not much courage and less wisdom to say that a committee of the American Congress should not inquire into the condition of things there, to enable us here to take the steps that are necessary to be taken, and which we are to a certain extent obligated to take, and which ought not to be longer delayed.

In the very worst days of the older civilization, the most corrupt of the Eastern emperors in the Roman Empire, between wine and lust, would have found time enough to have sent a proconsul, or sent some sort of commission, and even the basest Roman senate would have sent somebody to investigate an empire like this. And is it not time for the American Congress to do it? But since the Congressional inquiry proposed has gone out on a point of order, we at least can give back to these people this part of their revenue. I think that the least we can do is to put in a provision for $50,000 for the education of the children of both races, and for teachers and schools for the Territory.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire the attention of the committee but for a moment while I explain the amendment offered by myself. It is section 6 of House bill 8878, reported from the Committee on Territories at the last session of this Congress. It was reported by the gentleman now occupying the chair, who is familiar with it. It expresses substantially the principle of the bill which I had the honor to introduce, and therefore I feel this interest in it.

It embraces three subjects: First, the mission stations; second, the reservation to the Metlakatla Indians; and, thirdly, the occupation of land already in the possession of Indians and other persons in the Territory. The first part of this amendment is already provided for under the organic act of Alaska, approved May 17, 1884, so far as these mission stations existed at that time; but quite a number of them have been established since then, and it extends to these newer missionary stations the same religious and educational privileges and opportunities sed by those that existed at the time of the organization of the The provision will be found on page 26 of the Statutes at Large of the Forty-eighth Congres

In regard to the second important point in the amendment, the Metlakatla Indians, I would like to have the attention of the committee for a moment. The story of the Metlakatla Indians is one that reads like a romance. Some thirfy years ago they were residing in the northern portion of the British dominions, where they were found by a missionary named William Duncan, an Englishman. They have all been converted to Christianity, or nearly all of them. Nearly all of them have become thoroughly civilized. They have a regular municipal government, with a mayor and town-council; have extensive manufactories, and a very large salmon cannery, where they can hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of salmon annually. In fact, there has not been a people who have been reclaimed from barbarism that have made more progress in thirty years than have the Metlakatla Indians.

Two years ago they got into some trouble with the government of British Columbia in regard to their land titles and other matters. At that time the Rev. William Duncan, the man who has charge of them, came here to Washington and visited the President, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to their removal to the territory of the United States. The result was that fully two thousand of them left their former home in British Columbia and moved to a little island called Annette, in the southwest-ern extremity of Alaska, known as the Alexander Archipelago. Annette is a little island about a mile wide and 6 or 8 miles long; and those people are the only inhabitants. It lies off there by itself, and its these people are the only inhabitants. It lies off there by itself, and its progress and the facts relating to these Indians were drawn up by the present governor of Alaska, Hon. A. P. Swineford, and its acquisition was provided for in the Alaska bill. They are a peaceable and industrious people, well adapted to our people, well disposed, without some one disturbs them, and we simply ask to set aside this little island for their occupancy. I hope that the point of order will not be insisted upon, as it takes not a dollar out of the Treasury, but is a trivial matter, and to let these people have this little island.

and to let these people have this little island.

Mr. ROGERS. I made the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The experience that we have had in dealing with the Indian tribes admonishes us that whatever policy we enter upon with reference to Alaska ought to be thoroughly well considered by the House of Representatives, and I can not consent to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This has been considered by the Committee on It is a paragraph reported in their Territorial bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is reluctantly compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to be heard a little farther in regard to the other provision of the amendment, the one in relation to reserving the lands now occupied by the natives and others. This is provided for in the organic act in a little different language from that in the amendment, but the amendment is not new legislation. On the contrary, it is in furtherance of the existing law. The existing law will be found on page 26 of the Statutes at Large, Forty-eighth Congress, Provided, That the Indians or other persons in said district shall not be disturbed in the possession of any lands actually in their use or occupation, or now claimed by them; but the terms under which such persons may acquire title to such lands is reserved for future legislation by Congress.

The language of the Territorial bill is not identical, but it is in furtherance of that law, and I think it is not amenable to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. If it does not change the law, and if they hold under the law, what is the use of the gentleman's provision?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The portion of this amendment in reference to the Metlakatla Indians is subject to the point of or-

Mr. DUNN. And that carries with it the whole amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The other portions of the amendment are substantially in accordance with the present law, but a portion of the amendment being subject to the point of order, of course the point applies to the whole of it.

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to say that sooner or later there must be an inquiry as to the condition of things in Alaska. If the allegations in connection with what is going on there are even but partially tions in connection with what is going on there are even but partially true it is a disgrace to humanity and to the Government of the United States. I am entirely willing that an appropriation of the same amount as last year shall be continued, but I do want the Department to find out in some way whether these inhuman things that are alleged to have taken place there have actually taken place. If they have, it will require a strong arm to break them up, and they can only be broken up after finding out the exact truth. If the statements are not true, it is due to the people there to have the facts known.

Mr. REED. Do they not need an appropriation for education whether those statements are true or not?

those statements are true or not?

Mr. RANDALL. I have just said that the appropriation ought to be about the same as last year, $40,000.

Mr. REED. Is it in the bill as presented by the committee?

Mr. RANDALL. It was not put in the bill, for the reason that the inquiry was there provided for, and we believed that if the inquiry was to take place the appropriation should be based upon the results of that inquiry.

Mr. REED. That it should be suspended until we could ascertain the facts?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; until we could know whether the Congress of the United States wanted to make an inquiry. If they did not, then the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCoMAS] was authorized by the committee to offer the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference whether the charges that have been rehearsed here by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McComas] are true or not true, the fact is that our whole country is enveloped in ignorance about Alaska. Very few of our public men know anything about it, and I can not refrain from saving, notwithstanding the fact that the provision in the bill which looked to a visit to that Territory by a committee of Congress has been ruled out, that it was a wise proposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. I believe there ought to be an investigation; and an appropriation of five or ten or even twenty thousand dollars does not amount to a row of pins when compared to the importance to the whole country of understanding the real facts. Alaska is a dependency of ours, and it deserves humane, considerate treatment, encouragement, and development, and I think that in some way there ought to be a commission devised, a commission of public men engaged in legislation, for the purpose of investigating the condition of affairs in that Territory. I am again compelled to again express my regret that we can not have a committee of Congress to go there and look into matters in detail, look into all these charges that have been made, and ascertain the facts, because, if those charges are true, the condition of things in Alaska is a disgrace to our country.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to offer, in order, the provision of the bill which has just been stricken out relating to Alaska, the provision which is found on page 53.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Springer). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dockery] asks unanimous consent to offer as now in order the proposition which was stricken from the bill on the point of order. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out the last word.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not understand whether the Chair ruled out the entire amendment offered by

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did.

Mr. CANNON withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. JACKSON obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to fix a limit upon this debate-say

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has possibly overlooked one fact, that one of the committees of this House has sat for months, and, without visiting Alaska, has taken hundreds of pages of testimony on this subject, which is now in print.

Mr. RYAN. This committee has sat in Washington

Mr. FARQUHAR. In Washington.
Mr. RYAN. And has obtained valuable information, I doubt not!
Mr. FARQUHAR. The best information that could possibly be obtained without going away from home.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a proposition for the limitation of debate

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I heartily favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland making an increased appropriation for the aid of schools in Alaska. At the last session I took occasion to express my views in this direction; and much as we all admit we need more information, I still wish to say that I think it very likely this Congress knows more now than it is willing to put in practice in regard to the needs of Alaska. Within an hour, gentlemen, you have voted down a proposition to send a committee of Congress to obtain information, and now you excuse yourselves from acting on the ground of want of knowledge. Somehow or other when anything good is proposed here, it happens too often that gentlemen want to lay it over until they can learn to do some still greater good.

Why, sir, we seem to act here as if we regarded Alaska as a far-off, barren, icy region, inhabited only by a few Indian tribes not quite so intelligent as our blanket Indians, when in fact there are eight or ten thousand civilized people there who for generations have had Christian thousand civilized people there who for generations have had Christian churches, and have tried to have schools of their own. We have had over twenty years' possession of this vast Territory, and if we do not know something definite of its needs and condition it is our own fault. When we acquired this Territory the laws of Russia ceased to be operative. We expect to make it a part of the United States forever, and we ought to give it our laws and institutions.

To-day there is not in any part of that great Territory any law under which its inhabitants, citizens of the United States, can appoint and pay a police officer of any kind, elect a constable or justice of peace, or levy or collect a single dollar of tax to carry on their schools. It is fearful to think of a community of human beings anywhere without fearful to think of a community of human beings anywhere without law officers or government of any kind to preserve the peace, but it is a shame and disgrace to our nation that this state of affairs exists in a a shame and disgrace to our nation that this state of affairs exists in a part of the land over which floats the flag of our own country.

Mr. Chairman, we are greatly in fault in neglecting these people. There is no law there to day under which title to a single acre of that vast domain of land can be obtained. We tax their fisheries to bring millions into our Treasury, but they have no representative in this body which governs them, or rather I should say the body that should think that proper and necessary, but they are so deficient in all local government that I consider some other things now of more importance. All our other Territories have had Legislatures that provided for them

Alaska has no legislative body at all; no means of providing the simplest regulation of government. They have a very considerable immigration of miners, prospectors, lumbermen, and permanent settlers, yet they have no means of creating a single corporation in their midst for the purpose of carrying on the simplest business, and particularly no means to preserve the peace, punish crime, or protect life or property. Ten thousand civilized citizens of the United States in that Territory who owe allegiance to its Government have the natural rights of citizens to be properly governed and protected, and are to-day with-out any law whatever. We have owned the Territory for more than twenty years; we bound ourselves by solemn treaty when we acquired it to give it a good government, and here, almost at the close of Congress, no proposition has been made for any kind of legislation which they need. And yet gentlemen tell us to wait until we know more about it. We know enough about it now, Mr. Chairman, to know that something should be done. We know now more about it than we provide for by legislation in this Congress.

The appropriation asked for the purpose of education in Alaska is needed, and I hope it will be made. We know there are schools there now under the control of the Interior Department of this Government that need this money. I give the Government credit for what it has done in this direction, although it is but a small part of what it should have done. But do not forget that others are entitled to credit for these schools. The teacher and missionary have gone there from Christian homes in the interest of humanity, charity, and civilization of our race. They need this money. It goes to build school-houses in which they may carry on their good works. I hope, therefore, that this proposition will receive an affirmative vote. It is the very least we can do. We ought to do far more than this for a people who have no means of legislating for themselves.

This Congress before it finally adjourns, by some appropriate system of laws, ought to assist the people of Alaska by giving them an opportunity to acquire and protect property, both real and personal, and some reasonable means to preserve the peace. It should be furnished with some kind of a legislature to attend to their local affairs. The home rule and home government we talk so much about should be given these far-off citizens of ours. They have now, as I have already said, no means whatever of local government. They have nothing, in fact, except the meager provisions which were contained in the act organizing this Territory. Those are merely nominal, as we all know.

Congress by constitutional provisions governs all the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia. But Congress has never tried to govern any other Territory without giving it a local legislature for its local affairs. How much neglected the District of Columbia is by Congress, although here in view of every member, we all know. How much worse Alaska must suffer we can well under-

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, it became my duty as chairman of the Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, it became my duty as chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to report a resolution asking authority to investigate the fur-seal resources of Alaska, which come under the jurisdiction of that committee. That committee has diligently prosecuted that investigation from April up to this time, and will be able to report this week. If gentlemen will read the report they will gain some information.

After I introduced the resolution I was notified by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] he would object to any visit to Alaska, but would consent to investigation if it were made here.

felt apprehensive then as to whether the committee could do itself justice and do justice to the public service. I am gratified to be able to say to the House now that the committee is quite satisfied with the investigation it was able to make. It has got information of a reliable character which the committee believes is thorough and complete, and will place the House and the country in possession of the real bottom facts of the subject under consideration.

If gentlemen who are ignorant altogether of Alaska will read the debates when it was ceded to this country, will read the monograph in the Tenth Census on the resources of Alaska, will read the explorations made by Schwatka and Allen and other naval and marine officers, the examination made by Jackson of education in Alaska and the reports made by the governor of Alaska, which are able, full, and complete, they will know more about Alaska than they do now, and will know more than they would after going there and coming back without getting those books.

I have no doubt whatever that an able and well-selected committee from the two Houses of Congress could on going there obtain valuable information; but I want to say to you that that committee would never get beyond the Aleutian Islands. It is perfectly practicable to go there and investigate the condition of Southeast Alaska, a little strip of country extending from the peninsula down to the British possessions, less than 100 miles in length and 30 in width, which contains just about all there is of the civilized population there is in Alaska at the present time, except the few people trading and doing business with the natives at other points. No committee of this House will ever push a voyage into Behring Sea nor on the mainland, and which constitutes that great empire in area of which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McComas] so eloquently spoke.

If you will read the observations and experience of the officers who have been there under military orders you will never want to go over the same ground and investigate the same country, and if you ever do get there it is doubtful whether you will get back alive. [Laughter.] And I want to say to this committee that that part of Alaska does not and never will have any use for the general land laws of the United States, for the land is covered with one eternal sheet of snow and ice.

I read an extract from a diary kept by a priest of the Greek Church at one of the stations on this inhospitable shore, which exhibits the fact that there were but fifty-five fair days within a period of seven years. It is a most inhospitable climate. It is a cold country, bleak, bare, desolate, and will be a hard country to explore and investigate.

Southeast Alaska, of which I have spoken, the little narrow running southward on the extreme western shore from Mount St. Elias to the British possessions, can be investigated to your heart's content. But you will see little and find little beyond what has been written about it before.

The conditions in that country, to which allusion has been made by the gentleman from Maryland, I have satisfied myself are not so bad as has been represented in newspapers and in recent publications. There is not a worse set of public morals existing among the natives in that far-off Territory than among other Indian tribes; nor, indeed, is it so bad. Moral conditions that would compare unfavorably with those existing in that Territory can be found much nearer home; and I can assure gentlemen of the truth of that statement, unless everybody who has been there and who has written about it lied as to the facts. I investigated the matter-the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries carefully investigated it-with regard to so much of the recent publications as referred to the localities and the subjects under investigation by that committee, and we found no confirmation of the statement at all; none whatever.

I have no doubt that legislation might be had, by a judicious observation which could be made there, which would be beneficial; but gentelemen can inform themselves quite as well about the exact condition of the state of the resources of the country, which are great and valuable and which Congress can not too early hasten to preserve and better protect, by the observations of others as well as from their own. It is well and proper to vote this allowance for education, for it can be advantageously applied there; but so far as any one imagining that a total and complete exploration of the whole of Alaska can be made, I wish to state that it is a delusion. It can not be done by Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will my colleague on the committee permit me to ask him to state what measures have been taken in reference to education upon the Seal Islands?

Mr. DUNN. The measures taken upon the Seal Islands and upon some of the other islands where trading stations are maintained have kept in operation schools, four or five I have in mind now, for a period of eight months in the year, in which the children are educated in both the English and their netive to greek a pertion of the time, the chief of eight months in the year, in which the children are educated in both the English and their native tongues; a portion of the time, the chief time, being devoted to educating them in the English tongue and some part of it to educating them in their native tongue, and which is insisted upon by the priests of the Greek Church, all of the natives of that country belonging to the Greek Church, and they are very devout in their religious observances and attentive to the requirements and demands of their teachers.

Mr. RYAN. Are the schools on the Seal Islands maintained by the Alaska Fur Company?

Mr. DUNN. They are maintained by the lessees of the islands. Alaska Commercial Company is the name of that association. schools cost the Government nothing, nor do they cost the Russian Empire anything. They cost nothing to anybody except to the lessees of the islands. The report which will be submitted by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will be found to contain four or five hundred pages of good, valuable, and reliable evidence, the evidence of about twenty witnesses, Government officers, naval officers, officials of the revenue marine, and civilians at the various trading stations, as well as of the officers and employés of the Commercial Company.

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I would like, if we can possibly do so, to limit debate on this question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. DINGLEY rose.
Mr. RANDALL. I supposed the vote was to be taken, or I would have moved to limit debate. I do not want to be discourteous, but I move to limit debate to six minutes, five of which I will give to the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to limit debate to six minutes? The Chair

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a single observation upon another branch of this subject, and which I did not make when amendment was made to this bill, in reference to the protection of the seal fisheries. I desire to call attention to the fact, not directly upon this paragraph, that unless seal life shall be protected in Behring a and the other Alaskan waters as provided by the amendment which I offered but a few days ago, the time is not far distant when the large revenue we are receiving from the seal fisheries upon the Seal Islands will be entirely lost.

I noticed in a dispatch from Ottawa only a few days ago that there are a hundred sail of vessels now being fitted out for sealing in Behring Sea in the approaching season from the British coast and also from our coast. Unfortunately in the last fishing season no protection was afforded in Behring Sea to the seal life which there exists. For some reason yet to be explained our revenue-cutter sent to the Behring Sea had not proven able to approach the vessels engaging in illegal use of that sea. Now, unless that fishery shall be protected and protected thoroughly in the seasons which are to come, there will be no seal-fishery problem to be settled in Alaskan waters. I desire merely to call attention at this time to the proposed amendment for the purpose of showing the House the importance of providing here or elsewhere every possible measure for the protection of seal life in Behring Sea. I want to call attention especially to the fact that at the present time these seal fisheries are threatened as they never have been before. As has been said by the chairman of the committee, who has been investigating this subject, we are receiving a very large revenue, amounting in the last twenty years to nearly $6,000,000 from these seal fisheries, and that protection is indispensable in Behring Sea and other Alaskan waters if this seal life is to be continued.

Mr. DUNN. The direct receipts paid into the Treasury by the Alaska Fur Company would reach nearly $6,000,000, and the indirect receipts which the Government receives from seal-skins reimported is between three and four millions. Thus far there have come through these seal fisheries during these twenty years receipts amounting to nearly $9,000,

Mr. McCOMAS. Is it not true that the rockeries or sealing grounds are not within the 3-mile limit, and unless they come under the 3mile limit they can not be protected?

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course that is true; but that is upon the open a. Now, under this cession that we have received from Russia, it has been held that Behring Sea is a closed sea

Mr. RANDALL. In the Alaska bill we allow $20,000 for the settling of the line.

Mr. DINGLEY. Appropriation has also been made in this bill for revenue-cutters for the protection of seals in Alaskan waters.
[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to use the minute remaining to him?

Mr. RANDALL. I want to save it and say nothing. [Laughter.] The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARMORIES AND ARSENALS.

For the Rock Island arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., as follows:
For completing store-house K, $30,000.
For machinery and shop-fixtures, $10,000.
For general care, preservation, and improvements; for building new roads; for care and preservation of the water-power; for painting and care and preservation et permanent buildings, bridges, and shores of the island; for building fences and sewers, and grading grounds, $10,000.

Mr. GEAR. I desire to offer an amendment by inserting after line 22 the following: "For necessary repairs of the arsenal railroad, $7,-000.11

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania having charge of the bill, if he will allow me, that that amendment of $7,000, and one for $1,086 that my colleague will offer, were not considered by the committee, but come in under a supplemental estimate. I have examined them, and I think if the gentleman examines them he will be satisfied that they are proper.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt the gentleman thinks so, and probably I would on examination, but I have never, nor have the committee, made any investigation of it; but I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GEAR. This road was built by the Government many years ago. It leads from the west end of the island, from the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad, which crosses the island at its western end, up into the center of the island. The arsenal itself was established in 1862, and I think this road has been built and in use ever since. It reaches from Rock Island up to the center of the island, a little over a mile and a half. The island is 3 miles long. Over this road all the stone and other material for the building of the arsenal have been conveyed. It is worn out. It is substantially useless. Works are still in process of construction on the island. At the last session provision was made for the reconstruction of the great dam, which was swept out by the freshets of the spring, and all the material for the repair of that dam must go over this road or else be transported by wagons from the city of Rockland or from Moline, near the island. This road must either be renewed, and it must be done now, or the work will have to be done at a large expense, which is just so much money sunk because of the heavy loads cutting the land roads.

As I have said, all the material for the rebuilding of that dam must be transported over this road. In the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury this item is recommended, and the commandant states in plain and emphatic terms that the road is substantially worn out. I live right at that place, and I have some personal knowledge on this subject, and I wish that some of the members of this Committee on Appropriations could find it possible at some time or other to visit the locality, because I do not think they would then be so niggardly in their appropriations. [Laughter.] It is a question of simple business whether this road shall be rebuilt or not; a matter of the saving of money by keeping the road in fit condition for the work which it has

Mr. RANDALL. I have not been able to hear the gentleman's remarks, but I have read the estimates.

Mr. GEST. I am unfortunate enough to sit over in this corner, and I never hear anything that takes place over where the gentleman is.

[Langhter.]
Mr. RANDALL. The estimate, as I read it, shows that there is a necessity for this appropriation, and as it receives the indorsement of the appropriation of the appropriate that the gentleman who offers the amendment and the representative of that district, I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For the Rock Island bridge as follows: For care, preservation, and expense of maintaining and operating the draw, $9,000.

Mr. GEST. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 25, page 54, strike out the words "nine thousand" and insert "fifteen thousand five hundred and fifty-six."

Mr. RANDALL. I can not consent to that. That is in excess of the estimate, which is only $12,000.

Mr. GEST. This item is "for the care, preservation, and expense of maintaining and operating a draw." At the last session they asked for this purpose $12,000, and the committee allowed $9,000. Again $12,000 is asked and the committee allow $9,000. This appropriation, as stated in the Book of Estimates, is for the preservation of bridges between Davenport, Iowa, Rock Island, Ill., and the island. There is a main bridge across the principal stream from the island to Davenport. Then there is a small bridge from the island of Rock Island to the city of Rock Island. There is a long causeway between the main bridge and the small bridge. There is a draw of the bridge for which mainly this appropriation is asked. Some time ago Congress passed a law which was called the eight-hour law. The Secretary of War applied the provisions of that eight-hour law to the men that were employed in operating that draw, to the guards and watchmen upon the causeway and upon the bridges, and to the engineers and the firemen and the others there employed.

That has brought about, or will bring about, a deficit in the appropriation, and in his minute with reference to that the Secretary of the Treasury asked a further sum of $2,556, which is included in the amendment which I have offered, making the aggregate $15,556.

Mr. LONG. Then there is an estimate covering this additional sum?

Mr. GEST. Yes, sir; in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury an estimate for an additional amount of $2,556. That is found in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury which went to the Committee on Appropriations last month, I suppose, asking for this amount to pay the men employed on the bridge as watchmen, firemen, guards, engineers, and the like on both bridges. Then there is an item of $1,086 neers, and the like on both bridges. Then there is an item of $1,086 for the cost of pointing up and preserving the ether piers in these two bridges, and the officer in charge says that that must be done or elso the piers will rot down. They have been there for a great many years. You have appropriated in your bill $32,000 for the purpose of rebuilding your draw-pier, but what is the use of your draw-pier if you let the other piers drop out? [Laughter.] Economy and good business management require that the money shall be appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. The original estimate as to the draw was $12,000, I believe.

I believe.

Mr. GEST.

Mr. GEST. Yes, sir.
Mr. RANDALL. And the committee gave what has been given for many years, $9,000. It then came to the knowledge of the committee that, owing to the passage of the eight-hour law and its application there, it was necessary to appropriate $2,250 additional. That, added to the $9,000, makes a total of $11,550, which is adequate for all purposes. The $2,250 additional is because of the eight hour law, and not because of any increase of force except that which may have resulted from persons who had previously worked twelve hours a day, having had their services reduced to eight hours. As to the piers, if I remember right, that is a distinct item or estimate of $1,080 and has no connection with the draw.

Mr. CANNON. On the basis upon which we have been appropriating, I think $2,250 will be sufficient, on account of the shortening of the working day to eight hours.

Mr. RANDALL. The item of $1,080 appears to be a different mat-

Mr. GEST. Mr. Chairman, by the Book of Estimates it is apparent that this item of appropriation is for the maintenance of the two bridges and the causeway between the bridges, and is not intended simply to cover the expense of the draw; but the draw is the chief item in it.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, if the gentleman will consent that $2,550 be added instead of the amount he has named, I have no objection.

Make it $12,000, according to the estimate.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no need of giving more than is asked.

Mr. GEST. That amount is needed.

Mr. RANDALL. No doubt if appropriated it will all be expended. Mr. GEST. Come out there and look at this work, and if you do not say that this appropriation is needed I will pay the expense of your trip out of my own pocket. Mr. RANDALL. I would like very much to go there, for I know that about $7,000,000 has been expended upon that great enterprise, and I would like to see what are the results of this great aggregate of appropriation.

Yes, there has been $7,000,000 expended there; and for Mr. GEST. this expenditure you have the greatest arsenal in the country, perhaps in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the amendment?

Mr. GEST. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope, then, it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to move on amendment making the amount $12,000?

Mr. GEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to amend the amendment so as to make it $11,550. That is exactly what has been asked.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL's amendment to the amendment, it was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. GEST] to a matter which I think he has overlooked. I believe he intended to move an amendment to insert:

For replacing the cement in the joints of the stones forming the piers of the Rock Island railroad and wagon bridge, $1,096.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that a part of the structure?

Mr. CANNON. It is not a part of the superstructure, but it is a part of the piers.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer to have that amendment offered to the subsequent paragraph, where provision is made for the adjustment of this controversy.

Mr. CANNON. I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania that under the provision of the law this amendment will be safe beyond any question, it being the duty of the officer under the law to charge onehalf the expense of the maintenance of this work to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman gives me the assurance that this sum of $1,080 is in the same relation as the matter embraced in the subsequent paragraph, where we propose to test the question whether the Government shall pay one-half of the expense and the railroad company one-balf-

Mr. CANNON. In my opinion it is in precisely the same relation. Mr. RANDALL. Why not withhold the amendment and offer it in connection with the other paragraph, which will be read in a few mo-

Mr. CANNON. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection. my colleague [Mr. GEST] is willing, the amendment might be withdrawn now and offered at a later point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be regarded as withdrawn for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to draw-pier of the Rock Island bridge, $36,522; and the Secretary of War shall require of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company the reimbursement of one-half of all the expenses incurred in the repairs of said draw-pier under this and the appropriation of $50,000 made for this object in the sundry civil appropriation act for 1839, as provided in their guaranty excepted to the United States under the acts of Congress providing for the construction of said bridge.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order on this provision that it embraces new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, let it go in. It is all right, I believe. Surely the gentleman would not place himself against the Government and for the railroad company on this issue.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to hear some explanation of the matter. I am willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a controversy between the Government and the railroad company as to the obligations of the original contract; and we do not wish anything in this bill to operate to the injury of the Government in that controversy. Mr. DUNHAM. Has there been any arrangement between the Government and the railroad company in regard to this matter?

Mr. RANDALL. The controversy involves the legal question, what is the "superstructure" of the bridge? The gentleman's colleague [Mr. CANNON] can probably explain the matter better than I can.

Mr. CANNON. In my opinion, while the Government is primarily chargeable with the maintenance of the superstructure of the Rock Island bridge, and I think also of the piers, the contract, as well as the act of Congress, requires that the railwoad company, after the Government has expended the money, shall refund one half of the amount; and the company has executed a guaranty to the Government to that

Now, there is somewhere a suggestion that as to the repairs upon the piers of the bridge the railroad company may not perhaps be bound to refund one-half of the expenditure. But there is no doubt about the company being bound to refund one-half of the cost of repairs to the superstructure resting upon the piers.

I think I have spent, first and last, at least twenty-four hours in reading the history of this matter, including the acts of Congress bearing upon the subject and the guaranty of the company, and I have no doubt in my own mind that under the guaranty, after the Government makes the repairs to either the superstructure or the piers, the railroad company is bound to pay at least one-half of such expense. But out of an abundance of caution, and more especially perhaps to satisfy the chairman of the committee, as well as other members of the committee, the language to which the gentleman calls attention has been framed.

Mr. DUNHAM. Under the explanation of my colleague I will withdraw the point of order. I simply wished to understand the matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "bridge," in line 3, insert "and for replacing the cement in the joints of the stones forming the piers of the Rock Island railroad and wagon bridge, $1,086."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Springfield arsenal, Springfield, Mass.: For repairs and preservation of grounds, buildings, and machinery not used for manufacturing purposes, $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I have an amendment to offer there.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 15, strike out "five" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sandy Hook proving ground, New Jersey: For cleaning, leveling, and grading grounds, building and repairing roads, $2,000.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to inquire what provision has been made at Sandy Hook for an additional range. Has the 10-mile range at that point been considered?

Mr. RANDALL. No, it has not come to the Committee on Appropriations, and if it had the rules of the House would not allow it to e put on this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend from Indiana is mistaken as to the range to which he refers. It is some distance from Sandy Hook. That has gone to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEELE. It is all right, then?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It has nothing to do with this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y.: For direct sewerage to river, $2,500.

Mr. TRACEY. I move after line 12, page 56, to insert as follows. The Clerk read as follows:

For paving Broadway with granite blocks to the extent of the arsenal frontage, $32,769.

Mr. TRACEY. This amount was estimated for at the last session of Mr. TRACEY. This amount was estimated for at the last session of Congress and perhaps at prior sessions. At the last session I appeared before the committee and urged them to insert it in the sundry civil bill. At that time the committee thought it was unnecessary. Water-vliet arsenal was not then designated as the gun factory of the United States. It becomes important, when vessels arrive in front of this arsenal, bearing these large forgings, they should be transported to the arsenal grounds.

This street is nothing more than a country road and is in a condition almost impassable in wet weather. The commandant of the arsenal has written me a letter in which he urges me to endeavor to have this inserted in the sundry civil bill. It was my expectation to appear before the Committee on Appropriations, but I did not succeed in getting time before the committee. It seems, in view of the great work carried on there, that there should be no objection to this being done.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I am quite free to admit that sooner or later there will have to be some strong pavement put there which will bear heavy loads. Part of this property was acquired by the Government in 1813 and another portion in 1828. Subsequently, I do not know in what year-the gentleman perhaps can tell meact of the Legislature of New York and by permission of Congress, a horse railroad was allowed to go through there. I think if a horse railroad is to go through there and receive the benefit of this Federal expenditure it ought to bear part of the expenses, as all such railroads going through streets of cities do-that is, half the expense provided for by this amendment. I move, therefore, to amend as follows.

The Clerk read as follows: .

Provided. That so much of said pavement as lies between the exterior rails of the track of the street railroad occupying said street for a distance of 2 feet from and exterior to such track on each side thereof shall be paid for by said street-railway company, together with the expense of keeping the same in repair.

Mr. TRACEY. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not prevail. This horse railway has tracks which pass through the arsenal grounds and in front of the arsenal. This private corporation, created some years ago, has been unable to make any money for several years past by reason of the Delaware and Hudson and New York Central Railroads running a belt line between Albany and Troy.

I would have no objection to the road paying its share of this bill if there was any possibility of their doing it. If the amendment is added I fear it will result in preventing us from securing this improvement. I therefore hope the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania will not press it.

Mr. RANDALL. I have had correspondence with Mr. GREENMAN, a member of the House, on this subject, and have had one or two conferences with the gentleman from the Albany district. The real objection to compelling the railroad company paying it is not that it is not right and proper that it should pay it, but it is that the railroad company is bankrupt. I should like the Government put in the attitude of being able to collect one half of the expense whenever it can collect it.

Mr. KILGORE. Are not both of these obnoxious to the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. They might have been if the point of order had been made in time, but it is now too late.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman from New York had better let this amendment come in.

Mr. KILGORE. I thought the point of order could be made at any time before a vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Not after the committee have received the amendment and discussed it.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the Chair decided that the amendment was adopted.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask for a division.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, if I may do so, I will accept the amendment to the amendment without further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, will be on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. TRACEY. I now offer the further amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to page 56, to come in after the amendment last adopted: "For general repairs to buildings and approaches, including the walls, fences, roads, grounds, etc., $5,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Telegraph to connect the Capitol with the Departments and Government Printing Office: For care and repair of existing lines, $1,250.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is that there is no telegraph line connecting the Capitol and the Agricultural Department?

Mr. RANDALL. For the reason that there is no law, I presume, authorizing it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is there any objection to an amendment here authorizing the construction of one?

Mr. RANDALL. The District Committee are now examining as to a general system of telegraphs and electric lights in this city, so as to determine the question of under-ground or surface wires; and I think the construction of additional telegraph lines had better be left until after that is determined by the District commissioners.

Mr. DUNHAM. All right. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington Monument: For the care and maintenance of the Washington Monument and the operation of the elevator and machinery connected therewith, namely: For one custodian, at $100 per month; one steam engineer, at $50 per month; one assistant steam engineer, at $60 per month; one conductor of elevator car, at $75 per month: one assistant fireman, at $45 per month; one conductor of elevator car, at $75 per month; one attendant on floor, at $45 per month; one attendant at top, at $45 per month; three night and day watchmen, at $60 each per month; in all, $8,160.

For fuel, lights, oil, waste, packing, tools, matches, paints, brushes, brooms, lanterns, rope, nails, screws, lead, electric lights, heating apparatus, oil stoves for elevator car and upper and lower floor, repairs to engines, boilers, dynamos, elevator, and repairs of all kinds connected with the monument and machinery, and purchase of all necessary articles for maintaining the monument, machinery, elevator, and electric-light plant in good order, $2,340, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LEE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 6, after line 6:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to detail one or more engineer officers of the Army to make the necessary survey for a national road from a point in Alexandria County, Virginia, at or near the Virginia end of the Aqueduct Bridge, and thence through the counties of Alexandria and Fairfax, in said State, to Mount Vernon, who shall report the same, together with the estimated cost of building such road, to the Secretary of War, who shall transmit the same to Congress.

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $10,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the War Department be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of the United States in carrying out the provisions of this

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order against that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. KILGORE. That it is new legislation, and provides for an expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question. Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

BUILDING FOR THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

For the building for the Library of Congress, as authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act approved October 2, 1888, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $500,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into for all the stone required for the exterior walls of said building, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

Mr. REED. I suppose that is open to the point of order?
Mr. RANDALL. I suppose so. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. REED. I shall reserve it for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. Then, in accordance with the wishes of many members, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Rogers having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Dockery reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution

And then, on motion of Mr. RANDALL (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

Richardson and 19 others (10 voters and 10 women), citizens of Ramsey, Minn., and petitions of citizens of Minneapolis, Sherburne, Crookston, Sauk Center, Freeborn, Lynn Moss, Cannon Falls, Dover, Le Seur, and Stanton, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 665 citizens of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of Elijah Farill and 56 others (22 voters and 35 women), citizens of Lake Mills, Wis., and the petition of Wilhelm Fritz and 116 others (60 voters and 57 women), citizens of Cass and Ransom Counties, Dakota, praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of 188 citizens of Maine, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State of Pennsylvania, representing 20,000 members, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for the passage of what is known as the naval-reserve bill; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Delaware, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a resolution adopted by 12 citizens of Iowa, indorsed by the Cedar Township Temperance Union of 70 members, in favor of the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petition of of Randy Jenckins and 513 other citizens, residents of the county of Orangeburgh, South Carolina, and the voting precinct of Orangeburgh, stating that they were deprived of their right to vote for Presidential electors and member of Congress on the 6th day of November, 1888, at that election precinct. They state that they made every reasonable effort to become qualified to vote according to the registration laws of the State, but have been denied an equal chance and the same opportunity to register as are accorded to others of their fellow-citizens. Wherefore the petitioners pray Congress to investigate the facts and the practical workings of the registration and election laws of the State of South Carolina and devise some means to secure to them the free exercise of the right guarantied to them by the constitution of the State of South Carolina and the laws and Constitution of the United States. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented a resolution adopted by the Military Historical Society of Massachusetts, relative to the publication of naval records of the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the petition of farmers in the township of Ashland, Middlesex County, Massachusetts, praying for more effective protection to the agricultural interests of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of William Leonard and 92 others, voters of Salem, Mass., praying for a submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of C. H. Strong and 167 others (84 voters and 84 women), citizens of Garnett, Kans.; and the petition of Ira Weaver and 132 others (82 voters and 51 women), citizens of Downs, Kans., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PAYNE presented petitions of citizens of Marietta, Lower Salem, Waverly, and Hicksville, in the State of Ohio, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of citizens of Luce, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of House bill 4982, in relation to pension fees; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3634) granting a pension to Mrs. Fancy Smith, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6018) for the relief of George Campbell, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3785) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CANNON FOR SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6105) donating two 6-pound brass cannons to the Illinois Soldiers and Sailors' Home, has instructed me to report it back recommending its passage with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, providing for furnishing obsolete serviceable cannon to soldiers' homes, both national and State. I ask that present action may be had upon the bill. It will only take a moment, and it is important that it should get through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill reported by him may be now considered. It will be read at length for information.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will only take a moment.

Mr. HALE. If it leads to no debate, I shall not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will not lead to debate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to deliver to any of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers already established or hereafter established, and to any of the State homes for soldiers and sailors either now or hereafter duly established and maintained under State authority, such obsoite service-able cannon, bronze or iron, suitable for firing salutes, as may be on hand undisposed of, not exceeding two to any one home.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the furnishing of obsolete serviceable cannon to soldiers' homes."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. Cockrell were appointed.

RAILWAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3830) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 18, 1888, to report it favorably without amendment. The bill proposes to amend an existing law, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate to have it put on its passage at this

Mr. HALE. I desire to go on with the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which consumed all of yesterday, and I must object to the consideration of any other bill that will take any time.

This bill is not more than a page in Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. length, and I presume it will not provoke any discussion. If it does I shall withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 18, 1888, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point on Red River (the southern boundary line), at the bluff known as Rocky Cliff, in the Indian Territory, and running thence by the most feasible and practicable route through the said Indian Territory to a point on the east boundary line, immediately continuous to the west boundary line of the State of Arkansas; also, a branch line of railway to be constructed from the most suitable point on said main line for obtaining a feasible and practicable route in a westerly or northwesterly direction to the leased coal veins of said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, in Tobucksey County, Choctaw Nation, and thence by the most feasible and practicable route to an intersection with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway at the most convenient point between Halifax Station and Ear Creek, otherwise known as the north fork of the Canadian River; with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, branches, and sidings and extensions as said company may deem it in their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole,

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3883) granting a pension to Louisa Rickard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3884) to establish an additional land district in the Territory of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3885) to increase pensions in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 133) directing a survey of the St. John's River at Jacksonville, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISA ROGERS.

Mr. TURPIE. I move that the bill (H. R. 8549) granting a pension to Louisa Rogers be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions for the purpose of correcting a mistake in the company and regiment of the soldier named therein.

The motion was agreed to.

HALL'S OREGON VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an investigation to be made into the organization and service of what has been commonly known in Oregon as "Capt. Lawrence Hall's Company of Oregon Volunteers," which, it is alleged, was organized in the early part of the year 1848 for service, and which served in the Indian war in Oregon known as the "Cayuse war;" and to report to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, all the fects relating to such alleged organization, whether of record or otherwise, together with the names of the officers and privates constituting such company.

NAVY-YARD LABOR EXPENDITURES.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the expenditures for labor in navy-yards for each of the first six months of the present fiscal year from the appropriation for the construction and repair of vessels and from the appropriation for steam-machinery, together with a statement of the unexpended balances of each of the above appropriations on the 1st day of January, 1889.

CRUISER BALTIMORE.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was Resolved. That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the nature and extent of the recent accident to the stern of the cruiser Baltimore, describing the damaged parts and any method that has been adopted for repairing the same, together with an account of the cause of the accident.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHAND-LER] coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER January 25, 1889, was read, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay or allowances due such officers, known as the longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any legislation and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire that the resolution go over another day, in order that I may examine the communication sent in yesterday from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the receiving-ship

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over, if there be no objection, retaining its place as morning business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 332) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner;

A bill (S. 2765) granting a pension to Adeline A. Smyth;

A bill (H. R. 538) granting a pension to James Miller; and

A bill (H. R. 11683) for the establishment of light-ships with fogsignals at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor, and off Great Round Shoal, seacoast of Massachusetts, near Nantucket.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT JURORS.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if he will allow me to obtain the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider at this time a bill very important to the people of the District of Columbia, changing the jury law of the District. If it leads to debate or to any consumption of time beyond the necessity of reading it and read-ing a report of one-third of a page in length, I shall not ask further in-dulgence; but it is important that the bill should go to the other House as early as possible.

Mr. HALE. I will give way for a very short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that Senate bill 3640, Order of Business 2584, be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3640) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 858, 861, and 862 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe I shall ask the Senate to allow the report to be read in advance of the bill, because it is explanatory, so that the Senate may understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report will be first read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAR-RIS January 25, 1889:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3640) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 858, 861, and 862 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, have favorably constitutes ame, and report it with an ameadment in the nature of a substitute. The committee adopts the following report made in the House of Representatives on a bill of like character:

[House Report No. 3794, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12292) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the jury law in the District of Columbia, submit the following report:

According to existing law, jurors in the District of Columbia serve for a term of three months. This local provision is unusual and oppressive and results in the excusing of the better class of men from jury service. The bill in question is designed to remedy this evil. It was referred by this committee to the commissioners of the District, who in turn referred it to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The chief-justice of this court says:

"Inclosed find a copy of the bill relating to the jury system of the District. We invited the attention of the Bar Association to the matter, and its committee, after examination, has prepared a substitute, of which I inclose a copy. The judges of this court, or all who are able to do so, have examined the substitute and, I am instructed to say, indorse it, and recommend its adoption and enactment into a law."

This substitute reduces the term of service to one month and is recommended, as has been seen, by the bench, the bar, and the District commissioners. The committee offer this substitute in lieu of the bill, with the recommendation that it pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia be read without reading the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

The Chief Clerk. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That sections 788 and 759 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 2. That section 755 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows: The supreme court in general term shall have power by rule of court to regulate the period of holding its terms, as also the periods of all the special terms, and to fix the number of such terms, and to alter the same from time to time as public convenience may require.

Sec. 3. That section 872 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: No person shall be competent to act as a juror unless he be a citizen of the United States, a resident of the District of Columbia, a tax-payer, overtwenty-one and under sixty-five years of age, and a good and lawful man, who has never been convicted of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude. And the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the officers or persons who are authorized to make the list of jurors for service in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, within twenty days after this act shall take effect, and thereafter at least once a year, a list containing the names of the male tax-payers of said District.

Sec. 4. That sections 855, 856, and 858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, amended so as to read as follows: The term of service of jurors drawn for service in the supreme court of the District of Columbia holding a special term as a circuit court, or to serve as petit jurors in the special term as a criminal court, shall be had and (subject to the provisions of section 807) shall terminate on the Monday preceding the first Tuesday in each and every month in which ju by law, to notify each person drawn by serving on him a notice in writing of his selection as a juror, of the court he is to attend, and of the day and hour he is to appear.

SEC.6. That any person who shall have been regularly drawn as a juror, and shall thereupon have served as a juror for the period of twenty days or more, shall be exempt from further service as a juror in the District of Columbia for the period of one year from the beginning of his said term of service, but nothing herein contained shall render such juror ineligible to serve as a juror during said year: Provided, however, That no person shall be competent to serve as a juror for two consecutive terms.

SEC. 7. That section 851 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out therein the words "until otherwise provided by the legislative assembly."

SEC. 8. That section 852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: If any persons selected as jurors can not be found, or shall prove to be incompetent, or shall be excused from service by the court, the clerk, under direction of the court, shall draw from the box the names of other persons to take their places. And if after the organization of the jury any vacancies occur therein, they shall be filled in like manner.

SEC. 9. That section 863 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows: If at any time during the impaneling of a jury in any other than a capital case the regular panel, by reason of challenge or otherwise, shall be exhausted before the jury is complete, the court may in its discretion direct the clerk to draw from the box the names of other persons to serve as jurors and cause them to be summoned, or order the marshal to summon as many talesmen as may be necessary to complete the jury.

SEC. 10. That this act sha

Mr. HOAR. It occurred to me on glancing at the bill, and the impression is confirmed by hearing it read, that it is defective in one particular. The fourth section provides that the term of service of jurors drawn, etc., shall terminate on the Monday preceding the first Tuesday of the following month, intending to limit the obligation to jury service to a month or thereabouts. It makes no provision for the case where a jury have been impaneled and a cause has been committed to them which is undisposed of, and they would cease to be lawful jurymen according to the strict letter of this proposed law, although they might be in the middle of a trial.

It happens sometimes that a single cause lasts several months, like the Tichborne case in England and like the Guiteau trial here. I have forgotten how long the trial of Guiteau lasted, but a good many weeks at any rate.

I dare say if the bill become a law as it was reported, the court would, by construction, hold lawful the action of a jury who should complete their dealing with a particular cause committed to them after the month had expired; but it would certainly give rise to a very grave question, and a question upon which the validity of a very important verdict might depend.

I therefore suggest to the Senator who has charge of the bill to accept the proviso at the end of the fourth section which I have drawn.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think the bill as reported from the commit-MR. HARRIS. I do not think the bill as reported from the committee could be susceptible of the construction suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, but if there is even a doubt about it, I shall be glad to hear the proviso that the Senator has prepared, because the question ought to be put beyond the possibility of doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed proviso will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 4 the following

Provided, That when any jury shall have been actually impaneled for the trial of any cause the jurymen composing the same shall be liable to continue in service until they have been lawfully discharged from said cause.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. My recollection is that in the parenthesis in the fourth section there is a provision making this change subject to the provision of section 807 of the District Revised Statutes, which covers that subject. I think that is taken care of.

Mr. HOAR. I did not find it.

Mr. HOAR. I did not find it.
Mr. HARRIS. The proviso could not be hurtful in any point of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the laws relating to the selection and service of jurors in the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. There is another serious question connected with the bill which ought to be dealt with by the Senate with some reflection, and that is whether it be a sound public policy to provide that nobody and that is whether it be a sound public policy to provide that nobody but tax-payers shall be summoned as jurors even where there are other persons not possessed of property who are competent in the way of intelligence and patriotism. The effect of that provision would be to put the jury trials in the District of Columbia very largely in the hands of the citizens of one way of thinking. I should like to test the sense of the Senate by moving to strike out that provision of the

Mr. HALE. The bill is evidently going to give rise to debate.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is going to give rise to debate I can not further ask the indulgence of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had announced the passage of the bill, and an amendment of the title was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Then I should like to move to reconsider. I think the Senate will reconsider it. I did not understand that the Chair had made the formal announcement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not object to a reconsideration; I do not want to take any possible advantage of the Senator from Massachusetts; but if we are to consume any time in discussing the matter I can not ask the further indulgence of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HOAR. It may be that on reflection I shall conclude that I do not desire to press the objection, but I should like to have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. HALE. Let the matter stand over until to-morrow on the mo-

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. In the mean time I should like to commend to the consideration of the Senator from Massachusetts section 807 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, which I think he will find takes care of the point, to cover which he offered his amendment to section 4.

Mr. HOAR. Unless that is repealed.
Mr. SPOONER. It is not repealed. Section 4 is expressly declared to be subject to the provisions of section 807 of the Revised Statutes.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Gibson, in line 10, after the word "of," to insert "ambassadors and;" and in line 11, to strike out "envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary," and insert "ambassadors;" so as to * Salaries of ambassadors and ministers: Ambassadors to France, Germany, Great Britain, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine having charge of this bill if he knows what are the ordinary salaries and allowances made by Great Britain, France, Germany, and nations of that grade to their ambassadors, and if he proposes to offer a further amendment, in case this amendment should be adopted, increasing the compensation of the ambassadors of the United States so as to give them a corresponding capacity to perform their functions?

Mr. HALE. I can answer the Senator from Nevada very plainly. This is not my amendment, nor the committee's amendment, although I favor it personally. I do not propose to follow it up, if adopted, by any amendment increasing the pay of ministers. I do not think that that follows, as a matter of course, the raising of the rank.

To the question of the Senator in relation to allowances made by foreign nations to their ministers, I answer that that matter does not depend upon the grade of ambassador. Great Britain, Russia, and Germany, indeed all the great powers send nothing but an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States, the same rank that our ministers bear accredited to those countries, but they make large allowances to those ministers that we do not make to ours. Each furnishes its minister with a house here to begin with, and some of the best houses in Washington are thus occupied; and they have other allowances in the nature of general funds here and elsewhere, which the United States have never made and perhaps never will make. So the question of pay does not connect itself necessarily with this amendment. The same men who perform the duties of minister pleni-potentiary now would find their duties and their representation of our interests very much accelerated and advanced, as I believe, by conferring the title of ambassador upon them, and there would be no necesring the title of ambassador upon them, and there would be no necessary connection between that and increased expenditures.

There is chance enough, as everybody knows, in foreign capitals to spend a great deal of money. It a man who is minister resident, chargé d'affaires, or minister plenipotentiary has a fortune, he can spend as much money as he pleases. If he does not he can get along comfortably on what the Government gives him; and it will be the same if he is ambassador.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Maine that the title of the representatives of this Government at the four courts designated in this clause of the bill has no relation to the question of compensation has not been the view taken by some of the gentlemen who have as Secretary of State considered the subject. I find in Wharton's International Law Digest a statement from Mr. Frelinghuysen bearing upon the subject, as follows:

The Department can not, under present circumstances, "in justice to its ministers abroad, ask Congress to give them higher rank with their present salaries; neither could it with propriety appeal to Congress for an allowance commensurate with the necessary mode of life of an ambassador."

Further, upon the same subject, Mr. Bayard says:

The question of sending and receiving ambassadors, under the existing authorization of the Constitution and the statutes, has on several occasions had more or less formal consideration, but I can not find that at any time the benefits attending a higher grade of ceremonial treatment have been deemed to outweigh the inconveniences which, in our simple social democracy, might attend the reception in this country of an extraordinarily foreign privileged class.

I was disposed yesterday to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, but on reflection I have some doubt about its propriety, though not for the reason suggested by the Senator from Kansas, that it is not in harmony with the simplicity of our democratic form of government. I think this is the greatest Government on the earth, and I believe that next to patriotism there is no more pronounced earth, and I believe that next to patriotism there is no more pronounced characteristic of this people than national pride. I believe the American people are entirely willing and anxious that their representatives abroad should be clothed with appropriate official dignity, and I think they are willing, too, that the appropriation made from the Treasury for their support should be adequate to enable them to support and maintain that dignity. The present appropriation seems to me to be inadequate even for the present grade of our ministers. I, when in England a year ago, examined the matter somewhat, and I looked at the houses afforded there by other governments for their diplomatic representatives, and they were far superior in every respect to that which sentatives, and they were far superior in every respect to that which was occupied by the representative of the United States. The comparison was not calculated to inflame the American citizen with much pride, and was not to our advantage.

I should be quite willing myself to vote to make our representatives at each of the courts named, of the highest grade known to the law of nations—an ambassador; but I think coupled with that there should be such an increase in the appropriation as will enable them to maintain within fair and reasonable limits the line of expenditure befitting that grade in the public service. To make our minister an ambassador and leave him with the pay of the subordinate grade, it seems to me would only intensify his humiliation on many occasions. It would charge him with a different scale of social expenditure, reference being had somewhat to the custom prevailing among others of the same grade, without at the same time affording him the means of meeting that ex-

It appears to me if we adopt this amendment, putting an American minister in the highest grade, without making an increase in the appropriation for his support, that the inevitable inference abroad will be one of two: either that we do not understand the grade of expenditure in official and social life that would thereby be made necessary, or that understanding it this nation, which is the richest in the world, is not willing to make the necessary appropriation. As the matter stands even now, and it will be intensified by this amendment, I think no man can afford to accept the position of ambassador to either of these great courts unless he is possessed of a private fortune sufficient, in addition to the salary, to enable him to maintain himself decently, as sed of a private fortune sufficient, in other officials of that grade do; and the result of that will be (and it is too much so now) that the foreign service in the higher grades will be closed except to men of great wealth, so that no matter how able a man may be, how completely he may possess the genius of diplomacy, how exalted may be his patriotism, how fit he may be in every respect to represent this Government creditably abroad, he will be practically ineligible unless he is a rich man. I have myself been unable to come to the conclusion announced by the Senator from Maine, that the question of pay is a matter of no consequence in this connection.

Mr. HALE. I did not say that it was not a matter of consequence.

Mr. SPOONER. Not a matter of especial consequence.

Mr. HALE. I said that it was not by any means inseparably connected with this amendment in my judgment. I do not think the conferring of this other designation upon these ministers would necessarily result in an unanswerable demand for more salary. Whether they have salaries enough now or not is a question on which I might not disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin, but I do not think this designation will necessarily add anything to their expenses.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps it will not, but it ought to. At any rate it seems to have been the opinion of Mr. Frelinghuysen and others that the grade of ambassador calls for a somewhat different expenditure than that of minister resident, and the reluctance which the Secretary aunounced to urging upon Congress the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana was that it would necessitate an increase in the expenditures, which he did not feel at liberty to press upon Congress. I am very willing myself, as I have said, to vote for an additional appropriation and to put these ministers in the highest grade, because there is a clear distinction between them in point of dignity. Ido not know that practically there is so great a difference; but I am not willing to vote to designate the minister an ambassador and yet leave his salary and the appropriation for his support as it is to-day, inadequate, in my opinion, for the support of a minister even of the present grade.

Bearing upon one phase of the discussion of yesterday, if the Senate will permit me, I will read a few words more from this work:

In 1871, when Mr. George Bancroft was minister of the United States at Berlin, the question of his yielding the pasat the foreign office in every-day intercourse to representatives of higher grade or longer residence came up for consideration—

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that we did not hear his reading over here, and I should be glad if he would enable us to hear the authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appeals to Senators to be in order

Mr. SPOONER. I was reading an extract from Wharton's Digest for the purpose of affording the Senate some information of an authentic kind upon the practical question whether an ambassador to these four courts is entitled to greater precedence in obtaining an audience than a minister of the present grade.

In 1871, when Mr. George Bancroft was minister of the United States at Berlin, the question of his yielding the pas at the foreign office in every-day intercourse to representatives of higher grade or longer residence came up for consideration. I inclose transcript of a dispatch from Mr. Bancroft, reporting the rule then adopted by Prince von Bismarck. (Mr. Bayard, Secretary of S. ate, to Mr. Phelps., July 2, 1885. MSS, Inst., Gr. Brit.)

The rule adopted by Prince von Bismarck, as reported in Mr. Bancroft's dispatch of January 20, 1872. Is as follows:

"The chief of a mission who arrives first (at the foreign office) is first admitted, be his rank that of ambassador, minister, or charge."

That is the rule in Germany, in Russia, and, I think, it is the rule to-day in England.

I will also, although not bearing upon the specific question which I rose to debate only for a moment, which was the propriety of changing this grade without any change in the appropriation for the support of the representative, read this extract from Schuyler's American Diplo-

Macy:

At very many foreign offices the rule "first come first served" is not observed; but an envoy or a minister, though he may have been waiting hours in the ante-room for an important affair, must give place to an ambassador who has come in at the moment: and at Constantinople it is even expected that, should a minister be in conversation with the minister of foreign affairs or the grand vizier, he should withdraw and wait whenever an ambassador may be announced. In some countries a different rule is observed. In Russia it has been for many years the custom for the minister to receive the foreign representatives in the order in which they arrive at his office, without regard to their rank. This rule was brought into force at Berlin, owing to a personal dispute between Mr. Bancroft, our minister, and the British ambassador. Mr. Bancroft, after having waited a long time for an audience, was on one occasion obliged to yield to the British ambassador, who had that moment arrived. As the ambassador was personally disagreeable to the chancellor, and Mr. Bancroft was a friend of his, a representation of the injustice done to the United States and its represent-ative brought about a change of rule.

I find here also an answer to the question put yesterday by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George], which was differently answered by two Senators on this side of the Chamber, which I will read from the articles adopted at Vienna and at Aix-la-Chapelle.

Mr. DAWES. What is the book?
Mr. SPOONER. I am reading from an excellent work, Wharton's International Law Digest, and these rules, the Secretary of State declares, have been observed by this Government, although this Government was not a party to the convention named:

ART. IV. Diplomatic agents shall take precedence in their respective classes according to the date of the official notification of their arrival.

That is without any regard to the personal rank of the official.

Mr. HALE. That is seniority. Mr. SPOONER. That is seniority. That is if there are four am-bassadors, one a prince, one a duke, another of a different grade of nobility and another a commoner, the order of precedence is not determined by the matter of individual rank, but by the date of official notification of their arrival. Article VI also relates to the subject:

ART, VI. Relations of consanguinity or of family alliance between courts confer no precedence on their diplomatic agents.

But the point to which I rose to speak, as to which I do not desire to take longer time, is this: It seems to me no remedy of any existing evil, if there be one, to adopt an amendment putting the representa-tive of this Government into the highest grade known to diplomacy, that of an ambassador, and at the same time to limit the appropriation as it is limited in the present bill. I shall vote against the amendment in view of the information just given to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] by the Senator from Maine, that there is to be no change in the appropriation.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, this question which seemed at one time yesterday to so convulse the Senate, is not a new one, although it appears upon its face simple, whether we shall settle by an enactment

That which we call a rose, By any other name would smell as sweet.

It is an old question. My memory is not very good, but I do not recollect now a consular and diplomatic bill in the other body while I was a member of it or in this that has not raised this very question whether we shall call a man with a distinct official duty by one name or another. I confess that I never could make up my mind to have much sympathy with the movement, and hitherto I have always voted against it. I was a good deal overwhelmed yesterday with the importance of it and at one time I was ready to go back on my record in this matter; but after all, sleeping on it over night, I have come back to the feeling that, however inconvenient it may be for a minister to take a lower seat at the table or stand in a line in the drawing-room farther from the front than his idea of his importance or that of the country he represents may lead him to think he is entitled to, that consideration in my mind does not weigh half so much as the throwing away of the distinctive character of our American institutions. I think more of that consideration wherever it appears, whether at home or abroad, than I do of all these inconveniences, because they are only in-

They may at the foreign office put off a man for an hour or so, but I have never heard in the record of our diplomacy that we suffered because of it. I do not know why the representative of a little and comparatively insignificant state who has a matter of great importance to present, whether it be involving individual rights or state rights so far as he is concerned, may not have a matter of more importance than our minister, although he does not represent half so big a country. That is a matter of small importance compared to the question whether we are to surrender our individuality, if I may so express it, and mold ourselves little by little into the old-fashioned and hoary ways of institutions that we take pride in having cast behind us forever. Ours has been an effort to start out anew for ourselves in a career of insti-tutions and of power that the Old World never knew of and is incapable of so long as it is hide-bound and compelled to walk in the steps of the centuries that have gone and are buried.

When Benjamin Franklin insisted upon appearing at the prondest and most fashionable court of Europe in the style of the country he represented he was a power, and that power came somewhat from that determination of his to be respected as an individual and not according to the garb in which he appeared, or in the name which this infant giant he represented for the first time had chosen to put upon his

There is to my mind—it may not be to others—something repugnant in this idea of going abroad and losing our individual character, our character as a nation, when we get there, just as it is excessively repugnant to me to see people bring back from the old countries the ways of those people and bang their horses' tails and wear their eye-glasses as was described by my friend from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] yesterday. I take no pleasure in repeating those things. I have nothing to say about those who desire to do them; but I have a lot and a share in the responsibility when we enact a thing like this in the laws of this country for the purpose of getting ourselves in the category of those who think that the chief end of man is the position he is assigned by royalty in royal processions.

I do not want to deal in clap-trap, and I am not in the habit of doing it, and it is not to me clap-trap when I see an American citizen going out from this country and insisting upon being an American citizen in his ways and in his talk and in his actions, just as much when he is 3,000 miles away from here, with the ocean between him and the country which requires that of him, just as much. I have a respect for him which I do not have for the man who comes back with his knee-buckles and all that sort of paraphernalia. That is why up to this time I have been unwilling to cast my lot in with this growing disposition to put ourselves on an equality, with whom?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not with a Papal nuncio, who precedes your ambassador, after all.

Mr. DAWES. By and by this will go on so, if we begin to yield to it, it will grow upon that on which it feeds. When the Pope says that nobody shall be admitted into his presence unless he conforms to certain ceremonies, it may be proper enough for him and those who believe in them, in order that they shall not wait an hour or two. If we shall be required to do that, by and by when we go to Turkey we shall be obliged to array ourselves in the costume of the country. What inspired the statute that said our ministers should appear in foreign courts in citizens' dress but the desire to impress upon our ministers abroad that they were citizens of the United States there as much For one I desire to hold on to it.

I am old-fashioned, I confess, and I confess that I stand in need of that molding influence which men get who travel abroad. I do not know that I shall ever have the benefit of it. But I wanted to explain my vote to-day; and on the whole I am going to maintain my record, to keep so can upon this question the individuality of the diplomacy of the United States, and the less it is like that of other countries the better I am suited with it, in the outside of it as much as the inside of it. I have no desire to have men sent abroad as secret spies upon governments abroad to communicate secretly to our State Department the plans and designs of the nations of the earth so that we can either spring a trap upon them or catch them, as is the custom of all those nations abroad even to this day.

I would carry out the diplomacy of this country abroad and at home in its outward appearance and in its essence in the same open, frank manner that a gentleman meets a gentleman; and when a minister, an official in the diplomatic service of this country abroad, by whatever name he is called, will insist upon it that he is to be met on the plane that gentlemen meet gentlemen, that is all I will ask of him, and it is quite as much, I am atraid, as we shall be able to get unless we stop this paltering about how far we can go and make believe that we belong to that set and that kind of institutions without actually throwing up what we have here at home of which we ought to be proud, proud in its unlikeness-if you will allow me to use that word-to anything else on the face of the earth.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, whather the name of our ministers abroad is changed or not, I think it would be well for us to make an appropriation for several of our missions sufficient to pay for the rentals of the apartments that they have to obtain and which are much dearer abroad than they are in this city. I know that the minister to the court of London has in several instances paid $10,000 a year for a house that could be obtained here for three or four or five thousand dollars, and could be obtained here for three or four or nve thousand dollars, and it does seem to me that at several foreign courts they ought to have a sufficient sum in addition to their salary to pay for their rental. If a man is to go abroad and take his family and have rooms for his secretaries and clerks, he should have a sufficient amount of money to pay for them, otherwise these high positions will be only occupied by men of wealth.

I know also that several of our ministers who have been abroad, on their return have been very much poorer in purse than they were when they went. The minister from Great Britain here has a salary of $25,-000 and a magnificent house free of rent in addition.

It seems to me that at some of the more important courts, whatever may be done in relation to the designation of our ministers there, some compensation for the rental they have to pay ought to be made to them.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this seems to be a very important question, I might say a very tremendous question, one in which I suppose the thirty or forty gentlemen who are expecting to be appointed as ministers to represent the United States to the European courts within the next sixty days are taking a very lively interest, and yet one of which, I suppose, the great mass of the American people up to this time have never thought, for I presume that the great mass of the American people, like myself up to the revelations which were made yesterdayrevelations to me, certainly-of the superior dignity of ambassadors as compared to ministers plenipotentiary, were entirely ignorant of that I had noticed somewhat in the diplomatic history of this country how we had been represented in foreign courts and on the most interesting occasions when the very highest interests of the American peo-ple were committed to the hands of our foreign representatives. I had noticed that our forefathers and even the rulers of the present generation had thought that the interests and the welfare of the American people were entirely safe in the hands of commissioners or representatives who, as I understand now, are entirely inferior in grade to this grade of ambassador. Looking back at the history of our country, at the very first diplomatic act ever performed by the United States of America, which had the effect of securing our existence as a nation, to wit, the treaty between the United States and France, concluded in 1778, by which France guarantied our independence, I find that the very delicate and responsible duties, the very momentous duties which had been reposed by the old Congress in the men who represented the United States, were committed to men who are designated in that treaty in about this way: "On the part of United States, Benjamin Franklin," not ambassador, but "deputy to the general Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, and president of the convention of the same; Silas Deane, heretofore deputy from the State of Connecticut, and Arthur Lee," simply "counselor at law."

I have not read or heard that any set of representatives of the United States from that day to this have ever performed a more important service to the people of this country than the three gentlemen whose names I have read. That was the act of our forefathers, the old-fashioned act to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] alluded and to whose expressions upon that subject I fully subscribe.

Let us go on a little further and see how those old-fashioned ances tors of ours acted on important occasions. I have alluded to the agreement we made with France to guaranty our independence. we had an arrangement with Great Britain by which that independence was acknowledged, and I find instead of having these high-sounding and new-fangled names, that that treaty was negotiated by-

John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, John Jay, Henry Laurens, four of the commissioners of the said States for treating of peace, with the commissioner of his said Majesty, on their behalf and on their part.

There in the great act of the provisional articles which recognized our independence and which were afterwards to be in due form incorporated—as I believe they were—verbatim in the permanent treaty of peace, we find that we did not need ambassadors; we needed simply commissioners. And when we came to make the definitive treaty of commissioners. And when we came to make the definitive treaty of peace with Great Britain, which took place in the subsequent year, 1783, we find that we were represented on the part of the United States by "John Adams, esquire," plain, simple John Adams, esquire, who is also described to be "late commissioner of the United States to the court of Versailles, and late a Delegate in Congress from the State of Massachusetts and chief-justice of said State," and referring to another character which he had, but in which he was not then acting, "minister plenipotentiary of the said United States to their Highnesses the States-General of the United Netherlands," "Benjamin Franklin, esquire," and so on and so on.

So in the great act which resulted in the acknowledgment of our independence as a nation our fathers thought that the United States were sufficiently represented by men who were simply commissioners, simply men to whom had been committed by the United States the duty of negotiating the treaty; and from that day to this the plain republican people of the United States have been satisfied to be represented in European courts by honest, faithful, intelligent, and skillful men, without their having the additional label written upon them, the great name of "ambassador."

Washington had the power to appoint foreign ministers, including ambassadors, and yet, plain republican that he was, he never thought it was necessary either for the interests of the United States or for the comfort and social convenience of those ministers whom he appointed to appoint ambassadors. So with Jefferson, and so with John Adams, and so with all the old men, the old fathers of the Republic.

And, sir, who have been content in the old times to accept this humble, this inferior position, as Senators advocating this amendment claim it to be, this position inferior to ambassador? Who are these men? Among them you will find Henry Clay, you will find John Quincy Adams, you will find old John Adams, you will find Chief-Justice Jay, you will find Albert Gallatin, and many other names the mention of which in any group of American citizens would be received with pride. These men, because they were men and not mere things, represented with honor, with credit all the great interests of the American people in foreign courts in the inferior grade of commissioners and ministers, and so far as I know, and as I believe, not one of them ever complained that the label by which the Government of the United States named him was not of sufficient dignity and honor.

It was asked yesterday, I believe, of the Senator from New York

[Mr. EVARTS] if he had ever known an instance in which the interests of the United States had suffered by reason of the fact that our foreign minister was not labeled or named an ambassador, and the Senator answered that he had not. So if there be any motive of advancing the interests of the United States by the change of title, that motive is without sufficient foundation. But, sir, it is said that in the courts of Europe there are questions of precedence and in the settlement of those questions the ambassadors have the advantage of our plain republican ministers, they take a higher seat at the table, they go ahead in pro-cessions before royalty, and all that sort of thing. Well, Mr. President, I do not feel much interest in matters of that sort, and I think the historical student, when he casts his eye over all the follies and flummeries which have characterized the settlement of questions of precedence between one minister and another, will find there is nothing in all that which should induce the American people to embark in such a matter.

Like my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] who addressed us this morning in a speech which I hope he will allow me to indorse in its every word and syllable-I hope he will have no objection to that, because in a matter of that sort a bad indorser can not make bad a good thing-when this great light burst upon my benighted mind yesterday as it did for the first time, that the gentlemen whom we send to Europe in the subordinate and inferior position of simple ministers plenipotentiary were incapacitated to do us all the service that they might do if they had a higher title, I am somewhat surprised at the present situation. Like the Senator from Massachusetts, I see no necessity that we would deliberately by law enact that-the rose should be called by some other name. I believe so far there is no proposition to change the character, the function, or the power of the minister, but simply to change the name to give him greater dignity to keep his tender sensibilities from being wounded on state occasions, and especially to keep his democratic—not in its party sense—and his republican sensibilities from being wounded when he is brought in contact with the stars and garters and decorations and all that sort of grand thing, which I do not know much about, which he encounters in the courts of Europe. When I heard all this, I commenced recalling to my mind what little of historic knowledge I had upon this subject, and particularly did I remember, though rather indefinitely, the description by Macaulay of a celebrated diplomatic conference which took place in Europe in the year 1697.

Europe had been agitated, had been harassed by war for years gowing out of and fomented by the unrighteous and unhallowed ambition of Louis XIV of France, the Grand Monarque who aimed at autocratic power not only in his own country but in all the states of Europe.

Battle after battle had been fought, fortress after fortress had been besieged, some had fallen and some had resisted successfully. There was a combination against this Grand Monarque, of which the leading spirit was that king of England—and I want to call attention to that—who owed his title to the crown, not to inheritance, not because he was the Lord's anointed, but because he was selected by the people of who owed his title to the crown, not to inheritance, not because he was the Lord's anointed, but because he was selected by the people of England for that place, William III. Thus deriving his title to the crown against the old monarchical principle of the indefeasible title of the Lord's anointed, William had somewhat of democratic and republican instincts. He was the head of the coalition. Louis began to be weary of war, and preliminaries were being arranged for a treaty of

Now for the benefit of those gentlemen who insist so much upon etiquette-I believe that is what they call it, etiquette-so much upon the American people observing the forms and conforming to the ridiculous and absurd rules of kingly governments—I propose to read from Macaulay a history of that conference, so that we may see how things are carried on in Europe, and how utterly contemptible they ought to be to republicans, and how utterly inefficient they are to the countries which indulge in them.

This question of precedence was a very large one then, and not only applied to ambassadors and other ministers, but it applied to even the place at which the conference should be had. The French wanted one place and the allies wanted another. Neither would yield the question of precedence, the question of whose wishes were to be consulted about the momentous subject of the place at which a conference should be had. Finally, not being able to agree that the French place should be named or that the allies' place should be named, they made a compromise, and so the French stopped at the Hague and the allies stopped at a little town called Delft. They were five miles apart, and there could be no conference at the distance of five miles. They had no phonographs then, they had no telephones then, they had no telegraph then; and so after having got within five miles of each other the interests, the peace, the happiness, and the welfare of Europe which had been imperiled by this long and disastrous war were about to be sacrificed because on the question of precedence these diplomats could not be got together; and so finally they agreed to meet just exactly half way be-tween the Hague and Delft at a little village called Ryswick. Hence the name of the treaty of Ryswick. Well, that was got over. What was the next thing done? I must read now, because I can not express the idea so briefly and so perfectly as it is expressed by Macaulay.

I might say, however, that one set of diplomats came in at one gate and another set came in at an opposite gate, and the mediator—they seem to have had a mediator there who was the ambassador of the King of Sweden—came in at a middle gate. They got together at last.

At the first meeting-

Says Macaulay-

the full powers of the representatives of the belligerent governments were de-livered to the mediator. At the second meeting, forty-eight hours later, the mediator performed the ceremony of exchanging these full powers.

It took forty-eight hours on a question of dignity and precedence to I and to dress themselves in the garb of sorrow, exchange papers which might have been exchanged in five minutes. Macaulay continues:

Then several meetings were spent in settling-

The grave-I put that in-and the momentous question which then agitated that select body of men-

how many carriages, how many horses, how many lacqueys, how many pages each minister should be entitled to bring to Ryswick; whether the serving men should carry canes; whether they should wear swords; whether they should have pistols in their holsters; who should take the upper hand in the public walks, and whose carriage should break the way in the streets, so that there should not be a collision between the carriages of these distinguished ambassadors. They were all ambassadors—every one of them. There was not a diplomat there who was not labeled "ambassador."

It soon appeared that the mediator would have to mediate not only between the coalition—

That was England and the Netherlands and the Austrian Emperor and the King of Spain on the one side, against Louis XIV on the

It soon appeared that the mediator would have to mediate not only between the coalition and the French, but also between the different members of the coalition. The imperial ambassadors "—

Yes, "imperial ambassadors"— claimed a right to sit at the head of the table. The Spanish ambassador would not admit this pretension, and tried to thrust himself in between two of them. The imperial ambassadors refused to call the ambassadors of electors and commonwealths by the title of excellency. "If I am not called excellency," said the minister of the elector of Bradenburg, "my master will withdraw his troops from Hungary."

Proper name for an ambassador to apply to his sovereign, "my mas-

The imperial ambassadors insisted on having a room to themselves in the building, and on having a special place assigned to their carriages in the court. All the other ministers of the confederacy pronounced this a most unjustifiable demand, and a whole sitting was wasted in this childish dispute. It may easily be supposed that allies who were so punctilious in their dealings with each other were not likely to be very easy in their intercourse with the common enemy.

Now comes a very remarkable question, to which I desire to call the especial attention of Senators who take such deep interest in this matter of precedence:

The chief business of Harlay and Kaunitz was to watch each other's legs.

They were ambassadors and their chief business was to watch each other's legs.

Neither of them thought it consistent with the dignity of the crown which he cred to advance towards the other faster than the other advanced towards him.

He did not want to show that he was eager to get in the presence of the other man. Their dignity was so great, their notions of precedence were so stringent, that both of them in walking towards each other were very particular each that he should not advance any faster than his distinguished opponent. Now let us see what happened:

If therefore one of them perceived that he had inadvertently stepped forward too quick, he went back to the door, and the stately minuet began again.

That is the dignity, that is the custom of Europe which it seems that Senators who are dissatisfied with the plain old-fashioned way we have in sending ministers to Europe want to introduce us to.

Then they had to quarrel about the language in which they should draw up the treaty. One man wanted it drawn up in French, another insisted "no, French shall not have precedence in this matter." Finally they hired a poor scholar, who drew it up in bad Latin, a dead language, and then they could all agree.

Then here is another remarkable part of the proceeding I want to call to the attention of the Senators who desire to bind us, plain republicans as we are, to the customs of Europe:

In the middle of April it was known to everybody at the Hague that Charles XI, King of Sweden, was dead, and had been succeeded by his son; but it was contrary to etiquette that any of the assembled envoys should appear to be acquainted with this fact till Lilienroth—

Who was the Swedish minister-had made a formal announcement; it was not less contrary to etiquette that Lilienroth should make such an announcement till his equipage and his household had been put into mourning, and some weeks etapsed before his coachmakers and tailors had completed their task. At length, on the 12th of June

Having heard, everybody knowing that the man was dead in the early part of April, here was April all gone, and May all gone, and nobody daring to admit that he had the slightest knowledge of the death of the king, and if he had it would be a violation of that stringent etiquette which governs on occasions of that sort to mention it!

At length, on the 12th of June-

Nearly the middle of June-

The Swedish minister-came to Ryswick in a carriage lined with black and attended by servants in black liveries, and there in full congress proclaimed that it had pleased God to take to himself the most puissant King Charles XI. All the ambassadors then condoled with him on the sad and unexpected news—

Which they had all heard two months before-and went home to put off their embroidery

Their court dresses, their stars and their garters, and their decorations

Then, Macaulay adds:

In such solemn trifling week after week passed away.

William was a practical statesman. He had, as I remarked before, got his title to the British crown by the free choice of the British people. He got tired of all this solemn trifling—no peace, no treaty made. The great minds, the trained minds of this congregation of trained diplomats had solemnly trifled month after month in settling questions of etiquette, in settling questions of precedence, and had not taken one step towards the business upon which they had been sent. So William, being a practical man, concluded that he would make a treaty by another agency while these fellows were all engaged in this solemn trifling.

William

Says Macaulay-

with the judgment and decision of a true statesman, determined to open a communication with Louis through one of the French marshals who commanded in the Netherlands.

Disregarding all these great diplomats who were thus engaged in settling all these momentous questions to which I have just alluded.

Of those marshals, Villeroy was the highest in rank.

But he would not take him. It seems to our friends here that high rank is everything, but not so to the practical mind of William, who, Macaulay says, acted "with the judgment and decision of a true states-

Of those marshals, Villeroy was the highest in rank. But Villeroy was weak, rash, haughty, irritable. Such a negotiator was far more likely to embroil matters than to bring them to an amicable settlement. Boufflers was a man of sense and temper.

And, I suppose, taking the history of his conduct in this matter, he would remain still a man of sense and good temper, though not a diplomat at all, even though he was not labeled "ambassador."

Boufflers and Portland had known each other. Portland was one of William's men, one of his generals, and I will state here what Macaulay says about him. Macaulay shows that in matters of diplomacy, as well as in everything else, straightforward plain comprosers must be really and the straightforward plain comprosers must be really as the straightforward plain comprosers and straightforward plain comprosers are straightforward plain comprosers. as in everything else, straightforward, plain common sense must prevail against all the chicane, the trickery, and the high training of what is called diplomacy. Macaulay says:

It is a remarkable fact that this man, who in the drawing-rooms and coffee-houses of London was described as an awkward, stupid Hogan Mogan—such was the phrase of that time—was considered at Versailles as an eminently pol-ished courtier and an eminently expert negotiator.

Now, we shall see how that turned out. Macaulay says, as I say in reference to any representative we send to a foreign country, not that he shall be called ambassador or this thing or that thing, but—

His chief recommendation, however, was his incorruptible integrity. It was certain that the interests which were committed to his care would be as dear to him as his own life, and that every report which he made to his master would be literally exact.

We had better, in order to subserve the interests of the American people, be sure in selecting a representative of this country to a foreign government that we get a man like Portland, who, though awkward in the drawing-rooms and coffee-houses, was yet a man of incorruptible integrity.

Now, let us see how this singular arrangement turned out. These grand ambassadors, these great diplomats, who had been for months and months engaged in what Macaulay calls "such solemn trifling," had not proceeded one step towards making a treaty. Now, let us see how this new move turned out. Portland got an interview with the French marshal, Boufflers. Boufflers corresponded with Louis, and the men

On the 28th of June, according to the old style, the meeting took place, in the neighborhood of Hal, a town which lies about 10 miles from Brussels, on the road to Mons. After the first civilities had been exchanged, Boufflers and Portland dismounted, their attendants retired, and the two negotiators were left alone in an orchard. Here they walked up and down during two hours, and in that time did much more business than the plenipotentiaries at Ryswick were able to dispatch in as many months.

No question of precedence, no question of how in advancing towards each other each should take exactly the same gait, with the same swiftness as the other, and if they had made a mistake about that then going back and doing it all over again, but talking together in an orchard without ceremony, talking together as friends and as business men, they did more in two hours than the grand conclave of ambassadors had been enabled to accomplish in two months.

Macaulay proceeds:

The negotiation between Boufflers and Portland proceeded as fast as the necessity of frequent reference to Versailles would permit. Their first five conferences were held in the open air; but at their sixth meeting they retired into asmall house, in which Portland had ordered tables, pens, ink, and paper to be placed; and here the result of their labors was reduced to writing.

And the treaty was formed by these two men without any official character and then submitted to the conclave to which I have called attention. Macaulay says:

Before the end of July everything was settled as far as France and England were concerned. Meanwhile it was known to the ministers assembled at Ryswick that Boufflers and Portland had repeatedly met in Brabant, and that they were negotiating in a most irregular and indecorous manner, without credentials or mediation or notes or protocols, without counting each other's steps, and without calling each other excellency. So barbarously ignorant were they of the rudiments of the noble science of diplomacy that they had very nearly accomplished the work of restoring peace to Christendom while walking up and down an alley under some apple-trees. The English and Dutch loudly applauded William's prudence and decision. He had cut the knot which the congress had only twisted and tangled. He had done in a month what all the formalists and pedants assembled at the Hague would not have done in ten years. Nor were the French plenipotentiaries ill-pleased. "It is curious," said Harlay, a man of wit and sense, "that while the ambassadors are making waf, the generals should be making peace."

I give that incident, that historical incident to the Senate to show how utterly unmeaning, how utterly without force is the suggestion that the interests, the welfare of the American people demand that a change should be made in the rank of our representatives in Europe, The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. HALE. I hope that unless some Senator desires further to delete this proposition.

bate this proposition we may have a vote upon it and dispose of the

The PRESIDENT protempore. The amendment will be again stated. The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. Gibson.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the vote is taken I wish to make a slight contribution to this debate by proxy. There is an article in a New York paper this morning in the shape of a dispatch from Washington which deserves a somewhat larger circulation than it will get by reason of its publication in that paper and which I therefore desire to son of its publication in that paper, and which I therefore desire to have inserted in the widely circulated and widely read CONGRESSIONAL have inserted in the widely circulated and widely read CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for two reasons: First, a reason personal to myself because of a reference to me which I think ought to be somewhat more widely read than it will be if the publication is limited to the paper in which it was originally published, and second, because of the fact that it was intended to advance the interests of a gentleman, an intimate friend of mine, who has for many years desired to represent and who still desires to represent the United States at the court of Queen Victoria, and who with natural and very proper American pride, at least proper and who, with natural and very proper American pride, at least proper from the standpoint of those who favor this amendment, does not want to go as minister extraordinary, but wants to bear the more pretentious label of ambassador.

I will therefore ask the Secretary to read the paragraph which I have marked, and I wish to say that the authenticity of the article can not be questioned, because it is the result of eavesdropping which has been carried on in the Senate Chamber by a person who claims the right to be upon this floor as the private secretary of a Senator, to the exclusion or at all events the inconvenience of Senators.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MINISTERS OR AMBASSADORS—WHICH?—THE SENATE ARRIVES AT NO DECISION ON THE QUESTION—PLUMB DOESN'T WANT ANY DIPLOMATS.

WASHINGTON, January 28.

ON THE QUESTION—PLUMB DOESN'T WANT ANY DIFLOMATS.

WASHINGTON, January 28.

The Senate spent the entire day practically upon a discussion of the question whether the present envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the court of St. James, Germany, and Russia, and to the French Republic should be raised to the rank of ambassadors or not, and after devoting five hours to the discussion it was not even then able to reach a decision. It gave a fine opportunity, however, for a display of cheap demagogism.

The amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which would have raised the rank of the four ministers to ambassadors, was offered by Mr. Girsson, of Louisiana, who, in a sensible, straightforward manner, presented the reasons why such a change was desirable and the advantages that were likely to accrue from it.

The opposition was led by Mr. Plume, of Kansas. He delivered a speech which might have electrified a cross-roads meeting and impressed listeners with the heroic simplicity and sturdy republicanism of the speaker, but in an assembly of thoughtful men like the Senate it fell flat and only excited laughter.

Mr. Plume himself was hardly in earnest when he asserted that ministers were of no use to the country any way, that they were paid a big salary for the simple purpose of having an opportunity of eating good dinners, moving in society, and dancing attendance upon court circles, and that the business they attempted to do could better be dispatched by consular agents. In fact, the Kansas Senator asserted that the extension of our commerce was the only business which would require the intervention of an agent in our dealings with foreign nations.

Mr. Reagan followed in his old manner, rehashing his favorite mournful tale of the creation of privileged classes and class legislation. It was in vain that such men as Senators Evarts, Hoar, Sherman, Hawley, Halle, Morgan, Gipson, and others tried to convince Messrs, Plume and Reagan, who in the mean time had been supported by Stewarr

Mr. PLUMB. I think that will suffice as a final contribution to the debate on this important subject; and I have no doubt we shall now be able to get a vote.

Mr. HALE. I hope we shall have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FARWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired generally on all questions which divide the Senate with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry], but I am assured by his colleague that he would vote 'nay'' if present, and I therefore vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance]. He is confined to his house by sickness. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to announce that my colleague Mr. Allison is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Mc-PHERSON

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Black-BURN].

The result was announced-yeas 26, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the entire paragraph from line 11 to line 13, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.
The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1 of the bill it is proposed to strike out lines 11, 12, and 13, as follows:
Ambassadors to France, Germany, Great Britain, and Russia, at $17,500 each,

And in lieu thereof insert:

For the purpose of enabling the President to premote friendly and commercial intercourse with Great Britain, $20,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall follow that, if it should be adopted (I suppose it will not be) by a similar amendment in regard to the other powers named in the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plums].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. There are a few formal amendments that I wish to make to perfect the bill before going to the other amendments which have been reserved.

On page 2, line 25, "Columbia" should be "Colombia;" so as to read: "the United States of Colombia."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction of spelling will be

Mr. HALE. On page 9, line 198, I move to correct the total by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$16,000."

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to offer an amendment?

Mr. HALE. Yes, if the Senator has an amendment. The PRESIDENT protempore. The Chair understands that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is an amendment of the committee pending. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is known as the Samoan amendment is pending.

Mr. HALE. But I desire to postpone the Samoan amendments until the completion of other amendments and the discussion of the bill. If any Senator has any other amendment I would prefer that he should

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will, then, recognize the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as new sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill new sections, as follows:

SEC.—. That for the purpose of making adequate preparation for an appropriate celebration of this great historic event, a commission of nine members, to be known as the constitutional centennial commission, is hereby authorized, and the President of the United States shall, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, to appoint said commission ers, subject to the confirmation of the United States Senate, and said commission shall have charge of the preparations for and the ceremonies of said celebration.

SEC.—. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite the chief executive and chief judicial officers of Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Salvador, Honduras, United States of Colombia, Venezuela, Bolivia, Peru, Chili, Uruguay, Paraguay, Ecuador, the Argentine Republic, the Empire of Brazil, the Dominion of Canada, Hayti, San Domingo, and such other civil and military officers of said governments as the commission hereinbefore provided for shall designate, to visit Washington in the spring of ISS9 and join with the President of the United States, and the Congress of the United States, the justices of the Supreme Court, the governors of the forty-six States and Territories, and others who may be invited, in suitable ceremonies in honor of said event. And the President shall have authority to entertain, in a suitable manner and for a suitable time, in his discretion, the foreign guests attending said celebration; and the sum of $300,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses incident to said celebration and said entertainment, the same to be paid and disbursed upon proper vonchers approved by the president of said commission.

SEC.—. That said commission shall, from time to time, report directly to the President of the United States.

Mr. HALE. That amendment finds no proper place upon the dip-lomatic and consular appropriation bill, which is for the annual ex-penses of our diplomatic and consular intercourse. It will naturally be considered by the Committee on Appropriations upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, where all such matters properly come. Therefore appropriation bill, where an such matters properly come. Therefore I am constrained to make the point of order against the amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state the ground upon which the point of order is preferred?

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that the amendment comes here by the sanction of any committee. It is a new matter increasing the appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised upon that point and will hear the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I state that fact. Nobody disputes it.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I desire to say that this proposition in the form of a bill was reported to the Senate by a special committee that has had the matter under consideration, and the bill passed this body, I think, unanimously. It is now pending elsewhere. Within the last few days, probably within a week, It is now pending eisewhere. Within the last lew days, probably within a week, I presented the bill which passed the Senate as an amendment to this bill, and I had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It has therefore been considered by a special committee and passed, I think, by a unanimous vote of this body, and was again referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Of course the committee has not acted upon it.

As to the relevancy of the amendment to this bill I take issue with the As to the relevancy of the amendment to this bill I take issue with the Senator from Maine. The provision of the amendment is that we shall invite representatives from all the republics south of us to this great celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Constitution. Fifteen of those republics have modeled their organic law after the Constitution of the United States. It would seem to me that this is a proper bill for the consideration of the matter.

Technically I suppose the Senator may be right that in the form of an amendment it has not been recommended by any committee; but I trust that in view of the importance of the matter the Senator from Maine will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HALE. If it were not that the other appropriation bill will be taken up in two or three weeks, where the amendment properly belongs, I should not insist on the point of order. But it clearly belongs songs, I should not insist on the point of order. But it clearly belongs to the other bill, and I think should go there, when the Committee on Appropriations can have the opportunity of considering the subject, which it has not done, as the Senator knows, upon this bill. The amendment has never been considered or passed upon by that committee. I do not in any way seek to shirk the responsibility of considering it in committee on the other appropriation bill, and I do not say, for one, that I shall oppose it there, but it clearly does not belong to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT are ferrors. If the Senator from Main instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Maine insists upon the point of order, the Chair holds that the amendment can not be received to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must insist that the rule shall be observed in regard to the Samoan amendments, as they were reported from the committee and are now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro lempore. The Senator from Maine expressed a desire that some formal amendments should be acted upon from the

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to mere formal amendments, but other amendments will be offered to the bill which will lead to debate, and I think it is important to act on the Samoan amendments

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated

Mr. HALE. I do not know that there are any more amendments except those.

Mr. REAGAN. I inquire if the amendment beginning at line 175 and ending at line 181 has been acted upon?

Mr. HALE. The Senate is just coming to those amendments. It has just reached them.

Mr. SHERMAN. When they are reached I should like to have them read.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire when we have reached that point to enter a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has directed the Chief Clerk to report the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 174 the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States, existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President, this appropriation to be immediately available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 181, the committee report to insert:

For the survey, improvement, and occupation of the bay and harbor of Pago Pago in the Island of Tutuila, Samoa, and for the construction of the necessary wharves and buildings for such occupation, and for a coaling station therein, under the direction of the President, $100,000, this appropriation to be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. As these amendments involve the construction of a treaty and will necessarily give rise to a discussion of what may be perhaps very delicate relations between the United States and another foreign power, I move that the galleries be cleared and that the Senate proceed to consider them with closed doors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second?
Mr. EUSTIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.
Mr. SHERMAN. The question must be taken with closed doors.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair as to the motion made by the Senator from Maine. Mr. HALE. It has been seconded. The Chair asks if there is a second

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear it.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. MORGAN. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors of the Senate.

After one hour and five minutes the doors were reopened. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). tion recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the two amendments be again read. I take it that both may be considered together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio?

I ask that the amendments be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read the amend-

I should like to submit a proposition, that by unani-Mr. HALE. mous consent the vote may be taken now upon these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unani-

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to make some statements in regard to the condition of affairs in Samoa. I will promise not to be very long about it and not to go beyond a reasonable time.

Mr. HALE. I hope I may be able at the close of the Senator's remarks to get unanimous consent for an immediate vote on the amend-

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the time has arrived when Congress, and especially the Senate, must give intelligent attention to the questions involved in the occupation and settlement of the Samoan These questions are now exciting profound attention, not only in this country, but in Great Britain and Germany. While supporting the amendments proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported now from the Committee on Appropriations, I think it is due to the Senate and the people of the United States that I should state in a skeleton form the chief facts in regard to this matter, and that, too, without any feeling whatever, without any desire to interfere with our diplomatic negotiations or to disturb the harmony of our relations with Germany or Great Britain. I hope that the action of the Senate will be unanimous upon the adoption of these amendments, and that a frank and open debate will tend to this result.

situated in the South Sea, almost midway between San Francisco and Australia, on the direct line of commercial intercourse from every part of America to the Australian or Polynesian Islands and settlements. Their locality commands the natural interest of many nations. In extent they are comparatively insignificant, containing but about a thousand and forty-eight square miles composed of eight or ten different islands, the chief of which are Savaii, Upolu, and Tutuila, separated from each other by short distances. They are peopled by 32,500 innocent, harmless, tractable, and good-humored natives, of the Polynesian race, about 1,000 blacks taken there as laborers, and about 300 foreigners, nearly all of whom are either Germans, Americans, or English, occupying various commercial establishments there.

These islands were first explored and surveyed in a scientific way by Admiral Wilkes in his famous exploration in 1840. The best maps of those islands within our reach are still the maps furnished by that expedition, and they are contained in the book of maps I have here before me. Admiral Wilkes was so impressed with the importance of those islands that he made surveys of the harbors and bays connected with them. The chief harbor, that of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, is mapped with the soundings, etc., and is contained in the charts before me.

Samoa has been since that time visited by many people. said, it is in the line of communication from San Francisco to Australia. It has been in a measure settled and occupied since 1860 by Germans, English, and Americans. The attention of the Government of the United States was early called to it by the rather chivalric or adventurous experience of Colonel Steinberger, a citizen of the United States, who was sent there in 1873 as a special agent to ascertain all he could about this group of islands, and he made to the State Department an interesting report of his observations and intercourse with the Samoan

During this visit he made something in the nature of an agreement or an arrangement with the King of the Samoan Islands, but it did not assume the form of a treaty, and was not brought before the Senate. He afterwards became prime minister to the king, but was involved in one of the innumerable revolutions of the country, and was arrested, and deported in an American vessel.

So matters proceeded until in 1878 a treaty was made between the United States and the King of the Samoan Islands. I will read one or two articles of that treaty. It was signed by Mr. Evarts when Secretary of State, now a member of the Senate, and by Mamea, the minister of the king. The second article of the treaty, and the most important one so far as it affects our interests, provides that-Maval vessels of the United States shall have the privilege of entering and using the port of Pago Pago, and establishing therein and on the shores thereof a station for coal and other naval supplies for their naval and commercial marine, and the Samoan Government will hereafter neither exercise nor authorize any jurisdiction within said port adverse to such rights of the United States, or restrictive thereof. The same vessels shall also have the privilege of entering other ports of the Samoan Islands. The citizens of the United States shall likewise have free liberty to enter the same ports with their ships and cargoes of whatsoever kind, and to sell the same to any of the inhabitants of those islands. All such traffic, in whatever articles of trade or barter, shall be free, except that the trade in fire-arms and munitions of war in the islands shall be subject to regulations by that government.

The fifth article provides that-

If, unhappily, any differences should have arisen, or shall hereafter arise, between the Samoan Government and any other government in amity with the United States, the Government of the latter will employ its good offices for the purpose of adjusting those differences upon a satisfactory and solid foundation.

This treaty is the basis of our right to occupy and hold and establish in the Bay of Pago Pago and on the adjacent shores of the island of Tutuila a station for coal and other naval supplies.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a compilation of papers sent to us from the State Department. I find the treaty here in a convenient form.

The Bay of Pago Pago is one of the most remarkable features of the Samoan Islands. It is said that it is probably the best harbor in the whole of the Polynesian Islands. The island of Tutuila, containing but 50 square miles, being 15 or 20 miles long and from 1 mile to 5 miles wide, is indented by the Bay of Pago Pago a mile wide, within several miles, with deep water ranging from 30 to 50 feet deep, within several miles, with deep water ranging from prevailing winds. Vessels miles wide, is indented by the Bay of Pago Pago a mile wide, extending can enter the bay easily under all conditions and circumstances and there be protected from all possible storms. It is described as one of the most valuable harbors in all the world, and the charts seem to bear out that description of it.

Shortly after the treaty made by the United States a treaty was made by Germany with Samoa, which I find in this same document on page 126. Articles V and XI are the only ones which I need read:

ART. V. German ships of war shall be at liberty to enter into the harbor of (called) Saluafata to anchor, and remain there to take in supplies and to repair, and the German Government shall furthermore be at liberty to make there at its own pleasure all such contrivances or arrangements that may be useful for German ships of war and their officers and crews. The Samoan Government also agrees that the German Government may erect buildings on the shores of the said harbor for storing therein coal or any other supplies for the German ships of war and their officers and crews.

This treaty secures to the German Empire the right to enter into the The Samoan Islands, formerly called the Navigator's Islands, are particular harbor named, a harbor or bay in Upolu, one of the larger islands of the group-substantially the same rights and powers as to a coaling station that are conferred by the American treaty upon the United States. The other article of the treaty of Germany with Samoa, which I will read, is as follows:

ART. XI. The Government of Samoa promises to grant the German Government as many rights as the most favored nation, as well in respect to all matters alluded to in the preceding articles of this treaty as also generally and as may be granted to any other nation in future.

This much-discussed "most-favored-nation" clause is inserted in all the Samoan treaties, and secures to the three treaty powers reciprocal

In the next year I find in this same codification, on page 131-

What is the number of the document?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is House Executive Document No. 238. find that Samoa entered into a treaty with Great Britain, and that treaty was separated from the preceding treaty by a year, the eighth article only of which I need read:

ART. VIII. Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain may, if she think fit, establish on the shores of a Samoan harbor, to be hereafter designated by Her Majesty, a naval station and coaling depot; but this article shall not apply to the harbors of Apia or Saluafata, or to that part of the harbor of Pago Pago which may be hereafter selected by the Government of the United States as a station under the provisions of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Samoan Government on the 17th day of January, in the

So it appears that each of these three great commercial nations secured by treaties following each other rapidly grants and privileges somewhat similar in character, but separate and distinct, applying to different localities, securing to each a separate coaling station and har-bor, it being the expectation and design evidently of these treaties that the Samoan Islands should be made a kind of stopping place, a way-station for all the great lines of commercial travel, and that each of these three great commercial nations should be supplied with a separate coaling station which would be under its exclusive control, subject, however, to the jurisdiction of the Government of Samoa. So these three great nations gained a property interest fixed and tangible in different ports in those islands with stipulations that secured to each of them reciprocal and equal rights conceded to the most favored na-They were to be upon the same footing, and the separate coaling stations were to be occupied by each in severalty, distinct from the others.

There was a further arrangement made shortly afterwards, shown in this same compilation, which is very important. It was entered into by Great Britain and the King and Government of Samoa, with privi-leges, however, granted to the Government of the United States and to the German Government of an equivalent character. Articles first and second of this treaty provide-

ART. I. The space comprised within the following limits, that is to say, commencing at Valloa, passing thence along the coast to the mouth of the Fulnasa River, thence up the course of the river Fulnasa to the point at which the Alafuala road crosses such river, thence along the said road to the point where it reaches the river Valsigo, and thence, in a straight line, to the point of commencement at Vailoa, shall constitute and be known as the town and district of Apia. The waters of the harbor of Apia are also comprehended within the district.

ART. II. Such town and district shall be placed under the government of a municipal board, consisting of those foreign consuls resident in Apia whose nations have entered into treaty relations with Samoa. Representatives of every such nation, having a consul in Samoa, shall, at a future period, be added to the said board, and shall be chosen in such manner and exercise such functions as may be provided by regulations to be hereafter agreed upon and published by the said board.

Whis treatments are a local and here of the court of the court

This treaty was signed only by Great Britain and Samoa, but was subsequently signed (although their countries were not parties to the treaty) by T. Weber, the imperial German consul, and R. Chandler, captain United States Navy, commanding the United States ship Lackawanna. So, although this treaty was never submitted to the Senate of the United States and therefore never assumed the form of a treaty, yet it is in the nature of an agreement between these three great powers, by which, in connection with the King of Samoa, they were to set aside a particular region, a neutral territory, declared to be a neutral terrias a place where each of these commercial nations might establish their store-houses, their workshops, and any other buildings necessary to the carrying on of their traffic in those islands.

This particular place, Apia, now known as the capital of the Samoan Islands, was therefore a region set aside for commercial purposes. But the Government and the King of Samoa were not excluded from this region. The flag of that king was to be always raised over the public region. The flag of that king was to be always raised over the public buildings, and those in the occupation of the German consul, the British consul, and the American consul. There are many provisions in this treaty not necessary for me to read. It provides for something in the nature of a municipal government. It requires that all offenses against the regulations of the municipal board, by whomsoever committed, shall be tried by a magistrate to be appointed by the board of

The eighth and ninth articles are specially important:

ART. VIII. The foregoing articles shall in no way prejudice the territorial integrity of Samoa, and the Samoan flag shall be hoisted at such place of meeting of the municipal board as may be permanently adopted.

ART. IX. In case of civil war, the town and district of Apia, and the adjacent districts comprised between the boundaries of the town and district of Apia and Letogo, Tiapepe Point, and Siusega shall be considered as neutral territory, and the municipal board may frame and issue such regulations as may be considered necessary for the support and maintenance of such neutrality.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the Senator state the significance of this agreement to the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was never sent here for approval by the President; it was not considered as being in the nature of a treaty; but it has been recognized by our Government and all the other governments as being something in the nature of a local arrangement for the convenience of these three great powers. The character of it is stated very clearly by Mr. Bayard in one or two of his documents. The municipal board consisted of the consul of each nation having treaty relations with Samoa, or the American, English, and German consuls. Our consul, with the full knowledge and under instruction from our Government, acted as a member of this board.

Mr. MORGAN. What was the date of that convention?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read the heading of it, and the Senator will Convention between Great Britain (Germany, the United States) and the King and Government of Samoa, for the government of the town and district of Apia. Signed at Apia, September 2, 1879. Ratifications exchanged at Mulinuu, August 27, 1880.

Mr. MORGAN. Was that convention ever sent in to the Senate of the United States for ratification?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said not. I have said that it was never

Mr. Shekman. I have said not. I have said that it was never sent by the President of the United States to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. It was never sent here?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; but it has been acted upon by all the nations as in the nature of an arrangement or agreement for the possession and occupancy of this neutral territory. Mr. Bayard, in his communica-tions scattered through this book and the other documents I have here, points out very clearly the nature and character of that municipality, and its nature and character may be important hereafter. and its nature and character may be important hereafter.

There is one other document bearing upon the title or right of the three commercial nations in Samoa. An arrangement or a treaty was entered into between Germany and Great Britain April 6, 1886, which I have before me. It is called "A declaration concerning the boundaries of the German and English dominions in the West Pacific Ocean. Signed at Berlin, April 6, 1886." In this agreement or declaration or treaty these two governments parcel out the various islands and possessions of the Pacific Ocean. West of a certain line German occupancy was to prevail; each of a certain line English occupancy was to prevail. was to prevail; east of a certain line English occupancy was to prevail; but it contains this significant and important exception, this declara-

Mr. GRAY. What page does the Senator read from?
Mr. SHERMAN. Page 136.
Mr. DAWES. Which document?
Mr. SHERMAN. Executive Document No. 238. I am reading all from the same document.

The third and fourth articles contain the terms of this imperial partition-a striking example of the tendency of these powers to divide the world between them:

III. Germany pledges herself not to make any acquisitions of territory, not to establish any protectorates, not to oppose the extension of British influence, and to relinquish all territories heretofore acquired by her or over which she has established a protectorate in that part of the West Pacific Ocean lying to the east, southeast, or south of the aforesaid dividing line.

IV. Great Britain pledges herself not to make any acquisitions of territory, not to establish any protectorates, not to oppose the extension of German influence, and to relinquish all territories heretofore acquired by her or over which she has established a protectorate in that part of the West Pacific Ocean lying to the west, northwest, or north of the aforesaid dividing line.

The sixth article, however, contains important exceptions from this division of empire:

VI. This declaration shall not apply to the Navigator's (Samoan) Islands, with which Germany, Great Britain, and the United States have concluded treaties, nor to the Friendly (Tonga) Islands, with which Germany and Great Britain have concluded treaties, nor to Niné Island (Savage Island), which groups shall in future, as heretofore, form a neutral territory, nor to any islands or places in the West Pacific Ocean that are now under the sovereignty or protection of any civilized power other than Germany or Great Britain.

The declaration commences with a disclaimer, that this partition between these two great powers shall not apply to the Samoan Islands. So it appears from these five distinct formal arrangements or agreements that these three great commercial powers looked upon Samoa as a country important to all of them, in which each of them should have separate and distinct places where they might repair vessels and store coal and do all that was necessary to be done for the maintenance of the commercial marine in that region, and that that country was to be in the nature of a neutral territory under the protection of these respective powers; and the United States stipulated that it would render its friendly offices in any controversy that might then exist or that might thereafter arise between Samoa and any other country whatever. That was the position in which these islands then stood, and that is the legal status to day, for no other arrangement, no other agreement, has ever been made in a formal way to affect in any degree the rights of the several powers to these agreements. By these treaties the rights of the respective parties must be determined. No one of the powers can change them without the consent of the others. All of them are strong enough, and I hope Christian enough, to stand by and insist upon a fair and full adherence to these treaties, arrangements, and stipulations. The United States is bound, both for the interests of its people and for the honor of its promise to Samoa, to insist upon the rights of both.

Mr. President, I do not intend to go into the details that are furnished by the documents that I have before me in regard to the history of events in Samoa. It is sufficient, in a summary way, to say that there has been, is now, and always will be a quasi state of war existing in these islands between the different tribes or families of the people there. It was, and is, a strange government, peculiar in its character, governed largely by family ties, somewhat aristocratic, and always with contentions innumerable between the various chiefs of that country.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question as he proceeds?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.
Mr. MORGAN. We are appropriating money to be immediately available for the purpose of building a naval station in the harbor of Pago Pago. I notice under Article II of the treaty with Samoa that that Government entered into an arrangement with the United States

Mr. SHERMAN. I read that article or a part of it.
Mr. MORGAN. I want to read a particular part of it, to call the attention of the Senator to it:

Naval vessels of the United States shall have the privilege of entering and using the port of Pago Pago, and establishing therein and on the shores thereof a station for coal and other naval supplies for their naval and commercial marine, and the Samoan Government will hereafter neither exercise nor authorize any jurisdiction within said port adverse to such rights of the United States, or restrictive theoref

I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if he 's informed and can inform the Senate whether the Samoan Government has parted with the title of the land surrounding the harbor of Pago Pago up to the water's edge to the German people, a German land company.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, undoubtedly not the Samoan Government, but individuals and families have sold lands adjacent to the harbor of Pago Pago. The truth is that these poor people have sold nearly all the lands that are valuable in the islands to Germans and English and Americans, not only along the borders of Pago Pago, but in all the islands; but that does not affect in the slightest degree our rights under the treaty, and no one has ever claimed that it did.

Mr. MORGAN. The titles to those lands, I understand, are titles that come of mere occupancy, and have no validity to pass the title at all, except with the consent of the Samoan Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is sulcient to say that our title there to the adjacent lands, such as we wish for our purposes and on that bay, is clear and unquestionable; and in all the controversies that have existed in diplomatic correspondence no one has ever called in question our exclusive right to that bay.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a point about which I should like to be

Mr. MORGAN. That is a point about which I should like to be better satisfied than I am at present.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will point out to me any contention on that point, I would like to know it. I have not seen it.

Mr. MORGAN. The contention will arise hereafter.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is sufficient to say that we have the grant from King Malietoa in the first treaty ever made by these islands with any foreign power, and that each of the treaties, the English and the German, recognizes our right to that island, and they stipulate for themselves for a different portion of the country where they may exercise the same power. So I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will permit me, before he passes from that I wish he would say whether in his opinion we can acquire a valid title to lands in a foreign country by an agreement in the nature of a treaty that has not been submitted to the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. The treaty to which I refer was submitted to the Senate and ratified and approved, the first one made with Samoa by any foreign power. Mr. HAWLEY. What was it?

Mr. SHERMAN. An express cession of the Bay of Pago Pago and adjacent shores for a coaling station. The arrangement made for the occupation of Apia by the consuls was quite a different affair. It was a provision for municipal occupation of offices, stores, and warehouses by our merchants, consuls, and citizens. Our consul occupies a house; whether it belongs to him or not I do not know. Apia is a neutral port for business. Pago Pago is our exclusive possession, subject to commercial rights.

Mr. FRYE. One of our commodores obtained an earlier concession in Pago Pago, but that never was ratified.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was a concession once before that I did not deem it necessary to refer to; but the concession I have referred to was made by treaty, and no one has ever called it in question so far as I know, and I can find nothing in these voluminous papers that calls in question our right to that harbor.

Mr. President, I need not dwell upon the painful features of the civil wars that have prevailed there, nor upon the general judgment expressed by all the consular agents there, and by the gentlemen who were afterwards sent there to examine into the nature of the government and the nature of those people, that from their character, from their peculiarities, they seemed to be totally unfit to conduct a regularities.

lar form of government. Upon this question there is an almost uniform expression of opinion. I will read what is said by Mr. Bates, the agent sent there in 1886, and he expresses only that which is stated by the British agent. He says:

INCAPACITY OF NATIVES FOR GOVERNMENT UNASSISTED.

Such being the elements of society, with due regard to which any government in Samoa must be constituted, I must report, as the result of my intercourse with and observations of the Samoans, my thorough conviction that they are unable now, unassisted, either to construct or maintain a government which will enforce authority or command respect. A system of government of their own they undoubtedly had, and, to a limited extent, still maintain, but it has been so interrupted and interfered with by the foreigners who have settled among them that it is doubtful, even if all disturbing influences were removed, whether they could now restore it. They have never had a government which was worthy of the name as we understand it. They have no conception of the modern idea of government. That any system of laws should bear equally on all men is to them a thing impossible of comprehension. Probably no better evidence of the truth of these statements could be had than the history of the country for twenty years past.

As a matter of course these papers disclose that all the time since the

As a matter of course these papers disclose that all the time since the country has been known, since the first treaty was made with America, there have been civil wars there, civil contentions, rivalries between chieftains, two families, each claiming the right to rule. There are many peculiar features of the government which we can scarcely comprehend. They have no idea of a permanent government. While one side is uppermost to-day, the other may be to-morrow. That state of civil war continued from 1873 until, in 1883, by the aid of the consuls of the three great powers, they finally agreed to settle their dif-ferences and agreed that Malietoa should be king and that Tamasese should be vice-king, without very distinct ideas as to the definite tenure or nature of their respective offices. One was king and the other was vice-king. That arrangement seems to have been brought about by the friendly co-operation of the consuls of these three governments, and was probably the first and most formal establishment of a government in the Samoan Islands; and such would always be the cesult of the co-operation of the three consuls acting harmoniously together.

But soon after that difficulties arose between the citizens, traders, and consuls of the three powers of a different character. Movements were made in Australia and in New Zealand to annex the Samoan Islwere made in Australia and in New Zealand to annex the Samoan Islands to the British colonies. Perhaps I ought to read to the Senate one or two items showing what steps had been taken and what progress made in that direction. Malietoa himself was in that movement, and though acknowledged to be king, himself applied to the Queen of England and to the authorities in New Zealand for permission to be annexed to Great Britain—a manifest violation of the treaty not only with Germany but with the United States.

I read from Mr. Rates's report, page 158:

I read from Mr. Bates's report, page 158:

The subject of the annexation of Samoa to Great Britain or New Zealand has been agitated from time to time with great persistence, and has undoubtedly been one of the disturbing influences in the group.

In August, 1879, the treaty was signed by which Great Britain recognized the independence of Samoa; and it was not until 1883 that the subject of British colonial annexation began to be actively discussed in Australia and New Zealand. The basis upon which the agitation rested is well stated in a letter from Governor Jervos, of New Zealand, to the secretary of state, inclosing a bill proposing a general scheme of permissive annexation of the Pacific islands then under consideration in the colonies.

Then follows the language of the governor of New Zealand-

That the British Government should, under existing circumstances, take steps for the establishment of its rule over such islands in the Pacific as are not already occupied by or under the protection of a foreign power, and the occupation of which by any foreign power would be detrimental to the interests of Australasia.

It was said at that time that the German traders were willing for this annexation. In November, 1883, Malietoa made a direct application to Great Britain for the annexation of Samoa, and said:

I and three-fourths of the chiefs and people of Samca wish to see put up the flag of Great Britain at once,

It is also stated by Captain Ackland-

That German traders would not object to annexation to Great Britain, but merely as a matter of sentiment would rather see the German flag flying, for they feel that this colony would thrive much better under the British flag than under the German or Samoan.

That was in 1883. In the year following the king addressed the most piteous appeals to the Queen of Great Britain directly begging the queen to annex these islands to New Zealand. Here is the letter, which is dated a year after the first movement.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me to inquire whether it is the duty of the United States Government to hold Malietoa in his kingdom and royal anthority in the Samoan Islands after he has made a proposition of that kind and supplicated the Queen of Great Britain to allow him to throw off his allegiance and abdicate in favor of the Queen of Great Britain, and thereby violate the treaty with the United

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Alabama will only be a little patient I will come to that in due time.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well; I shall be patient, then.
Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the letter. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter so that it may go upon the record.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read, if there be no objec-

The Secretary read as follows:

[Inclosure D 2.-Translation.]

MULINUU, November 12, 1884.

MULINUU, November 12, 1884.

Your Majesty: This is to make known to your Majesty that the King of Samoa and the chiefs of these islands have sent a petition to your Majesty, praying that you would set up your government in Samoa.

We have sent that petition to the government in Samoa.

We have sent that petition to the government in Samoa.

We have informed your Majesty that painful anxiety has taken possession of our minds, because we are much afraid of Germany lest she should take our islands against our will.

Your Majesty, we are in distress on account of the Government of Germany lest they should take our islands; therefore we have accepted another treaty with Germany. I wish to make clear to your Majesty, in consequence, that I have accepted the treaty against my will, likewise against the will of my government, but I have accepted it on account of my fear, for I have thought that if your Government should be set up in these islands then that treaty will be of no effect.

I have entreated the English consul here to make clear to your Majesty all the reasons of our fear which have led us to accept this treaty and to make clear to your Majesty the meaning of that treaty, and to inform your Majesty of the great regard of myself and Government for your Majesty and the Government of England, and our great desire to give our islands to the Government of your Majesty.

I respect extremely the Government of your Majesty, and I trust that speedily you will receive favorably our petition.

I am,

MALIETOA, King of Samoa,

MALIETOA, King of Samoa. Her Majesty the QUEEN OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are other papers connected with this offer which I will not read, but may possibly hand to the Reporter

These negotiations or offers extended during the whole of the year, and from the close of 1883 to November 5, 1884, the German Government remonstrated in the most vigorous manner against this proposed annexation. I read now an extract from Mr. Bates's statement:

During December the German Government communicated, through Sir E. Malet at Berlin and Count Munster at London, the information received by it of efforts on the part of the King of Samoa to obtain a British protectorate, and that private individuals had been working in the islands of Samoa and Tonga for British annexation, and requesting an assurance on that subject, and that the Government of Samoa should be informed that such a movement was disapproved by Her Majesty's Government.

Thereupon the German Government remonstrated vigorously against this proposed annexation and insisted upon it that it would be a violation of the treaty.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator right here, if it will not disturb him-

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Is there anything in any of the proceedings that took place in Samoa after the date of the treaty which the Senator has had read, indicating that any authority there, however set up, whether King Malietoa or the pretender set up by the Germans, has admitted the title of the United States to this property?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, Mr. President, it is admitted distinctly and expressly in the treaty between Germany and Samoa

Mr. HALE. I am not speaking about an outside power; but are there any such declarations? I am asking because I desire information; I have not been able to find them. I do find declarations repeatedly made by King Malietoa which conflict with the idea that he acknowledged that the United States had any territorial rights there. Now I have not been able to find, as perhaps the Senator has, declarations by any authority of Samoa indicating that they consider that because of that treaty the United States has any actual right there.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is sufficient to say that it is expressly granted by treaty, recognized subsequently by the German and English treaties, and by description, and I have seen nothing in these papers that cells it in operation.

papers that calls it in question.

Mr. HALE. Take it right here. As late as November 16, 1888, what does the king mean in saying:

The land we are on is Samoan and British, and I wish expressly to inform you that there is no treaty which has been made between Samoa and either Germany, British, or America, or France that reads thus: "If the Samoans are at war with one another they must keep away from their (foreigners') lands."

For this reason we can not go away to another place to carry on our war, because the Samoans are fighting on Samoan soil, and we shall have to please ourselves how and where we fight in Samoa, because we still retain our sovereignty.

There is an express declaration as late as 1888 that the then king of Samoa—not the one set up by the Germans, but the one we are supposed to sympathize with—declared that everything there was Samoan and British, and repudiated the idea that by any treaty anything had been granted to us.

Mr. SHERMAN. I remember very well that complaint was recently made by Mataafa, not Malietoa, of the refusal to allow his troops to pass over German soil in Apia, but there is nothing at all in this that is the slightest denial of our right to the Bay of Pago Pago. The king is not so good a scholar and does not know so much about territorial jurisdiction as my friend from Maine, and therefore does not distinguish between the land and the water between Apia and Pago Pago; but the right to the bay is unquestioned.

Mr. REAGAN. The previous arrangement recognized the sovereignty of Samoa over the bay, over the very ground they had ceded.

Mr. SHERMAN. King Mataafa, not Malietoa, was there only contending for what was his right if he was the king. He wanted to pass his troops over German land in the principal island to attack Tamasese, and he insisted that the dominion and sovereignty of that island had never been surrendered. He was right. That land was in one of the villages forming the district of Apia, and therefore has no connection with this Pago Pago.

with this Pago Pago.

Mr. President, this brings me to another very strange proceeding, and that is a treaty made by Germany on the 10th of November, 1884, only two days before King Malietoa had piteously begged the Queen of England to take Samoa into her embraces. The German Government, or the German consul, rather, because he seems to be supreme there, entered into a treaty on the 10th of November, 1884, which is bitterly complained of by Malietoa, bitterly complained of by the authorities, and released to by him in his letter to the oneen. The German consul. and referred to by him in his letter to the queen. The German consul, with military force, as he charges, compelled him to sign a treaty and then refused to give him a copy of it or to read it to him. Whether that be so or not I do not know, because I think there must be a good many statements in these documents that can not be relied upon as absolute verities. But the fact is that the treaty of November 10, 1884, was ratified or approved in the first instance by the Berlin Government and was communicated by it to our Government. An appeal was made by the German Government to the American Government to acquiesce in that treaty of November 10, 1884, which practically made German power supreme over Samoa. It established a German council to rule and govern the country, and superseded the municipal board of consuls. A copy of that treaty is contained on pages 5 and 6 of the document I now hold in my hand.

Mr. FRYE. And Malictoa repudiated that treaty.
Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. But not with standing Malictoa said it was done under duress, and they refused to give him a copy of it, and he did not know what was in it, it was sent to Germany and treated by the Germans as a valid treaty, and here is a long document communicating it to Mr. Frelinghuysen, then Secretary of State, February 24, 1885

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Ohio if the United States Government ever became a party to that convention?

Mr. SHERMAN. Never. It was finally abandoned by all. Mr. Alvensleben said:

The Imperial Government intends to ratify this convention in consonance with Article VIII, and to see to it that the provisions of the same are carried out.

While informing the Government of the United States hereof, the Imperial Government expresses the hope that its efforts to introduce order into Samoa and to obtain guaranties for a peaceful development of this group of islands will meet with that appreciation and assistance on the part of the American Government which the intercommunion of our interests in the islands and the friendly relations between the German Empire and the United States lead us to expect.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, in acknowledging the receipt of that paper, which he does in a formal way, adds:

The interesting points presented in this communication will doubtless receive full consideration at the hands of my successor in office, to whom I take pleasure in leaving it, inasmuch as it is deemed inopportune to prejudge the future course of events in this relation during the brief remaining term of the present administration.

This was of the date of February 24, 1885, and he naturally turned it over to his successor.

One provision of the alleged treaty of November 10, 1884, is as follows:

A German-Samoan council of state shall be formed. To it shall belong the German consul or his representative, two Samoans, one of whom shall be appointed by the king, the other by the vice-king, with the advice and consent of the Taimua and Faipule, and two Germans, who shall be appointed by the German consul.

In other words, they provide for an exclusive German board of control, with almost absolute power over Apia, the region which had been specially set aside as neutral territory by the three nations, open to all the vessels of these three nations, and to be governed by the consuls of all nations that might become parties to the arrangement. This agreement of November 10, 1884, was at once denounced and repudiated by the British Government. It was communicated to us, and Mr. Bayard in due time stated the objections to it; but even before this occurred and before Mr. Bayard had come into office the German Government itself, on the remonstrance of Great Britain, repudiated it and it fell still-born.

I bring forward these facts to show that dependencies of Great Britain endeavored through colonial agents—not through the Government of Great Britain, but by its colonial agents—to bring about the annexation of these islands to New Zealand. Germany also, on November 10, 1884, entered into an agreement by which they would have established an absolute German government in these islands, and, as I will show you after a while, the United States, not to be behindhand, at one time by Mr. Greenebaum, its consul, asserted the power of the United States and raised the flag of the United States in Apia over that of Samoa, and thus in effect asserted a protectorate over Apia. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. President, after this treaty had become abortive, then the German consul took a different tack in respect to this matter. He issued a proclamation of the date of January 23, 1885, practically taking possession of Apia. Here is the proclamation, on page 212.

The German consul wrote this letter of the same date, directed to His Majesty, King Malietoa:

On the 6th of November of last year your Highness and your Government appeared before the German consulate to humble themselves.
You acknowledged thereby that you had for a long time disregarded German treaty rights.

I do not think it necessary to read all of it.

In a letter which your Highness wrote to me on the 20th of November you say that it is generally known that Samoa wasto be taken by force by the German Government.

Since then the followers of your Highness have not ceased to malign Germany.

Seumanu and Lauati have repeatedly, in meetings, designated Germany as a robber land, as a country of slavery, and as a country without religion. Under these circumstances it was impossible to fulfill the articles of the agreement of the 10th November.

So he repudiates those articles.

Germany can no longer look upon this state of affairs with equanimity, and I, as representative of the Imperial German Government in Samoa, had to concert measures which were likely to secure the rights and interests of German subjects in Samoa.

subjects in Samoa.

For this purpose I shall, in the name of the Imperial German Government, and subject to the approval of the same, take possession, as security, of all the land which now constitutes all the municipality of Apia, as far as your Highness and your government's sovereign rights are concerned, and the Imperial Government will so long assume these sovereign rights until an understanding has been successfully arrived at with the Government of Samoa which will make German interests secure in Samoa, and will make difficulties such as heretofore have arisen impossible in future.

As a public manifestation of this taking possession, there will be landed in Mulimu, this morning at 9 o' clock, a detachment of imperial officers and seamen, and the imperial fing will be hoisted there.

At the same time I give your Highness the assurance that no hostile action toward Samoa is connected therewith. No one will be molested, and no house or property of Samoans will be injured. I expect, however, that the Samoans themselves will commit no hostile action. Only misfortune would be the result to your Highness and Samoa.

May it prosper with your Highness.

STUEBEL,

STUEBEL, Imperial German Consul pro ten

What was threatened was done. So, practically, Apia was taken under German control. I do not now refer to the controversy to express an opinion on its merits, for the American consul and the British consul protested against the acts of the German consul and often refer to it. It is not necessary that I should do so. I wish simply to emphasize the action of the local officers of these two great powers, acts not denied but justified by the party committing them.

These acts however having in december 1.

These acts, however, having in due course of time reached Germany, were disclaimed by that power, although the consul was still retained in office. A formal communication was made to Mr. Kasson by the direction of Prince Bismarck and reported to Mr. Frelinghuysen on the 9th of February, 1885, in which the German minister communicated to Mr. Veges at the communication of the february to th cated to Mr. Kasson a telegram from the German consul, dated Samoa, January 28, setting out in substance what I have already read, this proclamation and notification and what he had done under it, and then disclaimed the act of the consul-general. He said:

They had no intention to violate the understanding with the United States and England, but, on the contrary, would maintain it. They neither intended to take possession nor to establish a protectorate there, but would adhere to the status quo. He desired my Government to know promptly that if the consular not signified either, it was unauthorized, and would be disavowed.

The same communication passed from the German Government to the English Government.

It was about this time that some question was made as to American rights in the municipality of Apia, and they are thus stated by Mr.

The municipality convention, although signed by our representative, has never been ratified by this Government, and, consequently, ratifications have not been exchanged by us, as they have been between Great Britain and Germany. It may, therefore, be an open question whether our tacit acceptance of that convention and the entrance de facto of our consul into the municipal council of Apia give us any right to resent supposed German interference therewith. Great Britain, to judge from the tenor of correspondence, does actively oppose the German movement as seeming to tend toward a more or less complete German protectorate.

We have received from the German Government positive assurances, voluntarily given, that it has no desire or intention to interfere with the autonomy of the group, or with the relations which the other powers bear thereto in common with Germany. The English Government has publicly expressed its reprobation of any native unovement looking toward the annexation of Samoa to the Fiji system under the British figs. It seems hardly necessary for this Government to make any such formal disclaimer.

Up to this time, although these nations had severally assumed and asserted a jurisdiction and power over Apia, and the German Government had gone further, yet they were constantly disclaiming any pur-pose to affect the joint occupation and arrangement made between these powers and Samoa as to Apia.

Mr. President, soon after the act of the German consul, disavowed by the German Government, it became manifest that the German con-sul and German traders organized the rebellion of Tamasese, headed by a gentleman by the name of Weber, who is at the head of the German trading firm in Samoa and was formerly consul. I wish to say here that nearly all the acts inconsistent with our treaty stipulations were done either by German consuls or by German and English traders, and perhaps American traders interested in the commerce of that country are not free from blame. All the acts complained of came from the struggle or business strife of local authorities or traders for power and influence over the people of Samoa. That is shown all through these papers.

On pages 172 and 173, in the statement of Mr. Bates, he says:

On pages 172 and 173, in the statement of Mr. Sates, he says:

In spite of that fact, it remains true that immediately after the raising of the imperial flag a partial disruption of the existing Samoan Government occurred; that the vice-king, therefore, acting in harmony and co-operation with the government, departed from Mulinuu, after stating just before doing so that he was going to leave; that the Germans were now going to support him, and that he was going to set up a government at Lulumoega. With this man, who thus became the head of a rebellion, the relations of Dr. Stubel, so long as he remained in Samoa, were close and intimate; so much so that in last June, during the efforts to promote peace among the natives, he conducted negotiations between the consuls and Tamesese; and although his government recognized, and still recognizes officially, the government of Malietoa, he was the agent through whom all communications with those in rebellion were made, and at whose instance they disbanded their armed forces.

In addition to this, Mr. Weber, the head of the large German company in which are centered the principal German interests of the islands, at the time of the outbreak was openly active in promoting schemes for bringing about a revolution, and from that time to the present was, almost without attempt at concealment, largely engaged in the supplying of arms to the insurgents.

This sale of arms to the natives was considered both by the English

This sale of arms to the natives was considered both by the English and Americans as a grave offense. The Governments of Great Britain and the United States had provided not only by their laws but in their treaty arrangements that fire-arms should not be furnished to the native inhabitants there, while the Germans did supply them, according to the statement of Mr. Bates and according to other admitted statements here on record.

The German fleet made anchor at Apia some time in May, 1886, with several vessels. A communication was addressed by the secretary, Selu, as he signs himself, of His Majesty Malietoa, King of Samoa, to Admiral Knorr, commander of the fleet, as follows:

Sir: I am commanded by His Majesty Malietos, King of Samos, to express his sorrow at the strange and remarkable treatment to which His Majesty has been subjected by the officers and servants of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Germany.

Then he goes on:

His Majesty the King of Samoa has for years humbled himself to Germany, or rather to its unworthy representatives here, Dr. Stuebel and Mr. Weber, in order to maintain peace, but is now determined to appeal direct to the people and Government of America and England for sympathy and assistance upon a full statement of the whole matter.

His Majesty being bewildered and alarmed by your conduct, and not knowing to what extent the violence of Dr. Steubel and Mr. Weber may yet lead you, has, after consultation with his ministers, felt compelled to invoke the assistance of the United States consul, under whose guardianship he has placed the Samoan flag, and to whose charge he has intrusted the safety of his people.

To that very humble and almost abject letter from a king one would think this a strange reply of the vice-admiral and chief of the cruising squadron, Admiral Knorr:

CRUISING FLEET, APIA, May 9, 1886.

The Head Chief MALIETOA, Apia:-

He no longer calls him king-

Your letter received, and the following is my answer:

I have not been sent here, as you say in your letter, to settle any difficulties between the Government of Germany and the Government of Samoa.

This is the business of the imperial political representative at Samoa, Consul-General Dr. Stuebel, whose official actions to investigate I have no right to. And also it is not possible for me to treat with a party government which in a rough and unthankful manner opposes the treaty not only, but also offers the rightful German influence most objectionable opposition.

Then there is a further communication more insulting in its character and detail, signed by von Holzendorff, captain-lieutenant and flag-lieutenant, which is also addressed to the head chief, Malietoa, no longer king, according to their idea. Mr. GRAY. I am listening to the Senator with great interest. He said awhile ago that these acts of the German admiral and the German people in Samoa which he has been recounting were inconsistent with our treaty stipulations. Will he be kind enough to state what those stipulations were?

Mr. SHERMAN. I read them. I think the Senator was not in. I read them in the earlier part of my remarks. I may allude to them again before I conclude. I would rather keep up the chain of events so as to show the history and give a statement of facts.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him, but I have read the treaty carefully and I can find no treaty stipulation which bore on the act which the Senator is recounting.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was after the arrival of the German fleet, it was after these insults to the king, after the organization of the rebellion of Tamasese and the sale of arms to him and while the German flag was still flying over Samoa, that Berthold Greenebaum, United States consul, on the 13th of May, 1886, raised the United States flag at the request of Malietoa over the public buildings. For a time that had a very happy effect. The immediate result of this act, unauthorized as it was, checked the actions of the German local authorities. The act of the consul was done 6,000 miles away from Washington, and, whether authorized or not, checked the course of the German consul. Soon after Greenebaum raised the American flag the three consuls again joined in a declaration that Tamasese had never been recognized by either of them as king, but that Malietoa was king. I insert this proclamation:

PROCLAMATION.

We, the consuls of Germany, Great Britain, and the United States of America hereby give notice that we and our Governments do not, and never have, in any way, ever recognized Tamasses as King of Samoa, and order all Samoans to return to their homes, and remain quiet and peaceable.

And we further demand the continued enforcement of the convention, especially with regard to the neutral territory of Apia.

DR. STUEBEL.

In. STUEBEL,
Imperial German Consul.
WILFRED POWELL,
Her Britannic Mojesty's Consul.
B. GREENEBAUM,
United Stat's Consul.

The act of our consul was held to be without authority. As soon as the Government of the United States was informed of the act of Consul Greenebaum it was disavowed, and I think properly disavowed, because he had no more right to raise his flag or to assert a protectorate over that region of country than either the German or English consul; but it shows that what was done there by the consuls—the real rulers, leading high-priests you may call them—was done under the pressure of the circumstances, the excitement of the moment, and by each in turn, one after the other, asserting power, not neutrality, in plain violation of the treaty.

I wish to place on record the statement made by the English commissioner, Mr. Thurston, who was sent there at the same time with

On the 13th, however, Malietoa, alarmed by the support he believed was being given by the German authorities to the opposition chief, Tamasese, had applied to the consul for the United States for assistance and protection.

The application was acceded to by Mr. Greenebaum, the United States consul, who on the 14th wrote out a notification, which, in consequence of delay in printing, or for some other unexplained cause, does not seem to have been published until the 16th.

Upon the 16th, after the German squadron had left the port of Apia, the United States consul hoisted the Samoan flag under the American colors, as an indication that he had, on behalf of his Government, assumed a protectorate over Samoa.

On the same day that the German fleet left, Her Majesty's ship Diamond ar-

On the same day that the German fleet left, Her Majesty's ship Diamond arrived, and on the 20th the United States ship of war Mohican also anchored at Apia.

Such was the state of things in the spring of 1886. Practically the German power had been established in Apia, and practically King Malietoa had been deposed. He was excluded from Apia, and Tamasese was recognized by the German authorities. There was no pretense of an election of Tamasese. There was no claim that Malietoa had done anything, except that he did not conform to the wishes of the German consul. At this stage, while both the German and American flags were flying in Apia and the hostile forces were facing each other, the consuls happily agreed to the proclamation already quoted. Then, as stated by Mr. Thurston—

The German flag was then lowered, the attachment upon the municipality of Apia removed, and a joint proclamation issued that neither the consuls nor the respective Governments did, or ever had, "in any way recognized Tamasses as King of Samoa."

This shows that an agreement of the consuls was peace in Samoa, and a disagreement was war between Malietoa and Tamasese.

That was the state of things on the 1st of June, 1886. Then it was that Mr. Bayard undertook to bring about a conference of the three great powers in order to establish peace and a solid government in that country. The telegrams and the correspondence are contained in this document. Germany promptly acceded to the proposition that the German minister here should meet with Mr. Bayard and the English minister in conference, and the three were freely to confer about these matters. When they got together they had not the information upon which they could act, and they then agreed that each should send a confidential agent of its own to Samoa to report separately to each government and thus furnish a foundation for an agreement, or at least the facts of the situation. This proposition was agreed to, and Mr. Bates was selected as the American commissioner and was sent there. Mr. Travers was the German commissioner, and Mr. Thurston was sent from England. These gentlemen met there, but it was found that there was a radical difference among them as to their instructions and as to the objects that they had to accomplish. It is stated here by Mr. Bates in his elaborate report of his mission, extracts from which I shall have occasion to read:

Which I shall have occasion to read:

In our joint conference two points were developed upon which Mr. Travers differed essentially from Mr. Thurston and myself. The first related to the end to be accomplished. Mr. Thurston and I understood clearly that the object in view was to compass the establishment and maintenance of an autonomous native government, to be supported so far as necessary by the joint influence and action of the three powers. Mr. Travers did not communicate to us the precise nature of his instructions on this point. He was, however, very clear and explicit at that time in the statement of his own conviction that no autonomous native government was at all practicable.

Now comes a feature of this negotiation that I can not explain from a documents before us. These agents were sent out. Their reports the documents before us. These agents were sent out. Their reports in due time came back. The conference at Washington adjourned from time to time to await this information from Samoa. The information desired is stated at great length in the reports I hold in my hand. Each report was communicated to the other governments. Yet, after they had been made, before the conference could act upon the matter and ever resulting the investigation of the conference could act upon the matter and even pending the investigation, the German consul deposed Mali- | deal with. The Senator may, perhaps, see that I do not care to enter etoa, set up Tamasese, brought him with an armed force into Apia, and there installed him in office as king. Malietoa, who seems to have been a kind man, wishing to avoid bloodshed, was persuaded to preserve the peace by the American consul, Mr. Sewall, acting under instructions. He is evidently an intelligent man, of education and culture, who conscientiously performed to him a disagreeable duty. Under the order of the Senate he has been examined under oath and gives a full and no depth a very accurate statement of the whole proceed. a full and, no doubt, a very accurate statement of the whole proceeding in his testimony. He, under instructions from the State Department, persuaded Malietoa to preserve the peace under every circum-

It was perfectly manifest upon the face of the papers and in the opinion of our naval officers then present that Malietoa could in a single day have beaten down the rebellion of Tamasese, for, strange to say, the opposing forces were not very far apart in hostile camps or villages and had been for a long time. Malietoa was ready to attack Tamasese; he wanted to do it; but he was persuaded by the American consul, and by the English consul as well, under no circumstances whatever to make the attack.

While this state of things was existing the German fleet came into the port of Apia and there set up Tamasese, proclaimed the deposition of King Malietoa, and sought to capture him. The king, knowing how feeble was his power against the armed forces of the German Empire then present, surrendered, went on board of a German ship, and is now a prisoner in the custody of the Germans.

Mr. President, this is the worst feature of the case, because at the very time this thing was done there were negotiations going on at Washington between the high functionaries of the three powers to secure upon a sound and good and honest basis the restoration of the status quo, the maintenance of the local government in Samoa, and the joint protectorate of these three commercial powers in harmony with existing treaties.

But Malietoa was a prisoner. The Senator from Alabama asked me awhile ago if I would ask to restore him. I do not say anything about that; I leave that to the powers that are negotiating; but it would seem to me that if exact justice was done between these parties Malietoa ought to be restored; that the status quo ought to be secured; and that these several powers ought to act in harmony together, like great Christian nations, to preserve the peace there, if possible, and to provide a local government in a lawful way in harmony with the rights of the different nations. That would seem to me to be the natural course

I am not stating these facts and circumstances for the purpose of saying who is wrong or who is right, or whether the Germans were justified in the course they pursued in regard to Malietoa. I can only say that in these papers I do not find that justification. If you turn to the diplomatic papers you will find that Prince Bismarck, whose strong mind and imperial will are shown in all the papers contained in this book, emanating from him, always from beginning to end in every instance asserts the rights of each of the three powers to equal rule, but insists as a matter of policy that it would be better to place the government of these islands under the control of one of the powers, and as Germany, as he claims, has the largest interest there, the largest property interest at least, it had better be placed under German control and power, providing, however, treaty stipulations to protect Englishmen and Americans in their rights there.

That is now the point of controversy between these two nations. do not intend to detail the events that followed, the continued civil war, the setting up of another king. Malietoa having gone, being a prisoner, his adherents, instead of yielding, set up Mataafa as king under the name of Malietoa Mataafa. The word "Malietoa" meaning king, he announced his name as Malietoa Mataafa. Henow claims to be king, he announced his name as Malletoa Mataala. He now claims to be king, and he seems to have the popular will, the popular feeling, and the military strength on his side. He has been fighting the battles that have been recently fought. They have not been fought in the name of the former Malietoa. He is a prisoner, God knows where, no doubt in safe custody, but Mataafa has been set up by the chiefs according to their local law, and Tamasese is treated by them as a rebel. They have been willing at any time to fight him, but were held back. been willing at any time to fight him, but were held back. According to all the testimony in all the papers that are laid before us it would seem that if all European power was withdrawn from those islands Mataafa would promptly become king. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MORGAN. If it would not interrupt the Senator, I should like to ask him a question. The Senator refers to the pending conference between the German Government, the British Government, and the Government of the United States in regard to Samoan affairs, and, as I understand him coverts that the Asthenius of Maliaton and the interview. understand him, asserts that the dethroning of Malietoa and the introduction of Tamasese into the royal authority there was the worst feature of the whole case. Does the Senator think that that act on the part of the German Government violated the original treaty that we had ith Samoa?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not intend to discuss the question of treaty I leave that to the diplomatic powers for the present. I am merely giving a statement of facts to show the situation of affairs there the present President, Mr. Cleveland, and his successor must have to upon the question of the construction of a treaty in the open Senate, nor the duty imposed upon the President of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Ohio, I suppose, would admit, or state perhaps to the Senate and to the public, that there was nothing in the conference between the three powers that was at all obligatory on any one of them that they should remain in conference. There was no treaty engagement or convention engagement by which they agreed that they would go into conference?

Mr. SHERMAN. There was no treaty engagement, but there was that understanding which grows out of an agreement of three great powers to have high officers of each meet together to confer on the subject. It is not in the nature of an agreement-

Mr. MORGAN. But it is in the nature of a discourtesy, taking this strong action pending the conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think so, but then I do not care now to discuss or criticise the conduct of the German Government. They give their own reasons, and Prince Bismarck is able to defend himself. I do not go into that discussion, but I may say that it seems to me that pending the conference in Washington, while Bates and his comrades were gathering the facts, and before those facts could be acted upon by the respective governments, these three conferees being in this city, that no action should have been taken by either of the powers to change the status, and especially that no such action should have been taken at Samoa as the deposition of one king and the setting up another.

Prince Bismarck in one of the letters excuses the German minister because he was absent in Europe on his regular leave, and says he will no doubt return in due season. All of the parties seem to treat this conference as an existing thing, and it is still open. In the very last communication from Prince Bismarck printed here, he speaks of it as being a matter that can yet be arranged, and I trust it will be arranged.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question right there. Was any notice given by the German Government at all that they regarded this pending conference to be terminated, that is, prior to the time when they deposed Malietoa?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no. The deposition of Malietoa was during the time of these events, shortly after Bates had gone there.

Mr. GEORGE. Was any notice given by the German Government of the intended proceedings to depose him?

Mr. SHERMAN. They generally gave notice after the proceedings were had.

Mr. GEORGE. Not before?

Mr. DOLPH. Notice was given six days prior to the actual fact.
Mr. GEORGE. How was that?

Mr. GEORGE. How was that? Mr. DOLPH. Notice was given to our Government in Washington six days before the thing was done in Samoa

Mr. SHERMAN. I think you will find that diplomatic forms have been observed throughout, with a polite request that our Government will accede or agree to them, etc.

Mr. FRYE. The diplomatic forms were all observed, do I understand the Senator to say?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, the forms were observed.

Mr. FRYE. What! In giving a notice when the Germans knew that it was an absolute impossibility for the United States to receive the

Mr. SHERMAN. That was in form all right, but the substance was not observed. The notice did not allow time for this Government to act or to advise our authorities in Samoa what to do.

Mr. MORGAN. What notice does the Senator from Maine refer to?
Mr. SHERMAN. Since then, only the other day, I have here a very interesting account from there. It seems that one of our newspaper correspondents, Mr. Klein, is becoming a knight-errant out there. I have his account here.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio, as this feature of the matter he is discussing now is new to me, what notice does he refer to as having been given by the German Government in respect of this conference?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] interrupted with a statement about the notice of six days. That did not apply to the conference at all.

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. That applied to the movements in deposing the

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Mr. SHERMAN. And setting up Tamasese. Mr. MORGAN. And a demand of $13,000.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that it was a notice from the German minister here to our Secretary of State six days before the actual deposition and deportation of King Malietoa from Samoa that the German Government intended to make war upon Malietoa.

Mr. FRYE. But that notice was given here in the city of Washington six days before the deposition, when it was perfectly understood that it would take thirty days to get any word from our Government to the islands, and therefore perfectly understood that the notice was about the conference at Washington, to which he gives no doubt great attention. The other Senators are talking about the notice to our Government about the proposed deposition of the king.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Alabama is talking of a notice I

Mr. MORGAN. The question put by the Senator from Mississippi

[Mr. GEORGE], as I understand it, was whether any notice had been given by Germany of her intention to abandon the conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there was.

Mr. MORGAN. The notice given, however, as I understand it, was this: That the German Government had occasion to make war or to prosecute hostilities against Malietoa and the party that followed him as individuals, separating them from the Samoan Government and regarding them as a faction in the Samoan Government that deserved punishment for certain trespasses alleged to have been committed upon the German plantations. That is what I understood was the notification that was given six days before the troops were landed for the purpose of executing that purpose on the part of Germany; but no notice was given of the termination of the conference, and so far as I have ever heard about it, that conference is on now.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from Alabama say the conference is still on?

Mr. MORGAN. It has never been determined. There has been no end put to it

Mr. SHERMAN. When I get a chance, I will go on.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is entitled

Mr. SHERMAN. Two interesting statements were made by Prince Bismarck. One is communicated by Mr. Pendleton to Mr. Bayard of the date of October 13, 1887.

Mr. HOAR. Give the page. Mr. SHERMAN. It is on page 85. He there refers to the conference that had been held, and makes some statements in regard to the reason why the German minister could not be there at the time. But the more formal and much the longer statement of Prince Bismarck to Baron von Zedtwitz, which was communicated to our Government, is contained on page 96 of this document. He goes over the whole ground, complaining of the American consuls, of their unfriendly acts to the German power, setting out his views as to the best mode of government in the Samoan Islands, the substance of which is that the power having the largest interest, which was Germany, should have practically the executive control, with proper stipulations protecting the existing rights of both the United States and Great Britain.

He goes into the subject at full length. It is rather in the nature of an attack upon the course adopted by our various consuls. Mr. Bayard replied at great length, and I must confess that the reply of Mr. Bayard, while able and containing a fair résumé of the whole matter, does not present in a vigorous way the repeated, continuous, and cruel conduct of the German consuls and traders in violation of the treaty rights of the United States and those of Samoa, for whom we had pledged our friendly offices.

Prince Bismarck with great acuteness attacks Consul Greenebaum for what was afterwards disavowed by the Government, and also our present consul, Mr. Sewall, and he complains of them. Mr. Bayard, instead of answering these complaints easily as he might have done, does not review and state in an energetic way the wrongs committed by Dr. Stuebel and Weber. Mr. Bayard might have retorted upon Prince Bismarck a full statement of the facts that I have stated here imperfectly, of the disregard of the German Government of the rights of the several powers and also its conduct toward the king. It seems to me that the time was opportune for him to present the argument of our side. But I make this mild criticism with no desire to find fault.

Mr. GEORGE. On what page is Mr. Bayard's dispatch to Bismarck? Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator be kind enough to state what dis-Mr. MORGAN.

patch it is to which he has referred?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a very long dispatch, covering, I think, nearly twenty pages.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it the one commencing on page 107?

Mr. SHERMAN. It commences on page 107 and terminates at page 121. I do not wish to be regarded as criticising the ability of this paper, but it seems to me that Prince Bismarck has never had from the American Government its views of the various acts that I have repeated here as to the harsh conduct of the German consuls and traders to the king and people of Samoa. It is more like the grasping rapacity of a trading company than the treatment by a great government of a weak and humble people. I would rather see Prince Bismarck's reply to such an arraignment than a reply by our Government to a charge of unfriendly feeling of certain American consuls, excited no doubt by the harsh treatment of the people to whom they were accredited. So far as I can see, Mr. Sewall, in his conduct at Samoa, was wise, for-bearing, and just. Certainly in his correspondence and testimony, which is full of information, he appears as a man of ability good heart. which is full of information, he appears as a man of ability, good heart, and of education, who, so far as I can see, has done nothing deserving criticism. All that he feels now is the self-reproach that in obeying his instructions he prevailed upon the king not to put down the rebell-ion of Tamesese. I gather, if I can read his testimony aright, that this is the feeling with Mr. Sewall, that he was compelled by his in-structions to prevent any blood being shed by Malietoa, and in that way, while actually persuading and succeeding in persuading him to desist and not to shed blood, he exposed Malietoa to the deposition and the imprisonment which followed.

Mr. MORGAN. To what paper of Mr. Sewall's does the Senator

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that the British consul joined in that persuasion with Mr. Greenebaum, that Malietoa should not have blood

Mr. SHERMAN. He did. Both consuls joined in prevailing on Malietoa not to exercise any force.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to be informed as to what paper the Senator from Ohio refers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of Mr. Bayard's?
Mr. MORGAN. Of Mr. Sewall's.
Mr. SHERMAN. I refer to his testimony here. I could not refer to it in detail. Mr. Sewall states in his testimony, if I remember aright, something like this: He was instructed-

Mr. MORGAN. I beg to interrupt the Senator from Ohio by stating, if he is not aware of it, that no statement of Mr. Sewall has ever been made public on this question except what letters may be found from him in the documents communicated by the President of the United States to the Senate. If there is any outside testimony or statement, that is not up for consideration now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I am justified in referring to the testi-mony of Mr. Sewall, even if it is not made public. In debating this question in the Senate I have felt a little embarrassed. I would have quoted largely from Mr. Sewall's testimony, but as it has not yet been made public I think I am justified in stating the general result. Some time or other, no doubt, it will be made public.

me or other, no doubt, it will be made public.

Mr. GEORGE. It is testimony taken before whom?

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. In executive session?

Mr. SHERMAN. In executive session.

Mr. MORGAN. Here is the difficulty, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. Morodan. Here is the dimentally, it the Schator will allow me.

We are forced here to discuss the Samoan question in open session—

Mr. SHERMAN. Then make it public.

Mr. MORGAN. Upon testimony to which we dare not allude.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have scarcely alluded to it except for this one reason, and I think it ought to have been made public. It should have been made public before this time.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not complete.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know anything about its completeness.

It looks pretty complete. It is very full.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not complete, however.

Mr. DOLPH. It was taken under a resolution introduced in open

Mr. SHERMAN. The testimony, I may say, was taken under a resolution introduced in open session, and this gentleman was called back from San Francisco to give this testimony. While I have not quoted from it, I have felt justified in stating its general results.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the testimony been printed?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in print, and a resolution of the Senate can at any time make it public.

Mr. HOAR. It has not been printed for the use of the Senate? Mr. SHERMAN. It was printed for the use of the committee.

There is another important fact that I wish to bring out here as clearly as I can. In the recent communication submitted to us by the President of the United States it would appear from a debate that oc-curred in the British Parliament inferentially, I admit, that the British Government will probably acquiesce in German occupation, or in the views taken by Prince Bismarck as to the best mode of occupying for the benefit of the treaty powers the municipality of Apia. I gather that from the document sent to us by the President of the United States on the 16th of January, 1889, on pages 16 and 17, which gives an extract from the London Times of November 18, 1888, in which it appears that a member of Parliament had put the question to the government, calling for information in regard to Samoa, and asking specifically whether the British Government would acquiesce in the claim made by Germany of having practically controlling power in Samoa. I will not read this answer, but I refer to it as a public document that anybody may look at.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the number of the document? Mr. SHERMAN. It is Senate Executive Document No. 68, under date of January 16, 1889, the last document we have. From this it would appear inferentially, at least, that the Government of Great Brit-ain, now represented as it is by Lord Salisbury as foreign minister, will acquiesce in substantial German supremacy in that country. Whether my inference is right or not, I leave it for every one to judge without reading it all through.

I said a moment ago that I wished to call attention to another feature of this contest. I refer to one of our American citizens—I suppose him to be, although it is not certain whether Mr. Klein is an American citizen or not. At any rate, it seems he has been playing the knighterrant there in Samoa. The Government of the United States is in no way responsible for it, and in no way can it control his action. He is a newspaper reporter for one of the San Francisco papers. I have here his statement, covering over a page of the San Francisco Examiner, giving his account of the recent troubles in Samoa, giving an account of a fight which resulted in a loss of twenty killed to the Germans and a large number of wounded.

I also have here in another slip taken from a London paper an article giving the German account, in which they charge that Mr. Klein was the commander-in-chief of the party of Mataafa; that he fired the first gun; that he was the leader of the hosts on that side, which seems to have inflicted a severe loss upon the Germans. In the statement of this man, somewhat vain glavious is his stale, he don't have inflicted to the comman the statement of this man, somewhat vain glavious is his stale, he don't have the comman that the comman that the statement of the comman that the commandation that the commandati this man, somewhat vain-glorious in his style, he denies that, and shows that he had nothing to do with it though he went along. He sympathized no doubt with them. He went along as a newspaper man and took note of the fight. You can not tell from his account that he took part in it. The account is given in detail, and the Government of the United States is in no sense responsible. But this recent attack shows clearly that Mataafa, at present assuming to be king, has the power there over public opinion, and if Tamasese was not supported by foreign influence and held there under the guns of the German fleet, if he was not protected and defended in that way, there would soon be an end of the trouble by the success of Mataafa over his competitor. Such is the state of things existing there. I have carefully avoided making—
Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator a question for information at some convenient time to him. I see he is near ending his narrative, and I will ask him now. I see that Sir J. Ferguson, in his colloquy, in answer to a question in the House of Commons December 18, 1888, says:

His honorable friend-

That is, the person putting the question-

His honorable friend was aware that some time ago an arrangement was made with other governments by which our influence in the Pacific was to a great extent limited, the object being to place each group of islands under one European power, to whom the traders might look for the maintenance of law. He hoped it would not be long before the troubles at Samoa were healed.

Taking that sentence in connection with the disavowal of any inconsistent action, with the action of Great Britain in the conference, it would seem to imply that there had been previously some arrangement between Great Britain and Germany looking to the establishment of German control in Samoa.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator misapprehends me. I read the treaty in the beginning between Germany and Great Britain, in which they

Is that the treaty to which this refers?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is, and that expressly reserves the Samoan Islands from the operation of that division, and consequently he did not know, and, questioning the minister hastily, he did not understand it.

Mr. President, the conclusions to which I have come, without wearying the Senate any further, are that the first thing to be done is to assert our power and occupancy and possession of the Bay of Pago Pago, and so much of the shores of the island of Tutuila as is necessary for a coaling station. This is a mere rocky island, comparatively, of a few square miles, but it possesses this magnificent harbor, and one of the amendments to this bill proposes that we shall take possession of it, occupy it erect a coaling station there and such other buildings as may be necessary. That ought to be done immediately, because it is manifest that whatever may happen in regard to controversies in the South Sea Islands, having secured by law and by treaty a foothold there, we ought to secure that, and not treat it as we have done our privileges in the Hawaiian Islands. The Government of the United States undertook, or started to do it some time ago, but without saying anything in respect to the mode in which it was defeated it was finally dropped out of the appropriation bill on the score of economy. If we had had a foothold in this bay as firmly and as strongly as the Germans have theirs in their bay, I believe American interests would not be so endangered as they are to-day.

It needs no war to protect the nation's rights. The mere assertion of those rights, a due regard for them, the expenditure of money there, the storing of coal there, the landing of vessels there—all these are an assertion of power far more powerful, far more influential than protocols or diplomatic correspondence. That we ought to do.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question right there, if he will yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Do the German Government controvert or deny our rights in the island and harbor to which the Senator has alluded?
Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. They are expressly set out in the treaty between Samoa and Germany, and so far as I see in all this correspondence there is no question about it. There is this referred to by some one, that the Germans and English and others have bought land around the bay, but there is no objection to that.

Mr. GEORGE. On the same island?

Mr. SHERMAN. On the same island. There is no objection to that. The Samoans own a good deal, and no doubt plenty of Americans own land there on the shore.

The next thing we should do is what we agreed to do by our treaty with Samoa, to use our friendly offices, and when I say that I mean more than a mere diplomatic representation. We should urge and use that moral power, I will say, of a great nation like ours, interested in this question, in aid of some autonomy, some local government for the people of that island.

Mr. GEORGE. Not threatening war? Mr. SHERMAN. I do not believe in war growing out of this mat-

Mr. GEORGE. I say in our influence not threatening war; not menacing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it necessary to menace anybody. So far as I can see from the statements made by Prince Bismarck and the statements made by the English diplomatists, nowhere do they the statements made by the English diplomatists, nowhere do they deny our rights and interests there, and although we were not a party to the treaty that set aside Apia, they have freely yielded us equal rights and privileges in Apia, the capital of these islands.

Mr. GEORGE. That is on a different island.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two large islands, Upolu and Savaii. Tutuila, where our harbor is, is a very small island, but far the most valuable for transit purposes. It is right on the line of the transocean navigation from San Francisco to New Zealand.

Mr. GEORGE. What treaty rights have we on that large island?

Mr. SHERMAN. None, except those which grow out of the agreement as to Apia and the consular municipality there.

ment as to Apia and the consular municipality there.

Mr. GEORGE. Signed by the consul?

Mr. SHERMAN. The American consul is one of the governors of that island. There are three, but they are subject to the superior power of the German forces just now, as the king set up by them is a mere puppet under the control of the German consul.

We can do all the proper with a three puppers.

We can do all I propose without endangering the peace of this country. I believe this contention can be settled by a straightforward, manly negotiation entered into between these three great Christian powers, to either of whom these little islands must appear to be a mere mote on the ocean; and it would be a shame and a disgrace to our civilization and to our Christianity if these three powerful nations can not agree upon some mode of autonomy, some mode of government for this far-distant region of islands, where we all have equal interests and equal power.

Therefore I do not doubt that in some way or other, by the election of a new king or by some mode of agreement, probably improving their form of government, with the hearty assent of the people of that country, if they are prepared really to assent to anything, a government of that kind may be set up for local purposes there among the islanders, while the great powers may provide for themselves in Apia all the security necessary for their commercial enterprises. That I hope will be done.

Whatever the newspapers may say, there is nothing in the situation that would justify on the part of either nation a breach of the peace until every effort is exhausted to bring about a peaceful and quiet settlement of this controversy. To me it seems the smallest controversy in which the United States could be or has ever been engaged. It does not seem to me that Germany, whose people are like our own, and Great Britain, with their boundless empire, will ever allow the disgrace to be inflicted upon our civilization of having a single man of either of these nations killed in war or contest over this puerile controversy.

That is the way it looks to me.

Now, sir, I say therefore, first, we want to assert our rights and maintain and uphold them, and nobody will call them in question. Next, we want to do what we ought to do to these poor people there who first treated with us, who have leaned upon us, and who have reminded us over and over again that we promised them our good offices, and they understand by that something more than a diplomatic note. This we can accomplish. Therefore, Mr. President, I am willing to vote any sum of money to enable the President either to coning to vote any sum of money to enable the President either to conduct negotiations, to make surveys of the harbors, or to get better information in regard to the country there. I am willing to vote the sum named here and place it at the discretion of Mr. Cleveland or of General Harrison, and I have no doubt with the powers thus given to them to send agents there or to send ships there they will bring about a prompt solution of this small controversy.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President—
Mr. HALE. If the Senator—
Mr. DOLPH. I simply wish to take the floor upon the amendment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DOLPH. I do. Mr. HALE. I wish to make a suggestion as to the order of business. If it is impossible to come to a vote now upon these amendments, if Senators desire to debate them further, I will not seek to keep the Senate here any longer, but I will, before moving to adjourn, ask unanimous consent, or put it in the form of a motion, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock, simply saying that if the debate is to go on upon this bill indefinitely Senators will see the importance of either meeting earlier or having night sessions to dispose of it, in view of the other important matters that are pressing and in view of the short time that remains for the present session of Congress. Now I will move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'cleck.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EVARTS. Will the Senator yield to me a moment to offer an amendment?

Mr. HALE.

I yield for that purpose.

I have been instructed by the Committee on the Mr. EVARTS. Library to present an amendment to this bill now under consideration providing for the removal of the remains of Joel Barlow, who was minister to France and was buried there, the removal and the expense being regulated by the State Department, and I will ask the member of the Appropriations Committee having the bill in charge whether in his judgment this amendment should be proposed to this bill or to the sundry civil bill when it comes up?

Mr. HALE. In answer to the Senator from New York I will say that such matters have been generally placed upon the sundry civil appropriation bill. I think it would be better to refer the proposed amendment to the Committee on Appropriations, and I assure the Senator it shall receive the consideration of the committee.

Mr. EVARTS. That will be the disposition I shall make of it,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York reports an amendment from the Committee on the Library to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which will be received, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 8549) granting a pension to Louisa Rogers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. Dolph] is entitled to the floor on the pending amendment.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. HALE. I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 30, 1889, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 29, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEFICIENCY IN NAVY DEPARTMENT PRINTING AND BINDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of deficiency in appropriations for printing and binding for the Navy Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT DEFICIENCIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes, with Senate amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment to the House bill be non-concurred in, and that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to.

Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. PEEL. What is the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. It is a little bill referring to about 140 acres of land in Kansas.

Mr. RANDALL. If it takes any time I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read again.

The title was again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the amendment of the Senate is quite long.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the Senate amendment be non-concurred in, and that the conference asked for be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the Senate amendment required?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the title of the bill? The title of the bill was again reported.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the amendment ought to be read, so that we may know upon what we are acting.

Mr. RANDALL. If it is to be read it will take a long time, and I will have to object. I have agreed with the friends of the Oklahoma bill not to allow any delay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withhold the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to that.

MRS. R. S. HORTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8) restoring Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-rolls, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2261) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny, with Senate amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withhold that bill. There is a request here from the Senate, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 28, 1889.

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State in two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will be directed to return the bill in accordance with the request of the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DISTRICT COURT OF NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3786) to change the date for the commencement of the March term of the district court of the northern district of Georgia; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY, MO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Ransas City, Kans., not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill, the title of which has just been read, be permitted to lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be done. There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT LA CROSSE, WIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3734) authorizing the construction of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I ask that this bill be considered at this time.

On motion of Mr. DIBBLE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution (Miscellaneous Document No. 79) in relation to the awarding of a contract for the erection of a public building known as the appraiser's warehouse in the city of Chicago, and it was referred to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

PROTEST AGAINST THE ADMISSION OF UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief protest, signed by 13,000 citizens of Utah, protesting against the admission of that Territory as a State, with the letter ascompanying the same.

Mr. DOCKERY. The protest without the names? Mr. BURROWS. Without the names.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The letter and protest are as follows:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

The letter and protest are as follows:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

The Liberal Territorial committee of Utah, representing Democrats and Republicans, respectfully present the protest of citizens of the Territory against the proposal to admit Utah as a State. We are the servants of about 55,000 gentiles, composing the entire gentile population, and this large body of citizens unanimously oppose the scheme which is being so vigorously pushed by the Mormon Church.

Our constituents are an industrious, loyal, and law-abiding people. They are faithful to the laws and traditions of their country. They are equal in intelligence, courage, and energy to those of any community. They have made their homes here, invested their money here, and are fully informed as to the conditions which surround us. Although they are in a minority they have a right to be heard, and the fact that they are unanimous in opposition to the admission of Utah is an unanswerable argument against the proposition. Although they compose but one-fourth of the population of the Territory they pay nearly one-half the taxes. They have opened large and valuable mines and have produced therefrom over $108,000,000. Quite half this sum has been paid to Mormons for labor and supplies. The gentiles have churches of the value of a half million dollars. They support one hundred schools independent of the Territorial school system. They have established hospitals and libraries and enterprising newspapers. They have built magnificent business blocks, and during the past year have expended in building and improvements in Salt Lake City alone upwards of $1,000,000. These people are not mere adventurers; they are not "carpet-baggers." They are American citizens who pay their own way and who bear aloft the banner of progress.

They oppose the admission of Utah as a State because it would be under the tyrannical domination and control of a secret organization commonly called the Mormon Church, with its twenty-cight thousand office-holders.

B

Because the whole scheme has been engineered by the Mormon priesthood, n order that they might intrench themselves behind the barriers of State in order that they might intrench themselves behind the barriers of State rights.

Because it would be a crime against American institutions to clothe a Territory which is un-American in all its tendencies with the powers of a State, and where the iron will of one man dictates what the laws shall be, and who shall make and enforce them.

The statement that has been made upon the floor of Congress that polygamy is dead is false. It is taught and practiced throughout Utah, and if Utah becomes a State, the polygamous practices will be openly and brazenly flaunted in the face of the world, and the American people will be asked, "What are you going to do about it?"

We respectfully submit herewith protests signed by about thirteen thousand people.

O. W. POWERS, Chairman, C. E. ALLEN, Secretary, Liberal Territorial Committee for Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 3, 1889.

NO STATEHOOD FOR UTAH.

The gentiles of Utah, although they represent a minority of the people of the Territory, are loyal to the institutions, laws, and traditions of their country, and believe that they have a right to be heard upon the question whether Utah shall become a State, polygamy perpetuated, and a Commonwealth surrendered to a priesthood. Polygamy is not dead. The treasonable features of Mormonism have not been eliminated, and to give Utah statehood would be a crime.

A COMMON PERIL UNITES US, and therefore without a dissenting voice the gentile Republicans and Democrats of Utah protest against the admission of Utah as a State,

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for re-

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the call of committees. I will state that if that motion be agreed to, I shall ask leave for gentlemen who desire to present reports to file them with the Clerk.

Mr. TAULBEE. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that members desiring to present reports may have leave to file them with the Clerk.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Chair. I have a report to make from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads upon House bill 12109, relating to the railway mail service. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] wishes to submit the views of a minority of the committee. I desire to know whether, if this request

The SPEAKER. This proposition would not cover the presentation of the views of a minority, unless the House should give special permission for that purpose. If there be no objection, leave will be granted to the minority of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to present their views in writing on the bill referred to and have them printed with the report of the majority. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman will send his report to the desk. Is there objection. tion to the request that if the morning hour for the presentation of reports be dispensed with members be permitted to file their reports at the desk? The Chair hears no objection. The question is now on the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Claims, re-ported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2038) for the relief of Maurice G. Griffith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12314) to grant a right of way to the Cherokee Central Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY ROAD, DOVER, TENN.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 11694) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHICAGO, KANSAS AND WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (8, 1903) granting the right of way through the Fort Riley military reservation, Kansas, to the Chicago, Kansas and Western Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VENEZUELA STEAM TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. COTHRAN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported as a substitute for H. Res. 175, a joint resolution (H. Res. 259) for the relief of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ST. CATHARINE ISLAND, GEORGIA.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 12324) for the establishment of a lighthouse station on St. Catharine Island, State of Georgia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OMAHA, DODGE CITY AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 11698) to authorize the Omaha, Dodge City and Southern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORROW introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 260) relating to the government of Samoa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other pur-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause of this bill which was last under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUILDING FOR THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

For the building for the Library of Congress, as authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act approved October 2, 1888, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $500,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into for all the stone required for the exterior walls of said building, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, in making a point of order with reference to this paragraph, I will state that I do so for the purpose of obtaining a ruling from the Chair upon a question which I think is of some importance. The provision of the law of October 2, 1888, was introduced into the sundry civil bill in defiance of the rules of the House, though it seems to have been consented to by the House itself. In that law, at the end of the paragraph relating to this subject, there is a provision that the cost of the building shall be limited to $4,000,-000, in addition to what has already been appropriated. We have a letter from the Chief of Engineers, in whose charge this matter was placed, dated December 1, 1888, and addressed to the Speaker of the House. He makes an estimate of a building which will cost $4,000,000, the plan of which is to be subject to the approval of certain officials of the Government. This estimate is a very close one, as the Chair will see by looking at page 4 of this letter, for it leaves a margin of only $200. Hence it is to be taken as a whole; and accordingly the Chief of Engineers states:

The estimate of cost is based, among other things, upon the assumption, of course, that the work is to be prosecuted vigorously and steadily on a large scale, so as to secure all the advantages and economy of large contracts and a minimum of contingent cost.

This estimate, then, is based upon a sufficient appropriation from year to year to enable him to work to the greatest advantage. Now, he himself makes an estimate of the amount which is needed in order he himself makes an estimate of the amount which is needed in order to come within his estimate; which amount is $1,000,000. The committee have seen fit to report an appropriation of only $500,000, which everybody can see will not bring it within that limit. Now, if the Chair decides that it is absolutely essential that this should come within the limit, to the apprehension of the Chair, then my point of order is good; but if the Chair should decide that the question whether this comes within the limit as mentioned by the Chief of Engineers, or rather, to speak more exactly, as comprehended in the terms of the law, is a matter which rests within the judgment of the Committee of the Whole, then of course my point of order is not good.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has not stated his point of order distinctly. What is the point? Is it against the entire paragraph? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to make the inquiry whether the point of order was directed against the entire paragraph. Mr. REED. My first point of order is against the first part of the paragraph down to the proviso. I will deal with the other afterward.

Mr. RANDALL. I have only to say that I do not think the point of order made by the gentleman is valid. This appropriation of $500,000 is in accordance with law; and the law to which it conforms is referred to. If the gentleman objects to the language, "as authorized by the sundry appropriation act approved October 2, 1888"

Mr. REED. The gentleman will permit me to call his attention to a sentence which I accidentally omitted to read in this letter of the Chief of Engineers:

There should be no interruption or delay for lack of seasonable and sufficient appropriation; otherwise the cost may be increased.

That is my point.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a matter for the judgment of Congress not for the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the question whether this amount comes within the limit of $4,000,000 should be left to the judgment of the Committee of the Whole; therefore the Chair does not feel at liberty to rule out the provision.

Mr. REED. Then the Chair holds that this is left to the Committee of the Whole. I desire, in view of that decision, to offer an amend-

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman wishes to offer an amendment

Mr. REED. Yes; the Chair has ruled upon the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine offers the amendment which will be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to understand this matter. We are now entering on the consideration of the paragraph. Are all the points of order disposed of?

Mr. REED. Down to the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Maine has reserved a point of order upon the proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that we can not take a paragraph in this way, piecemeal. Mr. REED.

We certainly can take the paragraph down to the proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. The paragraph must be taken as a whole.
Mr. REED. I desire to amend it.
Mr. RANDALL. It will be open to amendment when the questions of order are disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the points of order should be decided before the consideration of amendments to the paragraph is entered upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I am perfectly willing that the House may settle the amount-

Mr. REED. I desire, however, to offer a particular amendment. Mr. RANDALL. Before that I wish to have the point of order definitely settled. I am opposed to entering upon amendments until that is settled in the proper order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the proviso if the point of order is made against it.

Mr. REED. I would rather reserve the point of order for the present, for I might prefer that the proviso should remain in under certain circumstances cumstances.

Mr. KANDALL. Just there let me say that the whole paragraph as printed was prepared by the Chief of Engineers, in charge of the matter, and I have it here in his own handwriting.

Mr. REED. As to the amount?

Mr. RANDALL. Let me correct myself, however; I should have said that the whole proviso was in his handwriting. That the para-said that the whole proviso was in his nandwriting. That the paragraph as reported meets his approval.

Mr. RYAN. I will say to my friend from Maine that General Casey, in charge of this building, says that with this proviso in he only requires the amount named in the bill.

Mr. REED. Very well; then I have no point about the proviso, and now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Congress," in line 8, down to and including the word "eight," in line 10, and insert the words "according to plans described by the Chief of Engineers on page 6 of his letter of December 1, 1888, to the Speaker of the House, as printed in Miscellaneous Document No. 12, when approved according to law."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is subject to the point of order.

Mr. REED. How?

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve the point of order against it.
Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine whether that proposes to complete this building under the schedule or plan marked "D?"

Mr. REED. That is it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order against it.

Mr. REED. What is the point of order? Mr. HOLMAN. That it is new legislation.

Mr. REED. But the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations does not make any point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I make the point of order.

Mr. REED. On what ground?

Mr. HOLMAN. On the ground I have just stated.
Mr. RANDALL. I did not make the point of order, but I suppose the point of order suggested rests upon this ground, that the act of October 2

Mr. REED. There is no point of order against that.
Mr. RANDALL. I will state the position exactly. The act of October 2 proposed that the building should be erected for four millions of money, and delegated the whole power, in connection with the care of its construction, to the Chief of Engineers of the Army. It was further provided that his plans for the $4,000,000 build ng should be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior. The actual facts, then, are these, that the officer in charge of the building has made a new report or statement, based upon schedule or plan A, which provides for a $4,000,000 building, and the two officers who are to approve his plans have not yet acted, the consequence of which is that no building has been entered upon since the transier of the control of the work from the commission to the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. REED. Now, I would like to ask whether there is any further point of order, as I would like to answer them scriatim.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only point of order I make is that the amendment changes existing law and is new legislation.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman kindly point out where the new legislation is, and wherein it changes existing law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, the entire proposition contained in the gentleman's amendment is new legislation.

Mr. REED. Where?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is entirely new; the whole provision is new. It is directly in conflict with the proviso of the paragraph.

Mr. REED. Then you rest your point of order on the ground that this is liable to cost more?

Mr. HOLMAN. I rest it on the ground that the proposition is new

Mr. REED. Well, will the gentleman kindly point out in what respect?

Mr. HOLMAN. I say that it is new legislation.

Mr. REED. But in what respect?

Mr. REED. But in what respect?

Mr. HOLMAN. In respect that it is new legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Ah!

Mr. HOLMAN. Entirely new legislation.

Mr. REED. That is the way that the gentleman from Indiana does sometimes when he does not desire to deploy his full force, and his argument becomes less definite the further he goes. Now, if there is nothing further I should like to present my views, and I ask the attention of the House, because I think the whole matter is one of very grave importance. The Chair, it must be borne in mind, with the approbation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, has already decided that the question is one of facts which is within the discretion of the committee, and to be decided by them and not by the Chair. Hence there can by no possibility be anything in the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana so far as he has undertaken to specify. In fact it appears he felt it necessary to withdraw the specifications. In that condition of affairs

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to the fact that the amendment must come within the limit fixed by the law.

Mr. REED. But the Chair decided very promptly and very properly that the question of whether it was limited was a question of fact that belonged to the committee and not to the Chair; and to that decision I hope the Chair will adhere, because it will lead to righteousness and justice.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me, I can perhaps show that the point of order was well taken, that the law of last October or last session limited us to four millions for the construc-Now, then, the amendment, as I understand it, adopts a plan of six millions, and therefore is in conflict with existing law.

Mr. REED. I am arguing on the merits of the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman's amendment was adopted— Mr. REED. Probably; but if the gentleman will wait until I make my point— Mr. CANNON. I will wait with great pleasure. I always listen to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a point of grave importance to the people and to the Treasury of the United States. The Chief of Engineers, under the authority given by law and recognized as an authority in this House and out of it, has seen fit under the law of 1886 to make a report.

He has made that report, of course, in accordance with law, and he has provided two plans. Of course he would not have provided a second plan unless in his apprehension it was one which he was called upon to prepare, and the House will see under that state of facts why it was that he was obliged, as a faithful officer of the Government, to make the second set of plans.

The first set of plans, which are called plans "A," are made for a library under certain restrictions and calculations made by the Chief of Engineers, so definitely that if we adopt the plan and build that building, then at the present increase annually that building will be filled with books from roof to basement in fifty-four years. Inasmuch as we shall naturally accelerate that increase, the probabilities are that in forty-five years from the time that building is finished it will be filled from basement to ceiling with books, and it will have ceased to be an increasing national library such as an increasing nation wants and demands. Therefore the Chief of Engineers, under authority which is presumed to be within the scope of the law, has provided a second series of plans which seem to bear in mind what some gentlemen never have in mind, and that is the growth of this country.

Now, that second series of plans provides that by an increase of expenditures amounting to about $2,000,000, the capacity of the Library will not merely be doubled but will be trebled, so that by an increase of 50 per cent. in expenditure we shall have an increase of 300 per cent. in book-holding capacity. Therefore there can be no question that a lively sense of what was due to the Treasury of the United States, and what was due to the United States itself, actuated the Chief of Engineers in the presentation of this second plan.

Now, then, if the Chair, by following its last decision, can enable us to reach that matter, I have no doubt that the good sense of the House will dispose of it satisfactorily, not only in the interests of the country, which is of the greatest importance, but also in the interest of the Treasury, which is of some importance. This amendment which I present has been very carefully drawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [After a pause.] The Chair begs pardon of the gentleman, as for the moment a pause.] The Chair begs parton of the general as a for the month he overlooked the fact that a point of order was under discussion.

Mr. REED. I was addressing myself to the point of order. It was necessary to make this preliminary statement of facts in order that the Chair might apprehend the exact situation of affairs.

Now, the amendment has been drawn in reference to the provision of the statute of 1888, no section of which has escaped my attention, and the point which I make is this: That there has not been an approval by the proper authorities up to date, and consequently the new plan is left for decision by the proper authorities; and consequently I am violating no law when I propose that this building shall be made according to the second plan, when approved by the proper authorities according to law.

I, therefore, cover all this matter, and as the gentleman from Illi-nois will show from the argument of the gentleman from Indiana, at the time the act of October 2, 1888, was discussed, that I am entirely within the statute. I will refrain from making a quotation which I think he will make.

The only point, therefore, which remains is the question whether this is within the limit of $4,000,000. I expected that that would be a question as to the merits to be determined by the House. But even if the Chief of Engineers thinks this plan will cost $6,000,000—and that will be brought out, and very properly brought out—it will be within the discretion of the House to pass upon that question. The Chair has already decided that it is a matter in the cognizance of the Committee of the Whole, and that has received the high approval of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Therefore, I apprehend that the only point about which there seemed to be any difficulty has been cleared up by the wise and discriminating decision already made by the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. The provisions of the law of last year have not been read. Perhaps the attention of the Chair has not been called to it, and I will ask the Clerk to read the proviso at the top of page 524.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That before any further contracts are let for the construction of said building general plans for the entire construction thereof shall be prepared by or under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, which plan shall be subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the total cost of said buildings shall not exceed $4,000,000, exclusive of appropriations heretofore made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to but add that the question of the limitation on the cost of this building does not necessarily enter into the question of order. The law prescribes what shall be done, that the plan shall be prepared by the Chief of Engineers subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Interior, and that is the provision that is especially assailed by the amendment submitted. That amendment proposes a different mode; that is to say, it proposes that the particular plan referred to, when approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, shall be the plan on which this building shall be constructed. It is therefore a clear and palpable change of existing law.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when called on to specify what his point of order was declared that it was that the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was new legislation, and when he was called upon to specify wherein it was new legislation he said that it was new legislation in respect of its being new legislation. The gentleman from Indiana, who is an experienced member of this House and familiar with its rules, ought never to have confined himself to that phrase. He ought to have cited, as I propose to cite, the words of the rules of this House. There has been much confusion in the last two Congresses under Rule XXI, clause 3, simply because gentlemen have not seen fit to recite the exact words of the rule, and I now ask the attention of the Chair to clause 3 of that rule:

The Chair is aware that that clause has several objects. One of those objects is to provide against appropriations for purposes for which in the judgment of the House, as expressed by the rules, appropriations ought not to be made in general appropriation bills. The other, and an entirely different object, is to prevent the insertion of general stat-utes in appropriation bills. If the amendment of the gentleman from Maine is not in order, it is because it changes existing law, or because it is an appropriation for a purpose or object which the rules do not permit to be provided for in general appropriation bills. I believe it is not subject to either objection. It does not change any existing law. If the gentlemen say it does, they ought to point out what the law will be without this amendment, and what it will be with the amendment, so as to point out that a change will be made in the statutes of the United States if the amendment is adopted. I challenge them to do so. I submit that they can not do it. They can not show that any statute will be changed by the mere adoption of the amendment and its enactment into law. Accordingly if the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Maine, which is an appropriation and not a statute, is not in order under the rules, it is because it violates the following words of clause 3, of Rule XXI:

No appropriation shall be in order, etc., for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, my purpose is to quote from the eminent authority of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] himself to show that notwithstanding the legislation which has been had on this subject within the last two years, an appropriation for that Library building, like the appropriation proposed by the gentleman from Maine, is an appropriation which is in order under the rules. The Chair will perhaps remember that the provision for a Congressional Library which p this House was not the provision originally reported from the committee. It was an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN]. The committee originally proposed that we should go on with this building according to the plans of 1886. The provision of the gentleman from Kansas was—and I think the Chair will see that I have a logical purpose in calling attention to the exact terms of that amendment—the provision proposed by the gentleman from Kansas, which was known as the House amendment, was, in substance, that the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and of the House, acting conjointly, should invite proposals from eminent architects and should report progress to Congress before December, 1888. It provided that the work then in progress should be suspended, and that the property already purchased should be turned over to the Interior Department.

That, in substance, was the provision which passed the House. The Senate inserted a different proposition, and the bill came back to the House with those two propositions pending. It came up on a question whether we should agree to a conference report. I had some apprehension at the time whether, if that conference report was agreed to, the state of things would arise which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Houwell providence agreement of the correction of the state of things would arise which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN ] now claims has arisen. On that occasion I said:

If the committee should present the appropriation for the new Library building it would not have the privilege of an appropriation committee, and therefore it would not be in order on a general appropriation bill.

My apprehension was that if that legislation took place, then an amendment like the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] would not be in order, because it would not be an appropriation for a public work or object already in progress. I said further:

While I do not object to the proper way of erecting the building, yet I regret to see the House take such action in reference to the new Library building, so much desired, as to putus back exactly where we were before the Library building law was passed; for every one admits something should be done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on that occasion I was reassured by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman], and I ask the particular attention of the Chair to the language which that gentleman then used.

Mr. Holman. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Adams] labors under a mistake. The amendment of the House does not provide that the law providing for the building of the new Library building shall be repealed, but merely provides for doing away with the commission provided in that law. The law in all other respects will remain in force and the property will be turned over to the Department of the Interior for the time being. If the building is ultimately constructed the indications are that Congress will place it under that accomplished gentleman, General Casey.

This gives me occasion, Mr. Chairman, to consider what part of the law of 1886 has been repealed. The law still stands in force authorizing the construction of a Library building; the law still stands in force authorizing it to be constructed on this particular place where we propose to erect it. The law has provided for the condemnation of the ground; and the only change made is a change in the administrative machinery by which the building shall be erected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], which was the House amendment, and which provided for an utter suspension of work upon the building and for a commission of inquiry to take the views of eminent architects—if that amendment did not prevent this from being, in the words of the rule.

commission of inquiry to take the views of eminent architects—if that amendment did not prevent this from being, in the words of the rule, "a public work or object previously authorized by law," then no legislation that has been had since that time can possibly have that effect; and I have the eminent authority of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] himself, that even that amendment could not have had that effect. If the gentleman from Indiana, instead of indulging in that much abused and vague phrase "new legislation" had recited the words of the rule, and pointed out wherein this is not an appropriation for a public work or object previously authorized by law, he would have done what an experienced member like himself ought to have done, though I think he would have done it without much effect.

Again I ask the Chair to distinguish between that part of clause 3

Again I ask the Chair to distinguish between that part clause 3 of Rule XXI which prevents the insertion of general legislation in appropriation bills and the other and only pertinent phrase of that clause of the rule which limits the objects of appropriation. If the amendment of the gentleman from Maine is for a public work or object previously authorized by law and now in progress, then it is in order under the rules of the House; and that it is for such a work and object I have the authority of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hol-

As to the question of cost, Mr. Chairman, I do not admit that the effect of adopting this amendment would necessarily be the erection of a effect of adopting this amendment would necessarily be the erection of a $6,000,000 building instead of a $4,000,000 building. The letter of the Chief of Engineers (General Casey) speaks of a more elaborate style of ornamenting the interior of this so-called $6,000,000 building. If we were to take out that interior decoration, it may be that the cost would be reduced even to $4,000,000; and upon the fairest possible statement of the comparison between these two plans, the difference can not be at the outside more than $1,000,000. Therefore if the question of cost or probable cost is to enter into the decision of a point of order, I still ask the Chair on this consideration as well as the others I have submitted to sustain the point of order. I have submitted to sustain the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The point presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Adams] in support of the admission of this amendment, that the words of the rule make a distinction in regard to public buildings in course of erection, would seem to present a new aspect of the question; but in fact such is not the case. The gentleman does not state the whole effect of that rule. Its effect as regards public improvements is subject at all times, as has been held over and over again, to the limitations prescribed by law. For instance, the law may authorize the erection of a public building the cost of which is not to exceed a million and a half of dollars. Now, it has been held that in such a case the Committee on Appropriations may recommend and the House pass appropriations up to a million and a half of dollars, but that we can not on an appropriation bill go beyond the limit prescribed by law without subjecting the provision to a point of order if it be made.

Mr. ADAMS. We do not propose to go beyond the prescribed limit. Mr. RANDALL. I only wanted to answer that branch of the argument as presented by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not go into a discussion of the merits of the Library building.

Mr. REED. I would not.
Mr. McMILLIN. I will heed the admonition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] instead of following his example on this

The law under which the Library building is proceeding has this proviso:

Provided, That before any further contracts are let for the construction of said building, general plans for the entire construction thereof shall be prepared by or under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, which plans shall be subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior—

Mr. REED. My amendment embraces the language "when approved according to law."
Mr. McMILLIN (reading):

And provided further, That the total cost of said building-Here is where the gentleman varies from the law-

That the total cost of said building shall not exceed $4,000,000, exclusive of appropriations heretofore made.

Here is a limitation similar to that placed on the construction of other public buildings; and as has been properly stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, you may within that limit at all times make an appropriation on an appropriation bill, and the provision is not subject to a point of order. But when you propose to go beyond that limit

Mr. REED. But I do not propose to go beyond it.
Mr. McMILLIN. But when you propose to go beyond the limit you do make yourself obnoxious to the point of order. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Maine? He comes in and provides—if the Chair will kindly send me the amendment I will use the words of the gentleman from Maine in his amendment. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] now proposes to put on the statute-book an appropriation according to the plan described by the Chief of Engineers on page 6 of his letter of December 8, 1889, to the Speaker of the House, as printed in Miscellaneous Document No. 12, when approved according to law. Mr. REED.

Mr. REED. When approved according to law.

Mr. McMILLIN. But according to the present law that can not be approved, because it provides for a building of $6,000,000. It is an arapproved, because it provides for a building of $6,000,000. It is an argument that is conclusive that the plan the gentleman proposes itself would not be in order to be adopted by the House, as it proposes an expenditure of $6,000,000, when the limit of existing law is only $4,000,000. The existing law provides the building shall cost only $4,000,000, and the gentleman from Maine will not insist the plan on page 6 can be carried out for $4,000,000. In fact, he argued it could not be, and went into the merits of this controversy, arguing the four-million building would be full of books within a short period after the building was completed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask, where is there a statute existing which confines this building to the plan on page 6 which did not exist when the limitation of $4,000,000 was made? Whenever the gentleman proposes to adopt a certain plan which has not yet been approved by the officers-

Mr. REED. I say when approved.
Mr. McMILLIN. But the gentleman's plan can not be approved.
Mr. REED. If it can not, then this legislation is not effective.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is an attempt to violate the existing law
Mr. REED. Oh, it is only an attempt, then?
Mr. McMILLIN. Where is there a law, where is there a plan, where is there a statute which fixes this to any particular plan? When gentleis there a statute which fixes this to any particular plan? When gentlemen on an appropriation bill propose to fix it on a particular plan not approved by officers, and whether approved or not goes beyond the limit fixed by the law, it violates existing law.

Mr. REED. I propose to fix it according to that plan when approved.

proved.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is not the plan the gentleman approves.

Mr. REED. In the opinion of the Chief of Engineers it does, but whether in the opinion of the committee is another thing.

Mr. McMILLIN. The Chief of Engineers recommends a plan which he says costs $6,000,000. The House has said the limitation shall be $4,000,000. Then to tack a plan on an appropriation bill for $6,000,000 is a violation of existing law, which fixes the limit at $4,000,090.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a decision.

I ask the House to hear me. I wish to put this point distinctly, and I ask the attention of the Chair. It is a sound proposition I am arguing, and if I can get the Chair to understand the point I wish to make, I have no fear of the result; none at all. I admit if my amendment proposes that we should adopt a plan limiting it to $6,000,000 instead of $4,000,000 I would have no right to make that provision in regard to a public building on which existed a limit of the amount of appropriation. That would be within the rule; I concede it for the purpose of this argument only.

But this is not an amendment which touches the question of appropriation at all. It leaves the amount of appropriation precisely where the committee left it. It simply proposes a certain plan, and in order that that plan may not be considered as in conflict with the law, I expressly provide in my amendment that it shall be approved according to law.

Therefore there is no objection on the ground this increases the amount, and there is no objection on the ground it changes the law. If it be a question whether this law ultimately results in a larger expenditure than the law calls for, that is a question of argument to be decided by the committee and not to be decided by the Chair. In other words, if my amendment specifies an amount which is contrary to existing statute, then it would be ruled out; but if my amendment proposes only a line of conduct which may result in increased expendiproposes only a line of conduct which may result in increased expenditure, that is a matter for the judgment of the committee. That point, it seems to me, is entirely clear and unanswerable.

it seems to me, is entirely clear and unanswerable.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kerr] has asked me whether Ithink this building will cost $6,000,000 or not under this amendment. I answer that my individual opinion has nothing whatever to do with the question. It is the opinion of the committee which is to govern. Nor has the fact anything to do with it, for that is a matter of argument to be addressed to those who decide questions of fact. The Chair wists on this accession salely to decide points of law, and the language of ment to be addressed to those who decide questions of fact. The Chair exists on this occasion solely to decide points of law, and the language of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Adams] with the able argument which he has addressed to the Chair on the subject, must be entirely convincing so far as the parliamentary status of the question is concerned, unless the Chair falls into the error into which the gentleman from Tennessee has been desirous of leading him, namely, that because a man argues that this will exceed the limit fixed by the law, therefore that it is the business of the Chair to interfere. That is a good argument to address to the committee, but I submit it does not follow out any principle of law when addressed to the Chair. It has no relevancy. addressed to the Chair. It has no relevancy.

But the Chair has already passed upon the question, and has decided that if it be a question of argument whether the amendment would raise the limit or not, it is an argument to be addressed to the committee and not to him; and all I ask now is an adherence by the Chair to the plain principle of parliamentary law which the Chair has already so clearly enunciated, and which the Chair would as readily enunciate to-day and now, if it was not made an 'effort here on the part of the other side to accomplish something which they ought to be able to accomplish by relying upon the merits of their case, and not by indi-

Mr. RANDALL. Well, now, that is exactly what you are trying to be guilty of. Mr. REED.

Mr. REED. What?

Mr. RANDALL. You are trying by indirection to change the law so as to make this a $6,000,000 building instead of a $4,000,000 building. This side is doing what it can to emore the ann.

Mr. REED. I am trying to save the money of the people, and to save money for the country.

Mr. RANDALL. By spending more.

Mr. REED. No; but I am trying to obtain a Library building that will be worthy of the country. I am trying to obtain a Library building that will result in usefulness to the country for a period of one hundred and thirty four years and not to waste the money of the people dred and thirty-four years, and not to waste the money of the people in a building which will shortly be unsuitable. That is what I am trying to do; and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania was so anxious to preserve the integrity of the law why did he introduce the original bill of 1888, which was a violation of existing law and of the rules of Mr. RANDALL. That was done in conference, if I remember aright. Mr. REED. No, sir; it was done in the House, and was introduced by the chairman of the same committee, who has been very sedulous, in season and out of season, in insisting upon a strict adhesion to the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. My recollection is that it was introduced either in conference or on the floor of the House.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman will find himself mistaken. Mr. RANDALL. And the object of it was to save six millions of money, which was likely to be squandered in the erection of this building.

Mr. REED. And now they want to save the country from a Library building which would be suitable for the wants of the country by giving them one which is neither fit nor suitable. It is but a waste of $4,000,000 putting up a building that in forty-five years' time will be utterly obsolete and useless for the purpose contemplated; and yet they call that "economy!"

Mr. RANDALL. That is not the point. The Committee on Appropriations has inserted the paragraph which is applicable to the construction of this building, whether the plan adopted shall be the four-million or six-million plan. The object of the language used is with a view, if possible, to saving unnecessary expenditure.

Mr. REED. And as to the declaration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am endeavoring to raise the cost of this building, I wish to say to him that if I am engaged in that endeavor, I can only succeed by consent of the House of Representatives of the United States f America, an authority which under our laws has the right to do it.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, and you have got to do it under the rules of this House

Mr. REED. That is exactly what I want, and what I will succeed in accomplishing if the Chairman of this Committee of the Whole will rule as he has done heretofore upon the same question.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair can not but be clear on this subject, because it is so plain that none can misunderstand it.

Mr. REED. I hope so.
Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I think the remarks of the gentleman from Maine on this occasion would have been more proper during the last summer, when we were considering the building of this same Li-They seem to be rather late now.

Mr. REED. The reason why they come a little late is because at the time of which the gentleman speaks I was at home trying to save the time of which the gentleman speaks I was at home trying to save the country. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amount that might be carried by any plan will not be considered in this decision; but the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana on the ground that the law now authorizes the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior to approve plans that may be presented by the Chief Engineer of the Army. This amendment is a change of that law and is new legislation in that it provides for the approval of only one plan. Therefore the Chair thinks that is a change of existing law.

Mr. REED. But there was only one plan to be approved.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true. But the law now says:

Provided. That before any further contracts are let for the construction of

Provided. That before any further contracts are let for the construction of said building general plans for the entire construction thereof shall be prepared by and under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, which plans shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the

There is a discretion allowed there to the Chief of Engineers, Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Interior, which is limited to one plan in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair permit me to suggest that there is a misapprehension here caused by the use of a plural? It simply refers misapprehension here caused by the use of a plural? It simply refers to a set of plans.

The CHAIRMAN. Admit that it is but one plan, the discretion is given the Chief of Engineers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, to approve any "set of plans," whilst the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine limits that discretion to the plan specified in a certain report—

Mr. REED. It only limits the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. "According to plans described by the Chief of Engineers, on page 6 of his letter of December 1, 1888, to the Speaker, as printed in Miscellaneous Document No. 12, when approved according to law."

ing to law."
Mr. REED.

Mr. REED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. From that it would appear that the approval is limited to one plan; whereas the law as it now exists would permit these officers to select any plan or "set of plans."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, therefore, feels constrained to sustain the point of order, but would be glad if the gentleman from Maine would take the opinion of the committee.

Mr. REED. I will not do that.
Mr. COMPTON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the United States marshal for the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to each of the jurors summoned in the proceedings in condemnation for a site for a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, as provided by the act approved April 15, 1886, $10 for each and every day of actual attendance, to be received as full compensation for such service, $2,140.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order that that is a proposition

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order that that is a proposition to give to these jurors an increase of compensation over what they are now by law entitled to receive.

The CHAIRMAN. What are they now entitled to receive?

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. McMILLIN. Two dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, Mr. COMPTON. Whether the point of order may be well taken or not, I offer this amendment on its merits. It is for the Chair to say whether it is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman from Maryland want any time

Mr. COMPTON. I do not desire to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point

Mr. REED. We are still on the section providing for the Library

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. I desire to offer an amendment. Mr. RANDALL. Read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine desires to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Congress," in line 8, down to and including the word "eight," in line 10, and insert:

"According to plans described by the Chief of Engineers, on page 6 and elsewhere, of his letter of December 1, 1888, to the Speaker of the House, as printed in Miscellaneous Document No. 12, when approved according to law."

Mr. REED. That obviates the objection.
Mr. HOLMAN. It leaves the objection the same as it was.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. REED. Then I do not understand the ruling of the Chair, which was that the approving officers were not allowed any discretion.
The discretion there granted is the same as that granted under the

Mr. RANDALL. But the existing statute provides that discretion shall be within four millions.

Mr. REED. That provides the same that the original statute pro-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at this point, although on another subject. I offer the amendment to come in after the head "Military posts," in line 16.
The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph has not yet been read.
The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

After the heading "Military posts," in line 16, insert:
"For the construction of additional quarters at Fort McIntosh, Texas, $50,000."

Mr. RANDALL. There is no estimate for that, and, so far as I know, there is no law authorizing it. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to call attention to the fact that the assistant adjutant-general of General Stanley, who commands the Department of Texas, has written a letter to certain gentlemen in Laredo, Tex., which

Headquarters Department of Texas,
San Antonio, January 14, 1889.

Gentlemen: General D. S. Stanley, commanding Department of Texas, desires me to acknowledge the receipt of your petition for the retention of Chaplain G. W. Simpson, United States Army, at Fort Melntosh.

The general greatly regrets that he can not, with due regard to the interests of the military service, favorably consider your request. The scarcity of quarters at Fort Melntosh made it necessary to transfer to other posts not only Chaplain Simpson but two other officers besides.

Very respectfully,

J. P. MARTIN, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Rev. C. J. Oxley, T. A. Moore, W. W. Killough, and others, Laredo, Tex.

My attention was called to this by a letter from Mr. Nicholson, a gentleman of Laredo, in which he writes:

gentleman of Laredo, in which he writes:

LAREDO, TEX., January 17,1889.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith I hand you a clipping from the columns of his morning's Laredo Times in relation to the retention of Chaplain Simpson at the military post here, and which explains why he can not be retained here, namely, because there are not sufficient quarters. It does seem to me that the Government should do something more for us here than has so far been done, in view of the donation by the city of the military grounds, comprising about 208 acres, and which if surveyed into lots and blocks would to-day be worth at least $100,000. I know that Mayor Atlee had some correspondence with you last year in regard to the matter of getting an appropriation for the erection of more quarters here but do not know the purport of said correspondence, but presume that you did not meet with success in the matter, and while another trial will possibly meet with a like failure, yet I feel that the matter should not be allowed to rest until we succeed; and I beg to call your attention to the plan suggested by Colonel Barnard when here, namely, to present a bill in Congress making an appropriation of say $50,000 or $100,000 for the erection of quarters, etc., and try and get the same passed, and then the Secretary of War would be obliged to expend the sum so appropriated and for the purpose for which it was appropriated.

obliged to expend the sum so appropriated and for the purpose for which it was appropriated.

I understand that the War Department will not only not recommend such a bill, but will oppose it; yet might it not be possible to pass it through over such objections? I do not know, but I wrote to you upon this very subject once before, and trust that you will not deem me over zealous on the subject, and I do not know that you will be able to do anything more than you have already done; neither do I wish you to think that I am under the impression that you have not done all that was possible. I only desire to call your attention again to the subject, and then that you exercise your own judgment thereon. I shall be glad to hear from you at your convenience.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. O. NICHOLSON.

J. O. NICHOLSON.

Hon. W. H. CRAIN, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] makes the point of order—

Mr. RANDALL. I only reserved the point of order.

Mr. CRAIN. I understand the gentleman to make the point of order, if he does make it, upon the ground that this expenditure is not contemplated or provided for by existing law. Is that correct?

Mr. RANDALL. I have only reserved the point of order.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, that will necessarily be the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that there is any point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, I will simply say to the gentleman that if the point of order lies against this amendment it certainly will lie against the whole paragraph, and I serve notice upon him that if he makes the point of order on this amendment I will make it on the paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. Never mind "serving notice." Mr. Chairman, the amendment is before the House. This House receives estimates from the Treasury Department, as the law requires, and not from General Stanley or any adjutant-general. In addition to that, we have given $332,000 under this head, an amount which is thought to be sufficient for these purposes; and I think I may say that the Quarter-sufficient for these purposes; and I think I may say that the Quarter-master-General coincides in the opinion that it is sufficient for the necessary expenses of the current year. Therefore I hope that the House will not adopt this amendment, but will adhere to the estimate.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman tell me whether any provision for additional quarters at Fort McIntosh is included in that item?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it is. I have never heard of Fort McIntosh before in connection with this subject. But the appropriation is not limited as to its application, and the Secretary of War can expend that $332,000 at Fort McIntosh if his judgment so directs.

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, but if this amount was made up from reports, the gentleman can tell us whether Fort McIntosh is included.

the gentleman can tell us whether Fort McIntosh is included. Mr. RANDALL. The appropriation is based on the estimates, and I have already told the gentleman that Fort McIntosh is not included.

Mr. CRAIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, in view of the facts stated in these communications, in view of the fact which they establish, namely, that a chaplain has had to be sent away from one of the most important posts on the Mexican border, a national gateway, a place where the river is crossed by a bridge and by a railway, an important strategic point, and in view of, further, the fact that Laredo has donated 200 acres of land for this post, which, if cut up into blocks and lots, would be worth $100,000 to-day, according to the statement of my correspondent, who is a reputable and reliable man—in view of all these facts I ask this committee to enlarge this amount and to adopt this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be again read. The Clerk again read the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was disagreed to: there being-ayes 22, noes 61.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY POSTS.

For the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $332,000.

Mr. DORSEY. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read, "$332,000" and inserting "$382,000." The object of this just read, "$332,000" and inserting "$382,000." The object of this amendment is to enable the Secretary of War to apportion this additional sum of $50,000 for the completion of Forts Robinson and Niobrara, Nebraska. These forts are on the flanks of the great Sioux reservation. They are important posts; and it is the policy of the War Department to break up the smaller posts in the surrounding country and concentrate the military forces at these points. These two posts, under the orders of the Secretary of War, are both to be made ten-company posts. There are now quartered at each fort six companies, and the other soldiers stationed there are obliged to take shelter in brildings through which the wind, whistles and where they shelter in buildings through which the wind whistles and where they are subjected to the storms of that country. Consequently there is sickness and desertion there.

The Senate has passed a bill appropriating $100,000 to complete those two posts. The Committee on Military Affairs of the House has reported that bill favorably, and it is on the Calendar. I am willing to abandon that bill if the House will consent to make this appropriation of $50,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this is the same matter over again which we have already disposed of. We have given an amount which, in the judgment of the Quartermaster-General, is sufficient; and to increase it would not effect the very object which the gentleman has in view.

Mr. DORSEY. I will take the chances on that; and the Secretary of War-

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman may be willing to "take the chances" as to those two points where he wishes money to be expended; but I submit that neither of them is embraced in the estimates

Mr. DORSEY. But the Senate and a committee of this House have passed upon the question. The estimates on this subject were not received in time. The Secretary of War, as I understand, asks for $999,000. The Committee on Appropriations have divided this sum by three, and propose to give one-third of that amount, which is $66,000 less than was appropriated last year.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think this paragraph is objected to either as to amount or in any other particular by the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask this committee to give this additional sum of $50,000 for the completion of those two posts.

Mr. RYAN. I wish to ask my friend from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY] whether he simply asks an increase in the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, sir—simply that the amount be increased.

Then the Secretary of War can expend it at Forts Robinson and Nio-Inen the Secretary of War can expend it at Fors Robinson and Riobrara, or at Atlanta, Ga., represented by my friend from Georgia [Mr. STEWART]. We are willing to take the chances.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether, in the general sum for the construction of army posts, $75,000 for Atlanta was included.

Mr. RANDALL. It would be impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to make recommendations as to where this money should e expended. A better plan, and one which has been in operation in the past, is to appropriate a gross sum, leaving the Secretary of War to make the distribution in his discretion.

Mr. DORSEY. That is right; we are satisfied with that arrangement. Mr. BORSEY. That is right; we are satisfied with that arrangement.
Mr. RANDALL. A word in answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART]. In the appropriation bill of last year there was supposed to be $75,000 for Atlanta, Ga.; but, as I am informed, an exigency arose which compelled the War Department to expend the amount elsewhere, so that the $75,000 which it was expected would go to Atlanta was never expended there. The reason given is that the money did go to points where there were troops in barracks, while at Atlanta there are no troops. That is the ground on which the Department acted

Mr. DORSEY. There are troops at Forts Robinson and Niobrara— ten companies at each post.

Mr. RANDALL. We have contemplated in this bill that $75,000 of the $332,000 should go to Atlanta, if such be the judgment of the Quartermaster-General; and there is in the estimate an appropriation of $75,-000, intended to take the place of what should have gone last year to Atlanta. It is desired by the Department that such appropriation be made in the deficiency bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Dorsey, there ere—ayes 73, noes 70.

Mr. RANDALL. No quorum. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. Dorsey and Mr. O'FERBALL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 83, noes 84.

So the amendment of Mr. Dorsey was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1886, approved March 3, 1885, as appropriates $160,000 to enable the Secretary of War to acquire good and valid title for the United States to the Fort Brown military reservation. Texas, and to pay and extinguish all claims for the use and occupancy of said reservation by the United States, be, and the same is hereby, suspended, except as to $50,000 of said sum, until otherwise ordered by Congress.

Mr. CRAIN. I make a point of order against this paragraph on the ground that it is obnoxious to that provision of clause 3, Rule XXI, which reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CRAIN. I do, unless the Chair is prepared to decide in my favor without hearing me. I do not want to consume time uselessly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

RANDALL] desire to be heard?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that I have anything to say. order to save time I am quite willing to leave this matter to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are two matters, it seems to me, to be considered on this point of order. One is that this being a miscellaneous appropriation bill, it is not subject as a general proposition to the same strict rule of order as other bills are where the appropriations are made more in conformity to existing law. But there is another consideration, and I will have to enter into a brief history in order to make myself clear to the Chair.

In the Forty-eighth Congress an appropriation of $160,000 was made. Mr. CRAIN. I desire to interrupt the gentleman from Indiana for a moment to ask him whether under the guise of discussing the point of order he proposes to go into the merits of the proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am simply stating a matter of history to present clearly my point to the Chair. It will be brief, and the Chair will perceive it is strictly on the point of order.

The House appropriated $160,000 for the purpose indicated in the paragraph. That money, if I understand the law, is covered back into the Treasury

Mr. CRAIN. No; if the gentleman will permit me, I will answer m. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in which he says it is not covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state the law covering money into the Treasury. I am glad to read the statute on that subject:

ury. 1 am glad to read the statute on that subject:

SEC, 2691. All balances of appropriations which shall have remained on the books of the Treasury, without being drawn against in the settlement of accounts, for two years from the date of the last appropriation made by law, shall be reported by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Auditor of the Treasury whose duty it is to settle accounts thereunder, and the Auditor shall examine the books of his office, and certify to the Secretary whether such balances will be required in the settlement of any accounts pending in his office; and if it appears that such balances will not be required for this purpose, then the Secretary may include such balances in his surplus-fund warrant, whether the head of the proper Department shall have certified that it may be carried into the general Treasury or not. But no appropriation for the payment of the interest or principal of the public debt, or to which a longer duration is given by law, shall be thus treated.

According to the principle there announced, after the period of two years all balances are to be covered into the Treasury, except as to outyears all balances are to be covered into the Treasury, except as to outstanding settlements and contracts made under the law making the appropriation. In that view of the matter, assuming this $160,000 was covered into the Treasury by reason of the lapse of two years under the operation of law, then I submit the effect of this proposition is the appropriation of $160,000 to carry out the purpose of that original provision of law in the Forty-eighth Congress. In that view it seems this is not necessarily subject to the point of order, and the question would be whether the appropriation of $160,000 is in conformity with existing law or not. I understand it is in conformity to existing law in appropriation of part of the $160,000 accordlaw inasmuch as it is an appropriation of part of the $160,000 according to the law making the appropriation covered into the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For the construction and improvement of suitable roads and bridges within the Park, under the supervision and direction of an engineer officer detailed by the Secretary of War for that purpose, $25,000.

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of this paragraph on page 62. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a board of three engineer officers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be to make a careful and critical examination of the northwest coast of the Gulf of Mexico west of 93 degrees and 30 minutes west longitude, excepting therefrom the mouth of the Brazos River in Texas, and select the most eligible point for a deep-water harbor, to be of ample depth, width, and capacity to accommodate the largest ocean-going vessels and the commercial and naval necessities of the country, which can be secured and maintained in the shortest time and at the least cost. And the said board of engineers shall report through the Secretary of War to the next Congress the point selected and the estimated cost of securing such port. The sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the expenses of said board, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And it is provided that nothing contained herein shall prevent Congress from appropriating money for the continued improvement of other ports in Texas than the one which may be selected by the board of engineers herein mentioned.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point of order that makes a new law.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point of order that makes a new law. It does not belong in here at any rate, it belongs in the river and harbor bill, if it is in order.

Mr. CRAIN. If it is in order, it certainly belongs in here.
Mr. HOLMAN. It creates a board, a commission.
Mr. CRAIN. Before the Chair decides I should like to say a word on the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, the object and scope of the proposed amendment may be summed up in a few words. It directs the Secretary of War to appoint a Board of Engineers whose duty it shall be to make a critical and thorough examination of the northwest coast of the Gulf of Mexico for the purpose of determining the most eligible point at which a deep-water harbor can be obtained of sufficient capacity, depth, and width to admit the largest ocean-going vessels. It is carrying out the provisions of existing law. There are now on the statutebooks laws providing for the improvement of our rivers and harbors throughout the country. There is no question of that, and this simply contemplates the carrying out of the objects and provisions of that law by the appointment of a Board of Engineers to determine how the money shall be expended which is annually appropriated in the river and har-bor appropriation bill. The object of the amendment, therefore, and its effect, will be to save money to the Government, and looking at it from that standpoint, the Chairman, with his well-known views on such questions, I think will be constrained to overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair is inclined to sympathize with the objects of the resolution, under the rules of the House he must sustain the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of storm, cautionary, off-shore, cold-wave, and other signals on the sea, Lake, and Gulf coasts of the United States, and in the interior, announcing the probable approach and force of storms, including the pay of observers, services of operators, lanterns, and flags, $10,000.

Mr. RYAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19, page 63, insert:
"For expenses of keeping and maintaining meteorological stations in the West Indies and contiguous points, in connection with the announcement of hurricanes on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, $1,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay for one brigadier-general and fourteen second lieutenants, mounted, $26,500; for longevity pay to officers of the Signal Corps, to be paid with current monthly pay, $5,100; for pay of not exceeding one hundred and twenty-five sergeants, twenty corporals, and one hundred and seventy-five privates, including payment due on discharge, to men now in the service, $121,595.60: Provided, That no part of this money shall be used in payment of enlisted men of the Signal Corps on clerical or messenger duty at the office of the Chief Signal Officer; for mileage to officers when traveling on Signal Service duty under orders, $2,500: Provided further, That this amount shall be disbursed under the same limitations prescribed for payment of mileage to officers in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the expense of travel performed on strictly military duty; for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters, $4,752; in all, $160,447.60. And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed five commissioned officers of the regular Army, to be exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law; and the regular Army officers herein authorized to be detailed for the Signal Corps shall receive their pay and allowances from the appropriation for the support of the Army; and no money herein appropriated shall be used for pay and allowances of second lieutenants appointed or to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps, under the provision of the act approved June 20, 1878, in excess of the number of fourteen, or for the pay and allowances of exceeding three hundred and twenty enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

Mr. RYAN. I move to strike out in lines 21 and 22 the words "to

Mr. RYAN. I move to strike out in lines 21 and 22 the words "to men now in the service." That clause is not applicable to this bill. It was copied from the current law and was applicable there, but is not

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERMANN. Before passing from this provision, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question, and for that purpose I move a formal amendment.

I do not know whether it will be necessary to offer an amendment to the clause or not; but with the object of doing so if it shall be necessary, I desire to inquire of my friend whether the estimates of the Chief of the Signal Service have been observed in making up this provision of the bill, and whether the full amount of the estimate has been appropriated?

Mr. RYAN. The full amount asked by the Department has been given, I will state to my friend from Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to say that requests have frequently been made by citizens of the eastern portion of the State of Oregon, a very large portion of that State, for signal stations, and that these requests have heretofore been absolutely ignored and no provision has been made for signal stations there. I have personally called and entreated the Chief Signal Officer to establish a signal station at Baker City, in Eastern Oregon. The reply has been unfailingly made to such requests that the appropriations are insufficient to allow the establishment of additional signal stations; and yet, Mr. Chairman, that portion of the State of Oregon exceeds in area the whole State of New York. There is not a signal station in its borders, I mean Eastern Oregon proper, a section, I will state to the committee, which exports in wheat of the very finest grade that goes out of this country, an amount exceeding 10,-000,000 bushels per annum. Notwithstanding the fact that it is of great importance as an agricultural region, there has been little attention paid to it, and not a signal station has been established there to observe the temperature or to give warning of approaching storms or study the characteristics and effects of the Chinook winds. As I understand it, the Signal Service is established largely in the interest of agriculture, and as agriculture forms so large an element of the wealth of that portion of the State which has heretofore been so much neglected, I thought it proper to call the attention of the committee and of the House to the fact, so that ample provision could be made for this service in the future, and that we would not be met with the same response which has always been heretofore given, that the money was not sufficient. Baker City, the point at which a station is so much needed, is in the midst of not only a rich farming section, but is the center of a great mining region. It is on a high plateau. I now understand my friend from Kansas to state that the entire amount of the estimates asked by the Signal Bureau have been given, and I hope therefore that a sufficient appropriation is made to enable a suitable and satisfactory response to be made to this request in the future.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee appropriated in this bill every dollar that was asked for by the Department. We could do nothing more, I will state to my friend from Oregon, than to make an appropriation for the needs of the service as indicated by the Chief of the Signal Bureau.

Mr. HERMANN. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, I will not detain the committee by offering amendments, but will hold the Signal Service responsible for any failure which may occur in this direction hereafter. I shall make another attempt to accomplish the wishes of my constituents through the Department, and if this shall again prove fruitless I shall seek relief by a specific amendment to the next appropriation bill and submit the necessary data to convince Congress that my State has not been fairly dealt with in this

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical department: For medical attendance and medicines for officers and enlisted men of the Signal Corps, $2,600: Provided further, That all medical accounts of the Signal Service shall go for examination and audit to the same Auditor and Comptroller by whom the other accounts of the Signal Service are examined and audited.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a misprint in that proviso, and I move to strike out the word "further" where it occurs after "Provided."

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interment of officers and men, $25.
Subsistence: For commutation of rations of not exceeding three hundred and twenty enlisted men of the Signal Corps, at 90 cents per day per man, and for sales of subsistence stores to officers and enlisted men of said corps, as authorized by section 1144 of the Revised Statutes and paragraph 2199 of the Army Regulations, 1881, $103,477.50.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer an amendment at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 67, line 15, strike out the words "at 90 cents per day per man."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For commutation of quarters for not exceeding three hundred and twenty enlisted men of the Signal Corps, being one hundred and thirty men at $20 per month per man, and one hundred and ninety men at $15 per month per man, $65,400.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer a further amendment to this provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 67, line 24, strike out all after the word "corps" to and including line 2, on page 68, and insert "$58,500,"

Mr. RYAN. That is correct.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents of national cemeteries, pay of laborers and other employés, purchase of tools and materials, $100,000.

For superintendents of national cemeteries: For pay of seventy-three superintendents of national cemeteries:

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send up to the Clerk's desk

The Clerk read as follows

Amend by striking out the word "three," in line 12, and inserting the word "four;" and by striking out, in lines 12 and 13, the words "sixty thousand four hundred and forty" and inserting the words "sixty-one thousand one hundred and sixty."

Mr. RANDALL. That is in exact harmony with existing law, and think the omission in the number was a mistake in the rendering of the estimates; therefore I favor this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLAND). Does the gentleman make the point of order on this amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. It is not subject to a point of order; on the contrary, I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. WARNER. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the number herein provided is that now asked for by the Quartermaster-General?

Mr. RANDALL. It is an excess of one.

Mr. WARNER. I know requests have been made, and that the Quartermaster-General has stated when such requests were made that he number was now in excess of the amount appropriated for.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill presented from the committee is not in excess as to number as estimated for. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois increases it one. That is in harmony with the aw of last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairing roadways to national cemeteries: For repairs to roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress, $15,000.

Mr. BOWDEN. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 70, after line 7, insert:
"For repairing and draining roadway to the national cemetery at Hampton, Va., $2,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no disposition to interfere with anything that enables the living relatives of a deceased soldier to reach the grave of such soldier, and therefore have nothing to say against the proposi-

Mr. BOWDEN. The gentleman will find that there has been previous legislation for this purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Whether there has or not, I am in favor of allowing people to reach the national cemeteries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For printing and issuing charts or use of navigators, and electrotyping plates for chart-printing, $2,000.

Mr. ADAMS. In line 18 I move to strike out "two" and insert "three." I would ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to this item, "For survey of northern and northwestern lakes." I find in the Book of Estimates for surveying, "additions to and correcting engraved plates, $10,000." That has been omitted from the bill. This provision for printing and issuing charts for the use of navigators has been reduced from $3,000 to $2,000. I do not pretend to have any has been reduced from $5,000 to $2,000. The not pretent to have any knowledge on the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the same amount as was given a year ago and for many years. I know of no new surveys that have been made.

Mr. ADAMS. Has the estimate been the same other years?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Three years ago it was two thousand, next three thousand, next three thousand, and this year three thousand.

Mr. RYAN. The estimate for 1886 was two thousand; for 1887, three thousand; for 1888, three thousand, and for this year three thousand, and we gave two thousand.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the case.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman is aware that new lights are being given each year; that this is for the purpose of protecting the navigators of the lakes. These new lights are not laid down in the old charts. Mr. RANDALL. It is for charts on surveys which have already been finished.

Mr. ADAMS. That have been completed?

Mr. RANDALL. I so understand it.
Mr. ADAMS. This is a simple item for the benefit of the people who navigate the lakes.

Mr. RYAN. I do not think there is any difficulty about the matter.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RYAN. I do not think there is any difficulty about the amend-

There have been no complaints made.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In this connection when you say there are no complaints, I want to say on behalf of the masters of vessels on the Great Lakes that there have been repeated complaints that they have never been able to get any larger appropriation than that proposed now.

Mr. ADAMS. I will renew my amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I want to state that under this contracted appropriation many of the masters of vessels are now carrying charts that are almost illegible. I know that of my own knowledge. And I know that complaints have been made by the carrying companies on the Lakes in this respect. I asked two years ago to have that appropriation extended, and it was not done. So that now captains on the Lakes just take whatever they can get.

Mr. RYAN. What I said was, that there was no complaint from the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Anybody who wants to do so can get as many charts as he wants.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I made several applications for these charts, and I was put down to the stringent rule of the Department as to the number that were given out.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not speak as to the rule of the Department.

Mr. FARQUHAR. There was even an application made from my own city. They have taken the captains of two or three great lines of steamers to school them and their mates in the navigation of the Lakes, and they have family $400 of their own funds to swapply these classes. and they have furnished $400 of their own funds to supply these classes with charts

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment has been withdrawn. Mr. ADAMS. I withdrew it, and have renewed it.

The amendment was disagreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and Confederate armies, as follows:

For continuing the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of a compilation of the official records, Union and Confederate, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, to be distributed as required by act of March 3, 1885, 383,000: Provided, That hereafter, before publication of any volume of said records, the manuscript copy shall be submitted to the Secretary of War, and revised by him, or under his supervision, by a committee to be selected by him for that purpose, from such clerks in the office of the Adjutant-General as have an expert knowledge of the war records, and shall not be published until he shall certify that it only contains the contemporaneous official records of the war of the rebellion, as provided for by the "act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," approved July 31, 1886. And from and after the passage of this act the records which have been, or which may hereafter be, selected for publication shall be accessible to the public, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, but in no case shall such regulations permit the removal of the original records from the Department building.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph. The bill as reported was not satisfactory to the officer in charge of this matter at the War Department, but we have now adopted language which will be acceptable to everybody concerned.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 72, strike out all after the word "supervision," in line 12, down to and including the word "records," in line 14, and insert "by a board of officers other than those attached to the War Records office."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. By instruction of the committee I desire to offer, on page 73, after line 8, the amendment which I send to the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 73, after line 8, insert:
"Harbor of New York: For expenses in preventing obstructive and injurious deposits in the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, etc., including $60,000 for the purchase or construction of a vessel, $94,070."

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say that that amendment is in pursuance of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to hear the gentleman state what law this is offered under.

Mr. COX. I will state to the gentleman that there was a law passed on the 29th of June, 1888, to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by drawning or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses. This dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses.

amendment is offered in pursuance of that law. Before I sit down I will ask that the report of the officer in charge of the improvements of the harbor may be printed in the RECORD in order to justify this appropriation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, a law making a certain act a penal offense lacks very much, in my judgment, of being a law which would authorize an appropriation of $60,000 or $90,000, not merely to prevent the commission of the offense, but also to provide a vessel for the purpose of carrying into effect police regulations in regard to the subject-matter of the law. This is a subject that properly belongs to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, if it belongs anywhere. It has been constantly brought before that committee, and I make the point of order that the entire amendment, being characterized by the appropriation for a steam-vessel, is not in order on this appropriation bill. It belongs by all means to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, if it belongs anywhere; but in this connection I deny that the Government of the United States ought to dredge New York Harbor of the deposits put there by the citizens of New York, or allowed to be put there by the municipality of New York. I would rather vote for the improvement of a creek somewhere than to turn the General Government into a general scavenger for the purpose of making away with the refuse and debris of the city of New York. At this time, however, I make the point of order that this amendment is not authorized by any existing law. To illustrate, there is a statute against the counterfeiting of the currency of the country, but would it be proper under the rules of the House, because of the existence of that criminal statute, to put upon an appropriation bill a provision for the building of a house somewhere to harbor the police who were to pursue the criminals engaged in the violation of that statute against counterfeiting? To my mind there is nothing clearer than that this amendment is subject to the point of

Mr. COX. Would the Chair like to see the law under which this provision is offered? As I said before, it is an act to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits in the harbor of New York. That law was passed, and this amendment is for the purpose of providing an inorigin of the law for the purpose of illustrating what this amendment means. The object of the law was, if possible, to reconcile the jurisdiction of New Jersey and the jurisdiction of New York over that hardened bor and the adjacent waters. After years of experiment, it was found that there was no protection possible except by establishing Federal jurisdiction, and in June, 1888, an act was passed authorizing the Secretary of War to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of war to select an officer of the Navy as supervisor of the hardstanding the secretary of t bor of New York, who should take charge and prevent these injurious deposits. This amendment is to enable that officer, with the aid of a deposits. This amendment is to enable that omeer, with the aid of a vessel and other necessary appliances, to prevent the scavengers from ruining this great harbor, which is a harbor not merely for the city of New York, but a harbor for the whole country. The jurisdiction of this supervisor extends up into Connecticut, and he says, in his report, that it is utterly impossible for him to execute the law without these additional aids which it is here proposed to provide. It was supposed that the law as passed last year had provisions sufficient to avert the destruction of the harbor, but experience has shown that its provisions are not sufficient for the complete carrying out of the law, and thereare not sufficient for the complete carrying out of the law, and therefore this appropriation is properly offered as an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLAND). Will the gentleman from New York kindly furnish the Chair a copy of the law to which he refers?

Mr. BUCHANAN. In addition to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has said, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is in effect a continuance of an existing work. Under the operation of the existing law, this harbor in the past year has been policed in this manner. This proposition is simply to provide for the continuance of that much-needed policing, a necessity which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] himself admits, and a necessity which is becoming greater as week follows week. Only last week I read a report in the newspapers concerning the trial of the Zalinsky gun, in which it was stated that, as the result of some of those experiments, several shells containing such enormous potentialities for injury law. several shells containing such enormous potentialities for injury, lay unexploded in the bottom of this harbor. It is absolutely necessary that this policing be carried on—not commenced, for it has been com-menced—but carried on.

Mr. BELDEN. I desire to state to the gentleman from Ohio that in seven weeks permits have been issued by the lieutenant in charge for the deposit of 3,000,000 cubic yards of earth and garbage. There is already provision made for protecting the harbor as far as the Narrows. An officer is stationed there to stamp the permits of vessels passing that point; but this officer can not exercise control out at sea so as to prevent the dumping of matter in the channel. It is necessary that a vessel should lie out there, so that every boat carrying this gar-bage may have its permit marked, to show that it has gone out to sea the required distance. The object can not be accomplished in any other way.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOUNT). The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment appears to contemplate carrying out provisions of existing law with respect to this subject.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has charge of this bill, which Department will have control of this

Mr. RANDALL. The War Department.
Mr. DINGLEY. Will the Secretary of War have charge of the construction of this vessel?

Mr. RANDALL. The general subject is under the control of the War Department, and I should think the Secretary of War would have charge of the construction of the vessel. The provision may be made more explicit if it is thought desirable.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that it be made more specific.

Mr. COX. I will state that in order to reconcile any possible conflict of authority between the two Departments, this officer was selected from the Navy by the War Department. The law provides, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, that the matter shall be under the control of the War Department.

Mr. BELDEN. It is now under the War Department. The lieutenant in charge acts under the orders of that Department.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. RANDALL. It will be observed that the amendment provides for the "construction or purchase" of a vessel. Some gentleman can, if it be thought desirable, move to insert the words "by the Secretary

Mr. DINGLEY. I only made a suggestion.
Mr. BELDEN. The matter is now fully under the control of the War Department.

Mr. DINGLEY. If there is any doubt, the amendment might be modified.

Mr. BELDEN. There is no doubt on the subject.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I desire to have printed in the RECORD the report which I hold in my hand.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The document is as follows:

Office of the Supervisor of the Port of New York, Room 4, United States Barge Office, New York, January 8, 1889.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERFINOR OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK, ROOM 4, UNITED STATES BARGE OFFICE, STATES BARGE OFFICE, Againary 8, 1899.

Site: I have the honor to submit the following report of the operations of this office since its opening on the 19th of November last. As stated in my report made to the Department on September 25, 1888, I have adopted the following system as the most feasible with the funds available: Permits for the removal of all materials enumerated in the act are issued from this office. All the material which is to be towed to sea, passing through the Narrowa, moves with a permit authorizing the deposit at either the "mud" or "refuse" buoys, which are two white spar-buoya, located about 3 miles from Coney Island and south of the entrance to Rockaway Inlet. As these tows pass the Narrows they are boarded by an inspector mation of the tow, to million, N. IV. This officer stamps boarded by an inspector mation of the tow, to million, N. IV. This officer stamps boarded by an inspector mation of the tow, to million, N. IV. This officer stamps to be seen to be supported to the control of th merged mooring buoy, placed there without authority, and which is a dangerous obstruction. This matter has been placed in the hands of the United States attorney for the eastern district of New York.

For the information of the Department I inclose herewith copies of the various blanks now in use.

The force employed at this time for the enforcement of the act numbers eleven people, including a junior naval officer as assistant, one inspector, five deputies, three boatmen, and one type-writer.

In order to keep thoroughly informed concerning the removal of material coming within the jurisdiction of this office, it is necessary to continually patrol the river front and harbor to learn where dredging is being done and where material is being handled. This work is being performed by the inspector and deputies, and requires their attendance at points on the rivers and bay night and day.

The services of a small steamer are absolutely essential to note progress of work, in patrolling the rivers, watching the movements of tows, and in making visits to various points in the harbor. Great interest is manifested here in the proper enforcement of this law, and I have received considerable encouragement in my efforts to compel a compliance with it. In reviewing the law with one of the United States district judges, and with the United States attorneys for the southern and eastern districts of New York, the act was pronounced very incomplete, and in certain particulars unskillfully drawn. In order to correct these mistakes it will be necessary to have some additional legislation.

I find that both the means and appliances at my disposition are inadequate to a thorough supervision of the large jurisdiction of this office. I have the honor to submit below an estimate to provide for a more complete supervision of this over, including the purchase of a vessel to be moored at the place of deposit, south of Coney Island, for her maintenance and the support of this office for the coming year:

The purchase or construction of vessel (referred to)	1,000
Outfit of supplies	2,000
Pay-rolls of vessel	8,000
Ship-chandlery	400
Mushroom anchors and bridle chains	65
Maintenance of patrol-steamer (wages and stores)	5,800
Maintenance of steam-launch (wages)	1,800
Salaries of inspectors, deputies, and boatmen	11, 440
For hire of boats and launches	600
One clerk (type-writer and stenographer)	600
One messenger Printing and stationery.	48

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JACOB J. HUNKER, Lieutenant, United States Navy, and Supervisor.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FORD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Total ...

On page 73, after line 8, insert:
"For the construction of an iron bridge over Mill Creek, between the military eservation of Fortress Monroe and Elizabeth City County, Virginia, $20,000; be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. RANDALL. I want to reserve a point of order on that amendment until I hear the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, under the deed of cession by which the State of Virginia ceded to the United States the reservation known as Fortress Monroe and Old Point Comfort, Va., it was stipulated that the United States should keep a bridge over what is known as Mill Creek, a small stream separating the reservation from the mainland—Elizabeth City County, Virginia. In pursuance of that stipulation of the deed of cession, Congress has from time to time made appropriations for the construction of a wooden bridge. As gentlemen are aware, there is in salt water an insect or worm known as the teredo, which is very destructive to wooden structures, so much so that this bridge has to be is in salt water an insect or worm known as the teredo, which is very destructive to wooden structures, so much so that this bridge has to be almost completely reconstructed every year. In consequence of this the Engineer Department has recommended, as a matter of economy, that an iron bridge be built there. The proposition has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and an appropriation of $20,000 recommended for the purpose of constructing such a bridge, which will dispense with the necessity of annual appropriations for keeping these wooden bridges in repair. And I would like the Clerk to read a letter from General Duane, Chief of Engineers, on this point.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask a question on one or two matters. This is entirely within a reservation; that is, the land at both ends of the bridge is owned by the United States.

the bridge is owned by the United States.

Mr. FORD. No; the north end was owned by the State of Virginia, and, as I said before, in the deed of cession from the State of Virginia conveying this to the United States it was stipulated that the Government of the United States should keep up this bridge. The bridge was owned at that time by the Hampton Bridge Company, and I have in my hand the appropriation bill for 1838, which was passed after the cession of this land to the General Government by Virginia, by which $4,000 was appropriated to purchase this bridge from the Hampton Bridge Company. That was appropriated, the bridge was purchased, and since then we have appropriated something almost every year to keep that bridge in repair. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of General Duane.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington, D. C., May 22, 1888, Sir: I have the honor to return herewith House bill 9067, Fiftieth Congress, first session, a bill "for the construction of an iron bridge from the military reservation at Fortress Monroe to Elizabeth City County, Virginia," which was referred to Lieut. Col. Peter C. Hains, Corps of Engineers, who reports as follows:
"A wooden bridge is now maintained by the United States across Mill Creek,

This bridge frequently needs repairs on account of the perishable nature of the material used in its construction and the destructive nature of the teredo. The Gövernment, I understand, is compelled, under the deed of cession to the United States of the site of Fort Monroe, to maintain a bridge across this stream. It would ultimately be more economical to the United States to maintain a more substantial structure than the existing one, and it would be a greater convenience that the rubble. ience to the public.

ience to the public.
"A more substantial bridge than the existing one can be built for $20,000, but a still better can be built for $25,000, and I would suggest that the latter amount be appropriated."

I concur in the foregoing report of Lieutenant-Colonel Hains, and recommend that the word "twenty" be stricken from line 7 of the bill and the word "twenty-five" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE.

J. C. DUANE, Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

Mr. FORD. The amendment does not appropriate $25,000, as the Chief of Engineers states $20,000 would build a good iron bridge.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order? Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that the point of order could be raised against it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies, $675,000: Provided. That not exceeding $300,000 of this appropriation may be advanced to marshals, to be accounted for in the usual way, the residue to remain in the Treasury, to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856, Revised Statutes: Provided further, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of marshals and their deputies within sixty days next after the same are presented for allowance.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think we should strike out in line 17 the word "three" and insert "four," and if he will look at the bill I will explain to him the reason why. After the sundry civil appropriation bill was prepared, and was in print, I sent a copy of it to the Attorney-General inviting his attention to that passage, and asking for any criticism he might have to make. In reply he addressed this letter to me. I will read it without caption or ad-

In answer to your letter of the 9th instant, transmitting a copy of the proposed sundry civil bill for the fiscal year 1890, and referring particularly to the last paragraph on page 37, it is respectfully suggested that in line 17 the word "three" should be stricken out and the word "four" inserted, for the reason that on the 1st day of January, 1889, $200,000 of this appropriation had been advanced for the current fiscal year, and that in the deficiency submitted to the Department $100,000 more is asked for the current fiscal year. It is also respectfully suggested that in line 24, page 87, and line 1, page 88, the words "and their deputies" be stricken out and there be substituted the words "under this appropriation."

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND. Attorney-General.

A. H. GARLAND, Attorney-General.

It is quite apparent now, I think, before the end of the current fiscal year this entire appropriation will be exhausted and some criminal courts, where the internal-revenue laws prevail and in the Indian Territory, will have to stop, because the marshals will be unable to retain deputies to issue process under existing statutes. I think it is proper, therefore, for the purpose of making trial of this law this amendment should be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I would hesitate to controvert the gentleman's proposition, because he is so much more familiar with the details of the duties of these marshals and the condition of things generally in that regard than I am; I attach a great deal of weight to his judgment. Therefore, while I have no authority from the committee to accept this amendment, I am free to say if it is offered I would feel myself inclined to vote in favor of it on the statement of the Attorney-General, which has been given by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. I have offered the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, one further observation. In line 24, on page 37 of the bill, it is provided—

That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit, adjust, and settle the accounts of marshals and their deputies, etc.

The words "and their deputies" are manifestly in there by some error or accident.

Mr. RYAN. They ought to be stricken out.
Mr. ROGERS. For the Department does not settle the deputies' accounts at all. I move, therefore, to strike these words out.
The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of United States commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $100,000. And no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless the prosecution has been commenced upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, or upon sworn complaint by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief and approved either before or after such arrest by a circuit or district judge or the attorney of the United States in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed or the prosecution is by indictment.

Mr. ROGERS.—I move to strike out in line 9 the words "prosecu-

Mr. ROGERS. I move to strike out in line 9 the words "prosecution is by" and insert after the word "indictment" the words "is found;" so that it will read "where the offense is alleged to have been committed or the indictment is found."

I favor this section of the bill, and think that makes plain the object of the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

FORLIG PRINTING AND EINDING.

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2.013,000; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely.

Mr. FAROUHAR Loffer the amendment I send to the desk

Mr. FARQUHAR. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 91, strike out the words "and thirteen" and insert "three hundred and sixty-three;" so that it will read, "$2,363,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment because I find in the present appropriation bill the amount is $2,218,000, while for the work of the preceding year Congress appropriated $2,281,000.

Now, in connection with asking for this additional $350,000, I desire to call the attention of the committee to an extract from the report of the investigation of the Government Printing Office, and I ask the Clerk to read the paragraphs which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Now let us see what that involves in the matter of delayed work, and what becomes of the bombastic claim of Benedict that the work of the office is further along than it was under his predecessor. The reserve of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress makes 51 volumes of over 1,200 pages each, according to Captain Brian's testimony on page 205.

Taking Benedict's statement that there has been an increase of 38 per cent, in the Congressional work of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress over that of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, the reserve work of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress will make 147 volumes of 1,200 pages each. This makes a total of 237,600 pages, or 14,550 signatures of 16 pages each remaining to be printed, with an average of over 1,000 copies on each signature, giving, in round numbers, with the usual percentage for waste added, a total of 15,295,500 impressions to be made on this delayed work. This will, according to the average shown by a statement of a day's work of the press-room, submitted by Captain Brian, on page 216 of the testimony, require 16 presses one year of continuous work to complete. Then all these 15,295,500 sheets will have to go through the folding-room to be folded and hydraulic pressed before they are ready for Mr. White in the bindery.

The foregoing represents an alarming amount of work on hand to be done, which, under former administrations of the Government Printing Office, was never allowed to accumulate. Add to this the cost of the paper necessary to print this immense amount of work, and a faint idea can be formed of the condition of the office at this time. It is within bounds to say that if not another order for printing should go into the office, and the whole time of the presses adapted to this class of work was employed on the reserve alone, it would require three months' time and an expenditure for labor and paper of over $100.000 to print the reserve work up to the condition it was left by Benedi [Here the hammer fell.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Oh, I hope not, Mr. Chairman. Time has been given to other gentlemen in discussion.

Mr. STEELE. If I can be recognized, I will yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. FARQUHAR. I want additional time. I do not think I shall ask over ten minutes. Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman consumes ten minutes on that side, we shall ask the same on this.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have no captious reason for discussing this question. I only ask the time, and if the gentleman from Tennessee wants time to reply I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object unless time is accorded to this side. Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there is any "side" about this. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee ask for the same length of time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do if it is consumed on the other side. Mr. RANDALL. I will ask unanimous consent that twenty minutes be allowed for debate on this question, and then that the vote shall be taken upon the paragraph and all amendments without further debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York for ten minutes.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I want, first of all, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that for the year 1890 there is a less estimate than there was for the past year, and I had the extract read for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the condition of things prevailing at the Government Printing Office at this time, and to show that a new system has prevailed in that office for the last two years. Heretofore it has been customary to work up the usual number of 1,900 copies when the type was put on the press. If advantageous, it was entirely worked up; and, when there was an opportunity, the reserve work was brought forward, and heretofore the Public Printers have kept the reserve work close up with the work at the end of each year. The present Public Printer, however, has a plan of electrotyping or stereotyping, in which, after working up his first 900 from the type, he stereotypes it and sets aside the plates, and lets the reserve work on the 1,000 lie by.

The extract just read shows the condition of things. That committee say there that it would take sixteen presses one whole year to work up the reserve work that is now in the Government Printing Office. Now, the condition is that this appropriation does not cover such an expense, neither for the press-work, for the binding, nor for the paper. Furthermore, we are confronted now with a strong probability of an extra session of Congress. We are also confronted with the condition that after the first quarter another deficiency bill will come in. We are confronted, too, with a condition which has existed now for four years in the appropriation bills of this House—that of the Public Printer being forced to come in here with a deficiency bill begging for enough money to run his office.

Now, that is the condition. There is no politics in this. It is simply that the Congress of the United States has, by the passage of bills for printing and by the subdivision of printing for the Departments, imposed upon the present Public Printer and his successor more work than the money appropriated will cover. Now, why should we run into a deficiency? I am not criticising the present Public Printer. I have no desire to do that, because reports have been presented fairly by the majority and minority of the committee, and I am willing that the matter should rest there. But I am not willing to stand here as we have done in the past. I have questioned this committee before especially two years ago—to know why the House, knowing that the work must be done, does not provide the money to do it. There is no economy in that.

I also desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and the House to the fact that the estimates made by the Public Printer for this year are $2,779,751, and he is only allowed in this bill $2,218,-000—over half a million cut out of the estimates. This is for what purpose? It does not seem to me that there is any justification for it.

Now, devoid of all feeling that I might have as to the way in which this Printing Office has been run since Mr. Benedict has been Public Printer, I simply submit to the House that unless there are good reasons given by this committee why the appropriation should be half a million dollars less than the estimates, this House ought to take the remedy into its own hands. I hope there were sufficient reasons. But I want to say now that in my experience of that office in the last four years, if you vote this $2,218,000 now, in less than six months you will have to meet a deficiency or disable the whole working force in that establishment.

Two years ago I asked the chairman of this committee if the two millions proposed to be appropriated would run the office. He said, "Yes." And I find that the first deficiency that came in was for $231,000. In 1887 the deficiency was $85,000; in 1888 it was $108,000, and in 1889 it was $83,000.

Now, I question whether there is any other branch in which provision is made of so much money only as will meet the exact working needs of the Department. I think it seems to be the rule that deficiency bill after deficiency bill is to come into this House, and seemingly we have not either the sense or the courage to provide a proper amount at the proper time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, if he will

Mr. FARQUHAR. I yield, certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman if he means to say that this matter of deficiencies for the public printing began with the administration of Mr. Benedict?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The deficiency of Mr. Benedict commenced in 1886. That deficiency extended partly into one administration and partly into the other. That was for $231,000. The whole of the next deficiency of $85,000, and of the next of $108,000, and of the last of $83,000, is his own.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. CUMMINGS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore a message was received from the Senate by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, which announced agreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1481) granting a pension to Allen White Dowling; and also to the bill (S. 3233) granting a pension to Penken Ash. sion to Reuben Ash.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 3663) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. 3830) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved February 18, 1888.

It also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 6105) donating two 6-pound brass cannon to the Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MAN-DERSON, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on its part.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I say that from the official figures furnished me Mr. FARQUHAR. I say that from the olicial figures furnished me by the Committee on Appropriations. I pretend to say, and I do say, that that is all as far as I have any official information. I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has about three minutes left. Mr. FARQUHAR. That is enough.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the deficiencies did not begin under the present intervalent of the Correspond Pointing Office.

der the present incumbent of the Government Printing Office. deficiency clearly chargeable to his predecessor, Mr. Rounds, in 1886, was $231,000. Since Mr. Benedict's term began the deficiencies clearly chargeable against him are as follows: In 1887, $85,000; in 1888, $108,-000; in 1889, the current year, $63,000. It will be seen, therefore, that Mr. Benedict's deficiencies for three years do not aggregate much more than the single deficiency of the last year of Mr. Rounds. much for Mr. Benedict's administration as compared with that of his

Mr. FARQUHAR. Was the whole of that $231,000 a real deficiency in Mr. Rounds's administration?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether it was real or fancy, but I know it was a deficiency.

Mr. FARQUHAR. 1 know that when I was on the Committee on Printing there was $95,000 of that deficiency to be properly chargeable to that administration.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. If the gentleman alludes to the leaves of absence for fifteen days which began in 1887 and was made thirty days in 1888, that will show Mr. Benedict to still greater advantage in comparison with his predecessor, because in 1887 the change of law in that respect involved a charge of some $95,000 against the Public Printer, and when you come to 1888 the amount for the thirty days' leave is $190,000 leave is $190,000.

Mr. RYAN. Was not the deficiency of 1886 expended in part under the present incumbent of the Public Printing Office?

Mr. RANDALL. No; the deficiency of 1886 is clearly chargeable to Mr. Rounds, and not to Mr. Benedict.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was not discussing that question at all. I was simply calling attention to the fact that the appropriation bills for years have not carried sufficient money to do the public printing.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, you seemed to impress several other gentle-men, as you did me, with the idea that you meant that the deficiencies under Mr. Benedict were attributable either to insufficient appropria-inder Mr. Benedict were attributable either to insufficient appropriations or to a lack of business capacity on his part.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I was not discussing that at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I have shown that the aggregate of Mr. Benedict's deficiencies for three years was only about equal to the deficiency of Mr. Rounds for his last year, and I have shown further, to the advantage of Mr. Benedict, that those deficiencies included an item of $95,000 in 1887 for the fifteen days' leaves and $190,000 in the next year for the thirty days' leaves.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In what way is the money for the leaves of absence provided?

Mr. RANDALL. It was originally provided in the law which granted the leaves of absence.

Mr. FARQUHAR. So that the money was provided otherwise than in this appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDALL. All these items are embraced in these figures of which the gentleman has a copy. The figures include the expense of the fifteen days' leaves and also of the thirty days' leaves. I have shown that Mr. Benedict's deficiencies for three years are not equal, or not much more than equal, to Mr. Rounds's deficiency in 1886. I have shown also that in 1887 there was an appropriation of $95,000 required and in 1888 an appropriation of $190,000 for leaves of absence. Now, I want to show further that the amount which we give this year is about the same that Mr. Benedict has been spending every year for the last three years. In 1887 the amount was $2,180,000, including the deficiency of that year of $85,000. In 1888 it was $2,230,000, including the deficiency of $108,000. In 1889 it will be $2,281,000, including the deficiency which was passed just before Christmas. We recommend the appropriation of $2,218,000, including the pay for leaves of absence, which is about the average sum for the last three years. The amount therefore is entirely adequate in my judgment, estimating upon the same basis upon which the business of the Printing Office has been done for the past three years, and these figures show further that the proposition to increase the amount $350,000 for the probable new incumbent of the office is not reasonable or necessary.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania before he takes his seat whether it has not appeared from examinations which have been made for eight or ten years past that the Pub-lie Printer has generally been two or three years behind in the matter of printing documents'

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes. He is better up in that part of the busimess than he has been for many years.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Much nearer up. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the question of the deficiencies to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] have referred, but one question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] has introduced, in regard to the policy pursued by the present Public Printer, as compared with previous occupants of that office in regard to printing the "reserve" copies of ous occupants of that office, in regard to printing the "reserve" copies of public documents, I do desire to address myself to. I insist that the present policy is the economical one. The special committee of this House charged with the investigation of the Government Printing Office examined carefully into this question in the progress of that investigation made during last session.

Now, I do not wish to set up my opinion as against that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], who is an old printer and probably an expert in these matters; but I do not concede that he has given closer attention to the workings and internal operations of the Government Printing Office than I have, and which I was forced to do in the conduct of that investigation. I base the statement I make, not upon my own knowledge of printing, but upon the testimony adduced before the special committee charged during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress with the investigation of the Government Printing Office. I had the honor to prepare the report of that committee and submit it to this House. I beg leave to quote from that report upon this point the following a beginning on page 47 this point the following, beginning on page 47, as a complete answer to the complaint the gentleman from New York makes in the printing and handling of the "reserve" work of the office:

and handling of the "reserve" work of the office:

It was the custom under former Public Printers, including Mr. Rounds, to print all the "reserve," which is 1,900 copies, of documents and books ordered by law when the "up-number"—that is, the number of documents sent to Congress—was published. This number is the same in every publication. In such cases, when the up-number—those delivered immediately to Congress—were bound, the remainder of the edition, known as "the reserve," was held in an unbound condition. The rule was to print the whole edition at one time. The type was then distributed. Upon the delivery of the up-numbers to Congress, the remainder, known as "the reserve," was tied up in unbound packages. The various signatures (16 or 32 pages) were placed in packages by themselves and stowed away in store-houses rented for that purpose. This reserve of printed matter remained there sometimes for months, and even for years, before the office was ready to bind it. When ready for binding, the number of signatures necessary to fill out the number of documents ordered by law should have been found in each package. This would have been the case if the count had been accurate and a proper number of signatures printed before they were stored away.

had been accurate and a proper number of signatures printed before they were stored away.

The committee found that in the administration of Mr. Rounds there was frequently no proper count. In very many instances there was a large excess of signatures, and, again, the signatures were short as to number. When the signatures were found to be excessive they were thrown out as waste paper. When they were short, too few in number, it was necessary to reset the type and print a sufficient number to supply the deficit. The records of the office show the quantity of printed matter, known as excessive signatures, thrown aside as waste paper in binding this reserve. A careful statement was furnished the committee of its amount for seventeen months preceding the retiring of Mr. Rounds from office. This statement appears in the testimony of W. E. Scudder, on page 587 (of printed testimony), and is as follows:

Imperfect signatures sold as waste from May, 1885, to September, 1886, inclusive (seventeen months).

Month.	Number.	Month.	Number.

Server Towns I was to be			318, 547

A similar statement for the first seventeen months following the incumbency of the present Public Printer is inserted, and is as follows:

Imperfect signatures sold as waste from October, 1886, to February, 1888, inclusive (seventeen months).

Month.	Number.	Month.	Number.
1886, October November December 1887. January February March April May June July	56, 320 32, 556 30, 121 25, 957 9, 234 48, 765 52, 072 12, 019 17, 511 19, 887	1887. August	11, 753 9, 541 22, 146 47, 147 12, 201 14, 440 10, 195 431, 865

These statements cover thirty-four months. The first is altogether the work of Mr. Rounds, and of the latter over 80 per cent, was his work. (See W. E. Scudder's testimony, page 597.) Thus in thirty-four months there accumulated 750,412 pounds of these imperfect or excessive signatures—nearly 400 tons! This was all printed matter. The paper, outside of the composition, press-work, ink, etc., alone cost at least $15,000 or $20,000. This waste was due to the grossest negligence in a failure to print the proper number of signatures in the beginning.

This, however, does not show the real loss to the Government. It only shows the loss where too large a number of signatures were printed. In a like number of cases, by reason of the inaccuracy in the count when the press-work was being done, there was a failure to print a sufficient number of signatures in a given work. When the work went to the bindery, after oftentimes a delay of months and of years, if there was not a sufficient number of signatures to fill out the full edition ordered the type had to be reset and a number sufficient to make up the deficiency had to be printed. This involved almost as much expense as the printing of the whole edition in the first instance. To illustrate the magnitude of this reckless waste and extravagance, the committee insert a statement of signatures and copies reprinted during 1855-86-87 to make up the required sheets to fill the deficiency under Mr. Rounds's administration. It appears in the printed testimony at page 1097 and following:

Statement of signatures and copies reprinted during 1855-86-87 to make up the Statement of signatures and copies reprinted during 1885-'86-'87-'88 to make up the required sheets for work originally printed short under Mr. Rounds's administration.

This statement shows 1,671 signatures and 459,473 copies, equal to 7,561,568 pages of printed matter, and represents a waste of public money which is simply frightful. It is further developed in the proof that in very many instances where the signatures were supposed to be short by reason of imperfect count orders were given to have such deficit supplied by reprinting the required number. Afterwards it would be discovered that the proper number had really been printed at first, but had been mislaid or stored at some place with no mark or distinction, and that the reprinting of the supposed deficit was wholly unnecessary. Attention is called to the list, which shows the number unnecessarily reprinted, being already in print in the office. They are marked thus *. This old matter, when found, was useless. There was no law for binding it, and it was thrown into the waste. It shows a carcless and reackless disregard of duty which can not be excused. The committee invite attention to the proof upon these points in the printed testimony.

The course pursued by the present Public Printer in regard to binding the reserve on all work ordered is different from that of his predecessor. He has changed the methods of the office, and he now electrotypes nearly all publications provided by law. The plates are preserved in vaults. A much larger proportion of the work is either stereotyped or electrotyped than formerly. The up-number for Congress is at first printed from electrotype plates, and the plates are put away until the reserve number is needed. When the bindery is ready for the reserve, the plates are brought from the vaults, and the reserve number is printed. Not a sheet is printed until the office is ready to take it up and bind the volumes.

The advantages of this method are manifold. All the witnesses examined on this point agree. The committee copy from the testimony of the foreman of printing (H. T. Brian). Hessys (page 183), that the plan of stereotyping or electrotyping all forms, and not printing the reserve on Congressional documents until the bindery is ready for it, has been of vast benefit, convenience, and saving. He also states that without the facilities of the foundry the present volume of work on hand could not be satisfactorily met, and that the stereotype foundry "Q. Is the change from letter-press to electrotype of great benefit?"

"A. That is a great benefit. It is the best thing that Mr. Benedict has done, to have these forms electrotyped."

This is the testimony of Mr. Brian, the foreman of printing, who has

This is the testimony of Mr. Brian, the foreman of printing, who has been about twenty years in the office, nearly all the time as such foreman. He is very intelligent and knows all about the office. He says in his annual report to the Public Printer at the beginning of this Congress thatthe plan of stereotyping or electrotyping all forms, and not printing the reserve on Congressional documents until the bindery is ready for it, has been of vast benefit and convenience and saving. It prevents a blockade of type; it saves the wear of the type; it prevents filling the store-rooms with an immense amount of printed matter months before it can be used, and saves many handlings of the same and much cost of hauling and storage. Besides, it relieves the pressroom at a season when the demands upon it are the heaviest, and it gives work when otherwise it would be slack. The substitution of electrotyping for stereotyping in many cases has also resulted in much benefit, especially in job forms.

Such is the testimony of this witness, this expert, this old employé

Such is the testimony of this witness, this expert, this old employé of the Printing Office, and, by the way, who is a Republican.

I set this evidence, given under oath, over against the speech on this floor of the gentleman from New York. A number of other witnesses testified substantially as did Mr. Brian on this subject.

In conclusion let me say, Mr. Chairman, that there has been no economy adopted by the present Public Printer which has proved to be of more value, according to the testimony of witnesses before the investigating committee, than this one of not printing the reserve until it is ready to be bound. I thank the committee for extending my time and permitting me to print the foregoing tables, and for the privilege of extending my remarks.

of extending my remarks.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to make one remark as to what may ap Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to make one remark as to what may appear in the testimony taken before the investigating committee as to printing this "reserve." Now, whatever Mr. Brian or any one else in that Printing Office may say that this is economical, that it is better done, that it is right in the conduct of a printing office to print half the number and hold up the other half, any man who will say that does not know his business. I do not know of a single printing office in America which ever did State printing or otherwise that ever was guilty of such a piece of nonsense in printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON rose.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not yield to the gentleman. He has had his own time, and I am now speaking in my time. Here is one question on this point put to John G. Judd, of the firm of Judd & Detweiler (the most extensive printing house in the city), a man who has had fifty years' experience in the business, and he testifies as follows:

had fifty years' experience in the business, and he testines as ionows:

Q. The regular number on Congressional documents is about 1,900. On many of the forms in the Government Printing Office they work from the type what is called the up-number, which is in the vicinity of 900, and then lift and stereotype the form and put the plates back to press at some subsequent time, and print a thousand remaining copies for the reserve. What is your idea in regard to that plan as an economical proposition?

A. A man would be a fool to do it.
Q. How much longer would it take to print the full 1,900 than simply the upnumber, 900?

A. It would be about three-quarters of an hour if everything was working properly.

properly.

Q. When the plates are put back to press, would it not take about that much time to start the press?

A. It would take three times that much.

I have run printing offices as long as Mr. Brian, and I would regard myself as most incompetent to take charge of any office, to run a press even, let alone taking charge of a printing office, if I should do any

The gentleman from Tennessee makes an apology for the Printing ffice. But what are you going to do where they "reserve" half unprinted for three years, and the plates are left in the vault with not a tool put on them, not a sheet of paper provided to print them with, and the Departments looking for books and can not get them?

*These signatures and copies were found in the storage-room in the fall of 1887, and their reprinting was unnecessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON rose.
Mr. FARQUHAR. Wait one minute. You found the whole "reserve" under Mr. Rounds printed up, according to your own testimony taken before your own committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will read the testimony he will find it does not bear him out.

Captain White, the efficient foreman of binding, stated when he was on the stand last that the office was 87,255 volumes nearer up with its work when he testified in May, 1888, than when the present Public Printer, Benedict, took charge of the office.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the gentleman will examine the testimony he will find out that Mr. White backed out of his own testimony. It shows it was Rounds's printing, and that Benedict claimed to have done the All we want now is to provide for "reserve" work. It would be unfair to put a million of work over to Benedict's successor.

The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask to add the following table to my remarks:

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The reading of the bill was then concluded.

Mr. RANDALL. The Delegate from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] was permitted to pass over an amendment which I now call up.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "eighty-eight," in line 17, on page 45, insert "including $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for survey of the west boundary line of the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian reservation, in the Territory of

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move, on page 5, line 14, after the word "build-gs," to insert "other than for life-saving stations and pier-head lights."

This is necessary because the Government does not need that the original provision should apply to sites for life-saving stations, for the reason that the life-saving stations do not need the title in fee but only for use and occupation.

The amendment was agreed to.

I now offer this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. It was understood that the gentleman should have the right to submit an amendment to a preceding part of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 40, before the word "persons," insert "dealers or pretended dealers in counterfeit money and other fraudulent devices for using the United States mails and."

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered relates to that portion of the bill which appropriates a fund for the employment of secret-service agents for the Government. This secretservice force is employed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is restricted in its employment by the language used in the appropriation bill which makes provision for the force

Now, sir, the object of this amendment is to direct the attention of the Department and to direct this force to be employed, when not engaged upon other work for the Treasury Department, in the detection of certain classes of persons in our large cities who are engaged in the business of advertising for sale counterfeit money. We see frequent reports in newspapers about persons who have gone to our large cities and been victimized by these sharpers.

It is purely a confidence game, punishable under the laws of the State, and is a matter for police regulation by the States. Nevertheless there is a provision in existing law, section 5480 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for the punishment of persons who send out letters through the mails with the intent to defraud, and in fact there has been one conviction under this section of the statutes before Judge Blatchford of persons indicted for this offense.

I received a letter from a constituent during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and have received others since then, calling attention to the fact that letters advertising for sale or offering to sell counterfeit money were being sent broadcast throughout the country, and asking to have the secret-service force of the Government set upon the track of these parties to detect them and bring them to justice.

When in response to those requests I went to the Secretary of the Treasury, or in his absence to the Assistant Secretary, and presented the matter to him, I was informed that there was no law authorizing the employment of the force for such purposes, and that additional legislation was needed. I went to the chief of the secret service, at that time Mr. James J. Brooks, and told him the facts. He informed me that his force of detectives was stationed in the large cities; that they were under constant pay from the Government, but were not constantly employed, and that if we could put some such provision as I have offered in the appropriation bill authorizing the employment of the force for this purpose it could be used to bring these parties to justhe force for this purpose it could be used to bring these parties to justice and secure their punishment. He informed me that there would be no difficulty in detecting them, and in fact stated that he knew of several persons himself who had been driven by the force out of the counterfeiting business, and who subsequently engaged in this occupation, known in the commercial parlance of the day as the "green-goods" husiness

He mentioned the names of some who had made fortunes in the business, and among others named one Barney McGuire, of New York, as constituent, no doubt, of my friend who sits in front of me [Mr. Cum-[Laughter.] MINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Has the gentleman been operating in Tennessee? And this man boasted to the detectives that he had Mr. ENLOE. gone out of a business where the secret service could interfere with him and had gone into a respectable business where they could not

It may be worth while to call attention to the thoroughly systematic methods of these swindlers. They take the commercial reports from Dunn's and Bradstreet's agencies and watch the ebb and flow of individual fortunes in the commercial world. They scan the leading newspapers of the country for notices of fires and other individual mis-When misfortune befalls a merchant and his credit is impaired, when fire has destroyed the property of the citizen, or he is known from any cause to be in financial trouble, a letter, admirably framed to tempt him to dishonor, is mailed to him. A variety of such letters, adapted to every possible condition of financial distress, is kept in stock ready to be mailed immediately to those whose misfortunes might tempt them to resort to desperate and dishonest expedients in their effort to retrieve their fortunes

These letters are frequently sent to country merchants, to country postmasters, and to farmers, always in the strictest confidence, and with strong protestations of the good faith of the writer, and the absolute security with which the addressee can deal with him. There are various terms used to avoid the use of the ugly words "counterfeit money," the most common one being "green goods," but the purpose to offer for sale counterfeits is always made plain enough. The assurance is generally given that the money is printed on plates stolen from the Government, and that it is so well executed that the experts can not tell it from genuine money.

If the "sucker" seems disposed to bite, and responds, they often make assurance doubly sure by sending one-half of a genuine bill as a sample to be submitted by the would-be purchaser, to bankers or other experts as a test. Of course it stands the tests, and frequently an order accompanied by the cash goes forward by mail, and the fool who sent it looks in vain for the tenfold or greater return which he has been promised. A criminal in intent and in conscience, he reflects in silence upon the experience he has purchased, and the "green-goods" dealer drops him from the list. This is the method of disposing of the small fry who have only a few dollars to invest. The larger " always invited to visit the city, where the business can be conducted on a much more satisfactory basis, and with the assurance of greater bargains for the buyer. How often they find larger prey may be estimated from the number of exposures in the city press.

Since I began to investigate this matter about one year ago I have seen numerous notices in the daily papers of the more important vic-tims of these men. The man who goes to the city to meet them is at their mercy and in their power. He is shown genuine bills, he buys them and gives his money in exchange, and the moment the trade is made they begin to operate on his fears of detection, arrest, and punishment, and in that way induce him to trust them to go with him to an express office so he can send it home and relieve himself of all dan-If he consents, a trick of changing the bag on him that contains the package is played, and he goes home to find a package exactly similar in size and appearance containing only waste paper. That com-

If the purchaser has not lost all courage through his sense of guilt, and insists on keeping his hands on what he has bought, forcible methods are used, and he is either robbed on the spot or followed and robbed before he can get to his hotel, and Mr. Brooks assured me that he had reason to believe that men who resisted had been murdered to recover the money.

In August, 1885, I believe it was, James T. Holland, of Abileue, Tex., who had been decoyed to New York to buy "green goods," attempted to hold the money he had bought, and in the struggle over its possession he shot and killed Tom Davis, one of the men who had sold it to him. Hundreds of victims who had been robbed, says Mr. Brooks, had applied to the secret-service force in the Government employ for relief only to find that they had no authority to interfere, it being no violation of the Federal law and none of the business of the United States detectives to interfere. Where one makes complaint fifty will submit in silence rather than face exposure and disgrace.

Plain as this fraud is, the men engaged in it, through the use of the United States mail, are reaping a golden harvest from our 60,000,000 of people. Acting upon the best information I could get as to the remedy for this evil, I drew up a bill intended to cover this case, which passed the House and is now in the Senate, and while under the provisions of the law previously mentioned many convictions may be had, yet if that bill passes the Senate, as I am quite certain it will pass, there will be a great many more convictions, and we may reasonably hope that this business will ultimately be entirely suppressed.

Here is the full text of the bill as it passed the House:

Here is the full text of the bill as it passed the House:

An act to punish dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and other fraudulent devices for using the United States mails.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, in any post-office, letter-box, or other receptacle for the United States mail, any letter, circular, or other communication addressed to any other person, offering, or proposing to sell, give, deliver, or transfer, to any person, any imitation of any coin, bill, note, bond, or other security of the United States, or bank notes, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than three years.

I am not disposed, sir, to sympathize with the more intelligent victims of the men who are connected with this business, but the only way to break it up is to take some such vigorous steps as I have indicated, for while I think, as a matter of fact, these parties ought to be punished by the local tribunals, yet this is not often done because the victimized parties are afraid to invoke the aid and protection of the law which they have themselves violated. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. ENLOE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to ask if the gentleman has ever been victimized by Barney McGuire. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. I will state that I have not been; but the day after I introduced a bill on this subject I received a proposition from an enterprising constituent of my friend offering to make me the agent of the concern in Congress. [Laughter.] I have a letter here from him which contains the usual flattering inducements.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think it was offered probably because he knew who he was dealing with. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. No, he probably knew my immediate associates. [Renewed laughter.]
The amendment of Mr. ENLOE was adopted.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the provision for the Signal Office, I desire to have a letter printed in the RECORD which relates to an item in the bill for that bureau.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, January 24, 1889.

Washington City, January 24, 1889.

Sir: I have the honor to suggest that an item be inserted in the sundry civil bill, now pending, to read as follows:

"For expenses of equipping and maintaining meteorological stations in the West Indies or contiguous points, in connection with the announcement of hurricanes on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, $1,000." In connection with this item, I have the honor to say that the very great value and necessity for such stations are obvious to every one who has examined the question of West India hurricanes.

If the announcement of advancing hurricanes could be made several days in advance, it would prevent coasting vessels sailing from Boston, New York, Baltimore, and New Orleans southward or for the West Indies until the danger had passed.

I inclose charts showing the passage of the violent hurricane of November 23-28, 1888, from which you will see that the center of this very violent storm was over the Windward Isles on November 23, just six days before it reached the southern coast of New England.

The West India hurricane stations enabled this office in 1882 to give warning several days in advance of the violent hurricanes of September 3-12 and of October 6-12.

The violent storms of these two months did an enormous amount of damage, but it was estimated that the value of the search of the sea tober 6-12.

The violent storms of these two months did an enormous amount of damage, but it was estimated that the value of vessels and property detained in port by the warning issued by this office averaged many millions of dollars in each case, being variously estimated at from $15,000,000 to $23,000,000 in the aggregate.

The present inclosures relative to the late severe hurricanes emphasize the importance of this class of observations.

I have said in the draught submitted "West Indies and contiguous points" for the reason that the British Government strongly talks of laying a submarine cable from Bermuda to Halifax, and when the contemplated telegraphic communication is had with Merida, Yucatan, reports therefrom will greatly benefit the shipping interests of the cities of New Orleans, Mobile, Galveston, and other ports on the Gulf coast of the United States.

The amount formerly spent for this service was $4,000, but it was refused and the whole work abandoned when Congress required this office to submit itemized estimates for appropriations.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. Thomas Ryan, Chairman Subcommittee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to offer the amendment I send to the desk as new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Customs service; expenses of collecting the revenue from customs: To defray the expense of collecting the revenue from customs, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose, for the fiscal year 1800, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman want this to come in?
Mr. CANNON. At the end of the bill.
Mr. RANDALL (to Mr. CANNON). Do you want to be heard?
Mr. CANNON. Unless you will admit it.
Mr. RANDALL. I can not do that.
Mr. CANNON. Then I send this telegram to the desk to be read. The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 29, 1889.

Hon. Samuel J. Randall, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

In reply to your telegram of yesterday I have to state that upon the basis of receipts and expenditures of the customs service for the current fiscal year it is estimated that an additional appropriation of $250,000 will be required to defray the expense of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, why wait for a deficiency? The appropriation for collecting the customs revenues is five or five and a half million, I believe.

Mr. RANDALL. Five and a half million.
Mr. CANNON. Now, then, for several years it has been necessary to make an appropriation in addition to the permanent appropriation. In 1885 there was appropriated $277,000; in 1886, $230,000, and in 1888, $450,000. For the current year of 1889 the estimate formally transmitted and carried by this bill and appropriated was $450,000. By some oversight there was no estimate transmitted in the regular Book of Estimates for this additional amount. It was called to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury through the committee by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the Secretary very promptly telegraphs and says, as I have just read, that it would take $250,000 to pay the expense of collecting the revenues for the coming year, in his opinion, over and above the permanent appropriation, and then that will be $200,000 less than was spent last year, and less than was appropriated for this year.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, a telegram was sent to the Secretary by me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on the request of the gentleman from Illinois, who properly sought for information; but the Secretary has never transmitted any formal estimate to this House. Therefore the Committee on Appropriations were without any estimate; and of course should they have anticipated this matter it would have been a violation of the rule and a violation of the law perhaps. But now that the Secretary has ascertained that this amount is necessary, why, I take it for granted that he will send in a formal estimate to this House, and then it can be considered in connection with the deficiency bill. Really the committee have had no opportunity whatever to examine as to the amount; but, on the contrary, we have gone along in that committee as though there was to be no deficiency for the year ending June 30, 1890. When the committee shall have had an opportunity upon a formal estimate—not upon a telegram exactly—it can be considered by the committee in connection with the bill providing for deficiencies, and the gentleman from Illinois is a member of that subcommittee.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, it is not a defi-

Mr. RANDALL. I know it is not now a deficiency.
Mr. CANNON. On the contrary, we appropriated $450,000 for the current year.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no deficiency, but there was no estimate at all. It is true we have a telegram from the Secretary to that effect, but where does that show that there will be a deficiency?

Mr. LONG. It is not a deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. It would be a deficiency next year.
Mr. CANNON, Oh, no.
Mr. RANDALL. It is to make an appropriation for an amount greater than the permanent law gives, and the matter ought to be ex-

Mr. LONG. How can you have a more formal estimate than the telegram gives?

Mr. RANDALL. We have never had a single opportunity to examine anything about it in the committee. This telegram came yesterday evening, did it not?

Mr. CANNON. I received it this morning. An inquiry was made several days ago. The reason the telegram was sent, as I stated before, was that in the last year there was a deficiency, or rather an additional appropriation, of $450,000. It was not made in this bill or one similar to it. "For the services of the current year, $440,000"—

Mr. RANDALL rose.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman will allow me to complete right there. This is for $250,000. If that be given, we have $200,000 less than the amount spent last year, and $200,000 less than is appropriate the second se priated for this year. I am perfectly confident that the amount will be required for the service for the next year, and I think it is proper and right now to step in and appropriate according to the estimate as furnished by the telegram.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to correct a statement that I made in connection with this matter. I said that no estimate had been received. I have since been advised by the Speaker of the House that he received one this morning, and that in due course it will come to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. But it belongs upon this bill, and I want to put the whole amount in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not had any opportunity to examine it.

Mr. LONG. If that be the case, we can not know any more about it than we do on that telegram. The fact is, there is a permanent appropriation of $5,500,000 for collecting the customs revenue. For the last four years that has not been enough, and every year we have the last four years that has not been enough, and every year we have been requested to appropriate an additional amount of two hundred or three hundred thousand dollars in the deficiency bill, and last year it was $450,000. Thus we know, not only from our former experience, but from the telegram that we have received from the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as from the estimate which he has sent, and which the Speaker received this morning, that the $5,500,000 will not be enough. He has informed us that $250,000 are necessary, and it is mere child's play not to make the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 63, noes 72.

Mr. RANDALL (to Mr. CANNON). It can come in as an independent proposition hereafter.

Mr. CANNON. It will come in on the deficiency next year.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question upon the amend-ments and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon these amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. I had intended to ask separate votes on several of the amendments, but as they are quite numerous and as the hour is so late, I am willing that the vote shall be taken upon them in gross.

The SPEAKER. If no separate vote is demanded on any amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole—

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.
Mr. McADOO. Being recognized, I will yield to the gentleman from

Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to submit a report on the investigation heretofore ordered by the House in relation to the fur-seal and other fisheries of Alaska, accompanied by a bill (H. R. 12432), and to ask unanimous consent that the bill, the report, and the evidence be printed and recommitted to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fishwithout the evidence, be printed in the RECORD.

Be tt enacted, etc., That section 1963 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 1963. Within one year prior to the time when the lease heretofore made by the Secretary of the Treasury to "The Alaska Commercial Company," of the right to engage in taking fur-seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, pursuant to the act of July 1, 1870, chapter 189, or when any future similar lease expires, or is surrendered, forfeited, or terminated, the Secretary of the Treasury shall lease to proper and responsible parties, for the best advantage of the United States, having due regard to the interests of the Government, the native inhabitants, their comfort, maintenance, and education, as well as to the interests of the parties heretofore engaged in the trade and the protection of the fisheries, the right of taking fur-seals on the islands herein named, and of sending a vessel or vessels to the islands for the skins of such seals, for the term of twenty years, at an annual rental of not less than $5,000, to be reserved in such lease and secured by a deposit of United States bonds to that amount; and the additional sum of not less than $5,50 for each fur-seal skin taken and shipped from the islands of St. Paul and St. George, during the continuance of any lease, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and every such lease shall be duly executed in duplicate, and shall not be transferable; and the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to make all needful regulations for the collection and payment of the same, and to secure the comfort, maintenance, education, and protection of the natives of those islands, and also to carry into full effect all the provisions of this chapter except as otherwise prescribed. And he shall give at least sixty days' notice of the letting of said lease by publication in at least one daily paper published in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Chicago, New Orleans, St. Louis, and San Francisco, inviting bids for the same.

SEC. 2. That section 1866 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was intended to include and apply, and is hereby declared to include and apply, to all the waters of the Beh

Mr. Dunn, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report:

The committee was directed to "investigate the fur-seal fisheries of Alaska, and all contracts or leases made by the Government with any person or companies for the taking of fur-seals or other fur-bearing animals in Alaska; the character, duration, and condition of such contracts or leases; and whether and to what extent the same have been enforced and compiled with or violated; the receipts therefrom, and the expenses incurred by the Government on account of any such contract or leases; and to fully investigate and report upon the nature and extent of the rights and interests of the United States in the fur-seal and other fisheries in the Behring Sea in Alaska; whether and to what extent the same have been violated, and by whom; and what, if any, legislation is necessary for the better protection and preservation of the same."

FIRST. AS TO THE SEAL FISHERIES.

The fur-seal rookeries of Alaska are located on the Pribylov group of islands, situate near the center of that part of Behring Sea lying within the boundary of the territory ceded by the Emperor of Russia to the United States.

The island of St. Paul has an area of 33 square miles, and St. George 27 square miles.

Lieutenant Maynerd United States Navy, who was detailed by the Secretary.

Lieutenant Maynard, United States Navy, who was detailed by the Secretary pursuant to the act of April 22, 1874, to inquire into the condition of the seal fisheries in Alaska, in his report says (Executive Document No. 43, first session Party with Converse)

Leucenant Maynard, United States Navy, who was detailed by the Secretary pursuant to the act of April 22, 1874, to inquire into the condition of the seal fisheries in Alaska, in his report says (Executive Document No. 43, first session Forty-ninth Congress):

"They (the seal islands) are enveloped in summer by dense fogs through which the sun rarely makes its way, and are surrounded in winter by fields of ice, driven down from the Arctic by northern gales. They have no sheltered harbors, but slight indentations in the shore-line afford a lee for vessels and a tolerable landing-place for boats in certain winds. The shores are bold and rocky, with strips of sand-beach and slopes covered with broken rocks at intervals between the cliffs, and the interior of both is broken and hilly; neither tree nor shrub grows upon them, but they are covered with grass, moss, and wild flowers. For nearly one hundred years fur-seals have been known to visit them annually in great numbers for the purpose of bringing forth and rearing their young, which circumstance gives them no inconsiderable commercial importance. The seals occupy the islands from the breaking away of the ice in the spring until it surrounds them again in the early winter; that is, from about the middle of May until December."

It is further shown by the testimony before the committee that on their return to the islands after their temporary absence during the winter these animals generally select the locations on the rookeries which they had formerly occupied. It appears, too, that all the Alaska fur-seals are born on these islands, that they are distinct animals, and have none of the characteristics of fish, and will drown in the water until they are taught to swim by their elders.

In former years fur-seals were found in great numbers on various islands of the South Pacific Ocean; but after a comparatively short period of indiscriminate slaughter the rookeries were deserted, the animals having been killed or driven from their haunts; so that now the only exist or sex.

The law prohibits the killing of fur-seals in the Territory of Alaska or the waters thereof, except by the lessee of the seal islands, and the lessee is permitted to kill during the months of June, July, September, and October only;

and is forbidden to kill any scal less than one year old, or any female scal; "or to kill such scals at any time by the use of fire-arms, or by other means tending to drive the scals away from those islands." (Rev. Stat., sec. 1960.)
Governor Simpson, of the Hudson Bay Company, in his "Overland Journey Round the World," 1841-42, page 130, says:

"Some twenty or thirty years ago there was a most wasteful destruction of the scal, when young and old, male and female, were indiscriminately knocked in the head. This imprudence, as any one might have expected, proved detrimental in two ways. The race was almost extirpated; and the market was glutted to such a degree, at the rate for some time of 200,000 skins a year, that the prices did not even pay the expenses of carriage. The Russians, however, have now adopted nearly the same plan which the Hudson Bay Company pursues, in recruiting any of its exhausted districts, killing only a limited number of such males as have attained their full growth, a plan peculiarly applicable to the fur-scal, inasmuch as its habits render a system of husbanding the stock as easy and certain as that of destroying it."

In the year 1800 the rookeries of the Georgian Islands produced 112,000 fur-scals. From 1806 to 1823, says the Encyclopædia Britannica, "the Georgian Islands produced 1,200,000 scals, and the island of Desolation has been equally productive." Over 1,000,000 were taken from the island of Mas-5-fuers and shipped to China in 1793-99.—Fanning's Voyages to the South Sea, page 299.

In 1820 and 1821 over 200,000 fur-scals were taken at the South Shetland Islands, and Captain Weddell states that at the end of the second year the species had there become almost exterminated. In addition to the number killed for their furs, he estimates that "not less than 100,000 newly-born young died in consequence of the destruction of their mothers,"—See Elliott's Report, 1884, page 118.

In 1830 the supply of fur-scals in the South Seas had so greatly decreased that he vessels engaged in this

At Antipodes Island, off the coast of New South Wales, 400,000 skins were obtained in the years 1814 and 1815.

Referring to these facts, Professor Elliott, of the Smithsonian Institution, in his able report on the seal islands, published by the Interior Department in 1884, says:

"This gives a very fair idea of the manner in which the business was conducted in the South Pacific. How long would our scaling interests in Berhing Sea withstand the attacks of sixty vessels carrying from twenty to thirty men each? Not over two seasons. The fact that these great southern rookeries withstood and paid for attacks of this extensive character during a period of more than twenty years, speaks eloquently of the millions upon millions that must have existed in the waters now almost descreted by them."

Mr. R. H. Chapel, of New London, Conn., whose vessels had visited all the rookeries of the South Pacific, in his written statement before the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, said:

"As showing the progress of this trade in fur-seal skins and the abuses of its prosecution, resulting in almost total annihilation of the animals in some localities, it is stated on good authority that from about 1770 to 1800 Kergueler's Land, in the Indian Ocean, yielded to the English traders over one million skins; but open competition swept off the herds that resorted there, and since the latter year hardly one hundred per annum could be obtained on all its long coasts. Afterward Mas-4-fuera Island, near Juan Fernandez, was visited, and fifty thousand a year were obtained; but, as every one that desired was free to go and kill, the usual result followed—the seals were exterminated at that Island, and also at the Galapagos group, near by.

"Falkhand and Shettland Islands, and South American coasts, near Cape Horn, came next in order; here the seals were very abundant. It is stated that at the Shetlands alone one hundred thousand per annum might have been obtained and the rookeries preserved, if taken under proper restricti maintenance of the peace and the protection of the animals from indiscriminate slaughter.

"The preservation of these animals by the observance of strict regulations in hunting them is not only a matter of the highest importance in an economical view, but a matter of life or death to the natives. Hitherto seals have been hunted under the supervision of the Russian company, and exclusively by the natives, who are trained from children to that occupation, and derive from it their clothing and subsistence. They have been governed by exact and stringent rules as to the time of hunting and the number and kind of seals to be taken. * * The United States can not, of course, administer such a trade as a Government monopoly, and the only alternative seems to be to grant the exclusive privilege of taking these animals to a responsible company for a series of years, limiting the number of skins to be taken annually by stringent provisions. A royalty or tax might be imposed upon each skin taken, and a revenue be thus secured sufficient to pay a large part of the expense of the Territory."

nue be thus secured sufficient to pay a large part of the expension tory."

Hon. C. A. Williams, of New London, Conn., one of the principal shareholders in the Alaska Commercial Company, who has been engaged in the business of whaling and seal-hunting as the successor of his father and grandfather in that pursuit, was called before the committee and testified to facts from his own experience and that of his house. He said:

"The history of sealing goes back to about 1790, and from that to the early part of this century.

"In the earlier period of which I speak there were no seals known in the North Pacific Ocean. Their particular haunt was the South Atlantic. They were discovered by Cook in his voyages, on the island of Desolation, by Weddell, in his voyages to the South Pole, on the island of South Georgia and Sandwichland, and by the later voyagers, whose names escape me, in the islands of the South Pacific Genari. When the number of seals on those islands were first brought to the notice of British merchanis they pursued the hunting of these animals on the island of Decolation. The most authentic authority we have about the matter is derived from reports made by these voyagers as to the number of seals taken from those places, and although they are not entirely accurate, I think they are fully as accurate the property of the p

DANGER OF THE EXTERMINATION OF THE ALASKA ROOKERIES.

We have already mentioned that the present number of seals on St. Paul and St. George Islands has materially diminished during the last two or three years. The testimony discloses the fact that a large number of British and American vessels, manned by expert Indian seal-hunters, have frequented Berling Sea and destroyed hundreds of thousands of fur-seals by shooting them in the water and securing as many of the carcasses for their skins as they were able to take on board. The testimony of the Government agents shows that of the number of seals killed in the water not more than one in seven, on an average, is secured, for the reason that a wounded seal will sink in the sea. So that for every thousand seal-skins secured in this manner there is a diminution of seal life at these rookeries of at least seven thousand. Added to this is the fact that the abooting of a female seal with young causes the death of both. If the shooting is before delivery that, of course, is the end of both; if after, the young seal dies for want of sustenance.

During the season of 1885 the number of contraband seal-skins placed on the market was over 13,000; and in 1886, 25,000; in 1887, 34,000; and in 1885 the number of illicit skins secured by British cruisers was less than 25,600, which number would have been largely increased had not the season been very stormy and boisterous. American citizens respected the law and the published notice of the Secretary of the Treasury, and made no attempt to take seals.

From this it appears that, during the last three years, the number of contraband seal-skins placed on the market amounted to over 97,000, and which, according to the testimony, destroyed nearly three-quarters of a million of furs, causing a loss of revenue amounting to over $2,000,000 at the rate of tax and rental paid by the lessee of the seal islands.

SECOND. AS TO THE CONTRACT OR LEASE.

The only contract or lease made by the Government with any persons or companies for the taking of fur-seals or other fur-bearing animals in Alaska was a lease of the right to take fur-seals for their skins for a period of twenty years from May I, 1870, on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, to the Alaska Commercial Company of San Francisco; for which privilege said company agreed to pay to the United States a rental of $55,000 per annum, and a revenue tax or duty of $2.62\(\frac{1}{2}\) per skin taken and shipped from the islands; to furnish to the inhabitants of said islands free of charge 2,500 dried salmon annually, 60 cords of fire-wood, a sufficient quantity of salt, and a sufficient number of barrels for preserving the necessary supply of meat; to maintain a school on each island for the education of the natives for a period of not less than eight months in each year.

To secure the payment of the rental a deposit of $50,000 in United States bonds is required, and for the complete performance of the covenants of the lease by the lessee a bond in the sum of $500,000 is exacted.

The lessee is permitted to kill 100,000 fur-seals on St. Paul and St. George Islands and no more; and is prohibited from killing any female seal or any seal less than one year old, and from killing any fur-seal at any time except during the months of June, July, September, and October, and from killing such seals by the use of fire-arms or other means tending to drive the seals from said islands; and from killing any seal in the water adjacent to said islands, or on the beaches, cliffs, or rocks, where they haul up from the sea to remain.

THIRD, THE AWARD AND EXECUTION OF THE LEASE.

THIRD, THE AWARD AND EXECUTION OF THE LEASE.

In reference to the letting of this contract your committee have carefully examined the evidence submitted to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Ways and Means at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, accompanying the report of said committee made thereon, pursuant to direction of the House—

"To examine into and report whether said lease was made and executed in pursuance of law; and whether said lease as made was to the best advantage of the United States, according to the offers of the bidders."

As the result of that investigation the Committee on Ways and Means reported that—

As the result of that investigation the committee on the that—
"The correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the bidders and the Treasury Department, together with the contract as made, may be found in Executive Document, first session Forty-first Congress, No. 108. The committee in considering the question whether the award to the Alaska Commercial Company was made to the best advantage of the United States, have been obliged to consider, first, whether, admitting that a more favorable offer in money had been made by others, the Treasury Department could have omitted to respect the clear and palpable discrimination in favor of that company by the act of Congress.

to consider, first, whether, admitting that a more favorable offer in money had been made by others, the Treasury Department could have omitted to respect the clear and palpable discrimination in favor of that company by the act of Congress.

"The action of the Secretary, based upon opinions of his official legal advisers, appears to conclude this question in the negative. It is very evident that no new and inexperienced parties in the business, unprovided with the necessary capital, implements, and knowledge, could have compiled with the requirements of the law, which had to be incorporated into the contract itself. In order to preserve the fur-scals from total annihilation, as has been done in the South Pacific Ocean, and indeed everywhere except on a small island belonging to Peru and two small islands belonging to Russia, none but experienced, judicious, and cautious parties should have been intrusted with the privilege of killing them. The old fur-scal fisheries have been destroyed by the foolish avarice of those who had access to the scals, who, in their thirst for large immediate gains, have killed in excess of the proper number each scason, which led to the eventual extermination of the scals at these points.

"It does not appear that either of the parties who put in bids for this lease had had any experience of the business or were provided with the necessary facilities for the faithful execution of the lease had it been awarded to them, except the Alaska Commercial Company, who were the successors of Hutchinson, Kohl & Co., and in possession of the business at that time, with persons in its employment of skill and experience, and which was composed of capitalists of conceded strength and high character. If the lease had been made with any firm or company who had falled in its execution, or who had proved faithless to the obligations incurred, the loss to the Treasury might have proved very serious in the extermination of the seals and the loss of the law; that it was made in the interest of the Junite

FOURTH, THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT BY THE LESSEE

FOURTH. THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT BY THE LESSEE.

All the witnesses concur in the statement that the Alaska Commercial Company has fully performed the covenants and stipulations of said contract, and observed the law and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury relating thereto.

It further appears from the testimony that in addition to the requirements of the lease, the lessee has contributed liberally to the welfare, comfort, and prosperity of the native inhabitants of the islands; it has built a comfortable house for each family on both islands, for which it charges no rent; provided stoves free of charge, and maintains a physician on each island all the year at its own cost, and provides medical attendance and medicines to the natives without charge, and maintains and supports the native widows and orphans.

The native laborers receive 40 cents for removing each seal-skin, or $40,000 for the catch of 100,000 seals, and are paid $1 per day while engaged at other labor. In 1887 they had on deposit to their credit in San Francisco, drawing interest, the sum of $64,732.11, and other natives of the Aleutian chain have been induced to accumulate savings amounting to $29,396.17.

Goods and merchandise are supplied by the company at an advance of 25 per cent, above San Francisco wholesale prices.

Their chief article of food is seal-meat, which costs them nothing; dried salmon are furnished by the company under its contract, and as they pay no rent and their fuel is free, their living expenses are but little. (See further Appendix A hereto.)

FIFTH. THE RECEIPTS AND EXPENSES OF THE GOVERNMENT ON ACCOUNT OF SAID CONTRACT.

The total amount paid by the lessee on account of said contract up to June 30, 1883, inclusive, was $5,597,100. The total amount expended by the Government during the same period was about $200,000 for salaries and traveling expenses of agents of the Treasury Department at the seal islands, and about $150,000 for the revenue-outers cruising Alaskan waters.

To the amount already received direct from the company should be added the sum received by the United States from customs duties on Alaska dressed seal-skins imported from Europe, amounting to $3,425,000, to which should be added the sum of $502,000 customs duties on imported seal-skins taken by said company under its contract with Russia, making an aggregate amount received by the Government on account of this industry of $9,525,283, being $2,325,283 in excess of the amount paid to Russia for the Territory.

SIXTH. THE NATURE AND EXTENT OF THE RIGHTS AND INTERESTS OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE FUR-SEAL AND OTHER PISHERIES IN DEHRING SEA.

UNITED STATES IN THE FUR-SEAL AND OTHER FISHERIES IN DEHERING SEA.

The rights and interests of the Government in the fur-seal and other fisheries in Alaska were acquired by purchase from Russia and conveyed to it by the treaty of cession.

The fur-seal rookeries were discovered in 1786, by Pribylov, a Russian subject, and in 1799 the right to take fur-seals was granted to the Russian American Company by the Russian Emperor. From the date of discovery down to the date of the transfer of Alaska to the United States, Russia claimed and exercised exclusive jurisdiction over those islands and asserted her ownership of these fur-bearing animals and disposed of them accordingly. No one ever questioned her right or asserted an adverse claim. No foreign vessel was permitted to touch at either of said islands during the entire period of Russia's occupation. Seal life was protected by her navy, both on the islands and in Behring Sea. By the treaty of cession this right was transferred to the United States. It includes the right to protect seal life on the islands, and in that part of Behring Sea included within the boundary of the territory conveyed.

The right of Russia to patrol the waters of Behring Sea and protect seal life was asserted and exercised for nearly a century, undisputed and unquestioned, and the United States having acquired that right by purchase from Russia has maintained it from the beginning. To illustrate: The killing of fur-seals by unauthorized persons was prohibited by act of Congress; the right to take a specified number each year for a period of twenty years at a fixed rate of tax and rental was authorized, with direction to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the time being, to renew the privilege to proper and responsible parties at the expiration of each period of twenty years.

The penalty affixed to the violation of the statute prohibiting seal killing is fine and imprisonment and confiscation of vessels, their tackle, apparel, and furniture.

The penalty affixed to the violation of the statute prohibiting seal killing is fine and imprisonment and confiscation of vessels, their tackle, apparel, and furniture.

The object of this law was, first, to protect this valuable industry, upon which the entire population of the islands depend for subsistence, and second, to secure the United States a perpetual revenue therefrom.

It is clear to your committee, from the proof submitted, that to prohibit seal killing on the seal islands and permit the killing in Behring Sea would be no protection; for it is not on the islands where the destruction of seal life is threatened, or seals are unlawfully killed, but it is in that part of Behring Sea lying between the "eastern and western limits" of Alaska as described in the treaty of cession, through which the seals pass and repass in going to and from their feeding grounds, some 50 miles southeast of the rookeries, and in their annual migrations to and from the islands.

This was known to Congress when the act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska" was passed, for in that act, as well as the preceding and subsequent acts in reference to Alaska, Congress expressly asserted our jurisdiction over the marine territory acquired by the purchase as well as over the land, and extended the laws of the United States over the entire territory embraced within the boundary specified in the treaty, as will appear from the following enactments:

1. The first legislative action in reference to Alaska was the act of July 27, 1868, appropriating $7,200,000 in payment of the price stipulated in the treaty with Russia of certain territory "therein described" and ceded to the United States. In other words, the appropriation was to pay for the territory described in the treaty of cession.

2. By the act also approved July 27, 1868, it is provided: "The laws of the United States relating to customs, commerce, and navigation are extended to and over all the mainland, islands, and waters of the terri

5. By the act approved July 27, 1888 (Revised Statutes, section 1956), it is provided that "no person shall kill * * any fur-seal or other fur-bearing animals within the limits of Alaska Territory or in the waters thereof.

The "limits" of Alaska Territory are defined by the treaty of eession as follows:

"The eastern limit is the line of demarkation between the Russian and Brit-

"The eastern limit is the line of demarkation between the Russian and British possessions in North America, etc.

"The western limit, within which the territories and dominion conveyed are contained, passes through a point in Behring Strait on the parallel of 65° 30' north latitude, at its intersection by the meridian which passes midway between the island of Krusenstern or Ignalook and the island of Ratmanoff or Noonarbook, and proceeds due north without limitation into the same Frozen Ocean. The same western limit, beginning at the same initial point, proceeds thence in a course nearly southwest through Behring Strait and Behring Sea, so as to pass midway between the island of Attou and the Copper Island of the Kormandorski complet or group in the North Pacific Ocean to the meridian of 193° west longitude, so as to include the whole of the Aleutian Islands east of that meridian."

(See treaty of cession by Russia to the United States March 30, 1867, for com-west longitude, so as to include the whole of the Aleutian Islands east of that meridian."

(See treaty of cession by Russia to the United States March 30, 1867, for complete description of boundary.)

In other words, the eastern limit of the territory ceded to the United States is the boundary between the British and Russian possessions; and the western limit, a line running in a southwesterly direction from the Frozen Ocean through Behring Strait and Behring Sea to the North Pacific Ocean, thus dividing Behring Sea into two distinct and separate parts.

The northern boundary is the Frozen Ocean, and the southern the southern coast of the Aleutian chain of islands.

These are "the limits of Alaska Territory," as laid down in the treaty—our title deed; the boundary of the territory referred to in the act appropriating the purchase-money; and repeated in section 1956, Revised Statutes, which prohibits the killing of fur-seals "within the limits of Alaska Territory."

It seems clear to the committee that the act prohibiting the killing of fur-seals "within the limits of Alaska Territory." was intended to apply to the acquired territory, land and water, embraced within "the limits" specified in the treaty of cession; just as the laws relating to customs, commerce, and navigation and to trade and commerce with the Indian tribes were, by the acts just referred to, extended over "all the mainland, islands, and waters of the territory ceded to the United States by the Emperor of Russia."

The Territory of Alaska consists of land and water. Exclusive of its lakes, rivers, harbors, and inlets there is a large area of marine territory which lies outside of the 3-mile limit from the shore, but is within the boundary lines of the territory transferred by Russia to the United States.

The rivers, lakes, harbors, and inlets, as well as the 3-mile belt of water contiguous to the shore, are part of the territory of the United States, and come under the operation of their laws without being specially named; and if the statutes

3-mile belt would have been included as part of the territory of the United

3-mile belt would have been included as part of the territory of the United States.

While it is true that an act of Congress relating to Alaska or any other Territory applies to its entire area, yet, in this case, out of abundant caution, and in order that there might be no room for doubt or question, the law-makers used the words "all the mainland, islands, and waters," having direct reference to the large area of marine territory on the west, which Mr. Summer, speaking for the treaty, told the Senate was "our part of Behring Sea."

"National territory consists of water as well as land."—Halleck's International Law, section 13.

The object of the act of July 1, 1870, was (as expressed in the title), "to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and the title would be a misnomer if its operation were restricted to the mainland, islands, and the 3-mile belt of water.

When this act was passed it was known to Congress that the Pribylov group Smile belt of water.

When this act was passed it was known to Congress that the Pribylov group of islands were the only seal islands in Alaska; and that there were not only no other seal rookeries in Alaska, but that there was no other place in the Territory on the mainland or on any other island, where fur-seals haul up, or are ever to be found, except in the waters of Behring Sea. Therefore the only places where they could be killed in Alaska were on the seal islands and in the waters of Behring Sea; and the prohibition necessarily applies to those two localities, for it would be idle to prohibition necessarily applies to those two localities, for it would be idle to prohibition at killing in localities where these animals are never to be found. By the same act the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to lease the privilege of taking fur-seals for their skins on said islands at a fixed tax and rental for a period of twenty years, thereby removing the prohibition as to one of the localities frequented by these animals, namely, the islands of St. Paul and St. George, and leaving the prohibition to apply exclusively to the waters of Behring Sea, the only other place where fur-seals are to be found in Alaska.

SEVENTII. THE OPERATION OF THESE STATUTES

Congress having made provision for the protection of seal life in Alaska, and appropriated money to equip the vessels of the Revenue Marine for that service, the Secretary of the Treasury dispatched revenue-cutters to Alaska with instructions to seize all vessels found engaged in killing fur-seals in Alaskan waters.

Pursuant to these instructions, a number of British and American vessels were seized, their cargoes of contraband seal-skins confiscated, and the vessels condemned by decree of the United States district court.

As early as 1831, it having been reported to the Treasury Department that unauthorized persons were killing seals in Alaskan waters, the Secretary caused a notice to be published in the newspapers printed at all the Pacific ports in this country stating that the law prohibiting seal killing in Alaskan waters would be enforced against all comers, and the penalties inflicted. Since then this notice has been published every year up to and including the present year, 1888.

In 1881, one D. A. D'Ancona, of San Francisco, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, making inquiry as to the extent of jurisdiction claimed by the United States over Behring Sea. In reply the Secretary informed him, under date of March 12, 1881, as follows:

"The law prohibits the killing of any fur-bearing animals, except as otherwise therein provided, within the limits of Alaska Territory, or the waters thereof, and also prohibits the killing of any fur-seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, or in the waters adjacent thereto, except during certain months.

"You inquire in regard to the interpretation of the terms 'waters thereof' and 'waters adjacent thereto,' as used in the law, and how far the jurisdiction of the United States is to be understood as extending.

"Presuming your inquiry to relate more especially to the waters of Western Alaska, you are informed that the treaty with Russia of March 30, 1867, by which the Territory of Alaska was ceded to the United States, defines the boundary of the territory so ceded. This treaty is found on pages 671 to 673 of the volume of treaties of the Revised Statutes. It will be seen, therefore, that the limit of the cession extends from a line starting from the Arctic Ocean and running through Behring Strait to the north of St. Lawrence Islands.

"The line runs thence in a southwesterly direction, so as to pass midway between the island of Attou and Copper Island of the Kormandorski couplet or group in the North Pacific Ocean to meridian of 193° west longitude. All the waters within that boundary to the western end of the Aleutian Archipelago and chain of islands are considered as comprised within the waters of Alaska Territory.

"All the penalties prescribed by law against the killing of fur-bearing animals would therefore attach against any violation of law within the limits before described.
"Very respectfully,

"H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary."

"H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary."

This decision was repeated by the Department April 4,1881, and on the 16th of March, 1886, the late distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Daniel Manning, sent the following letter to the collector of customs at San Francisco:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 16,1886.

"Sir: I transmit herewith for your information a copy of a letter addressed by the Department on March 12, 1881, to D.A. D'Ancona, concerning the jurisdiction of the United States in the waters of the Territory of Alaska and the prevention of the killing of fur-seals and other fur-bearing animals within such areas, as prescribed by chapter 3, Title XXIII of the Revised Statutes. The attention of your predecessor in office was called to this subject on April 4, 1881. This communication is addressed to you, inasmuch as it is understood that certain parties at your port contemplate the fitting out of expeditions to kill fur-seals in these waters. You are requested to give due publicity to such letters in order that such parties may be informed of the construction placed by this Department upon the provisions of law referred to.

"Respectfully yours,"

"D. MANNING, Secretary."

It having been claimed by the Canadian authorities in their brief relating to the seizure of Canadian vessels in Behring Sea by our revenue-cutters, that ex-Secretary Boutwell had decided that the United States had no jurisdiction over Behring Sea outside of the smile limit, the attention of Mr. Boutwell was called to the matter by Hon. W. W. Eaton, late chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, United States Senate, to which Mr. Boutwell made the following

"WASHINGTON, January 18, 1888.

"Sin: Since the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, I have examined with care the letter addressed to me as Secretary of the Treasury by T. G. Phelps, esq., then collector of customs at the port of San Francisco, dated March 25, 1872, and also my official reply thereto, dated April 19, 1872, in relation to the purpose of certain parties to capture fur-seal on their annual migration to the islands of St. Paul and St. George through the Ounimak Pass and through the neighboring approaches to the islands. Upon the examination of the correspondence my recollection is in a degree refreshed and my knowledge of the circumstances revived.

"The fourth sentence of Mr. Phelps's letter appears to proceed upon the idea that it was the purpose of the hunters, as their purpose was then understood by him, to take the seals upon the Pacific Ocean side of the Aleutian range of islands and near the passes mentioned and through which the animals were destined to move; and such was the view taken by me and on which my reply was based.

"Nor can I now see that there is ground for any other reasonable construction of the correspondence.

"Mr. Phelps appeared to have apprehended a diversion of the seals from the Ounimak Pass and the narrow straits near that pass, and his suggestion of a remedy was limited to the same field. Therefore, neither upon my recollection of facts as they were understood by me in 1872, nor upon the present reading of the correspondence, do I admit the claim of Great Britain that my letter is an admission of any right adverse to the claims of the United States in the waters known as Behring Sea. My letter had reference solely to the waters of the Pacific Ocean south of the Aleutian Islands.

"Very respectfully,

On the 12th day of October, 1870, Secretary Boutwell wrote to the collector of customs at San Francisco, as follows:

"Your communication of the 27th ultimo is received in relation to the illegal killing of the fur-seals at places in Alaska other than the islands of St. Paul and St. George. In reply I transmit herewith a letter, addressed to the collector at Sitka, instructing him to issue strict orders to his subordinates for the prevention of such illegal killing and traffic, and for the bringing of the offenders to punishment; and also for the seizure of all such seal-skin illegally taken as aforesaid, and for their transmittal to your port for forfeiture." * * (See Executive Document No. 83, first session Forty-fourth Congress.)

In October of last year the question as to the right of the United States to exclusive dominion and jurisdiction over our part of Behring Sea came before the United State district court in Alaska, in the cases of The United States w. The British schooners Dolphin, Anna Beck, Grace, and Ada, charged with violating the law prohibiting the killing of fur-seals in Alaskan waters.

A stipulation signed by the Queen's counsel, Mr. N. W. T. Drake, on the part of the British owners, and Mr. A. K. Delany upon the part of the United States, was filed, in which it was agreed and conceded that the masters of the vessels named were taking fur-seals in that portion of Behring Sea which is claimed by the United States under the treaty with Russia of March, 1867. To the libel of information the Queen's counsel of British Columbia filed a demurrer alleging that the district court of Alaska had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action, for the reason that the schooner was more than 1 marine league from the shore when seized, and that the act of Congress of July 27, 1868, is unconstitutional in that it restricts free navigation of the Behring Sea for sealing purposes.

In overruling the demurrer the court said:

constitutional in that it restricts free navigation of the Behring Sea for sealing purposes.

In overruling the demurrer the court said:

"The question of the constitutionality of the act of Congress of July 27, 1868, scarcely deserves notice, since it has been sustained by this court. (See United States vs. Nelson, 29 Federal Reporter, page 202. See same case, affirmed by the United States circuit court for Oregon, Weekly Federal Reporter of April 19, page 112. See also The Louisa Simpson, 2 Sawyer,)"

Here was a concession by counsel for British Columbia that the act of Congress extending the laws relating to customs, commerce, and navigation over all the mainland, islands, and waters of the territory ceded to the United States by the Emperor of Russia, extended said laws over all that portion of Behring Sea lying east of the sea-boundary line designated in the treaty.

In its decision the district court said (Dawson, judge):

"The conclusion I have reached is that the demurrer must be overruled, and it is so ordered; and that the judgment of forfeiture to the United States be entered against each of the vessels separately, together with their tackle, apparel, furniture, and cargoes, saving to the masters and mates their private property, such as nautical instruments and the like, and that a stay of proceedings of ninety days be granted as per stipulation filed."

No appeal was taken from this decision. Our exclusive jurisdiction over these waters having thus been asserted and exercised by the legislative and executive branches of the Government, and their action affirmed by the United States district court, is there now any reason why that jurisdiction should be relinquished?

The reasoning that would justify this Government in reversing its attitude on this guestion must be sufficient to convince the common understanding that quished?

The reasoning that would justify this Government in reversing its attitude on this question must be sufficient to convince the common understanding that justice and honesty demand it. The relinquishment of a vested right, repeatedly asserted and exercised by a great power jealous of its honor and dignity, coupled with a surrender of national territory, acquired in good faith from a neighboring state, whose honor would be questioned if we admit our title is defective, can only be justified by the adverse claimant assuming the burden of proof and establishing beyond question his own perfect title, the United States being in possession and claiming ownership. Until it is demonstrated that Russia, our grantor, had no title to these waters, or that she did not assert or exercise dominion over them, our right must be conceded; for it is admitted on all hands that whatever title Russia had at the date of the transfer of the territory we acquired and still possess.

The sixth article of the treaty of cession provides that—
"The cession hereby made conveys all the rights, franchises, and privileges now belonging to Russia in the said territory or dominion and appurtenances thereto,"

For the period of one hundred and forty years, dating from their discovery, these Alaskan waters were under the exclusive jurisdiction of Russia, and headominion over the reserved half of Behring Sea is still asserted and exercised; and the same is acknowledged by the United States and other nations.

Treasury Department Circular No. 13, of January, 1882, contained the published notice of the Russian consul at Yokohama, warning foreign vessels as follows:

"NOTICE." The reasoning that would justify this Government in reversing its attitude on

"At the request of the local authorities of Behring and other islands, the undersigned hereby notifies that the Russian Imperial Government publishes, for general knowledge, the following:

"I. Without a specialipermit or license from the governor-general of Eastern Siberia, foreign vessels are not allowed to carry on trading, hunting, fishing, etc., on the Russian coast or islands in the Okhotsk and Behring Seas, or on the northeast coast of Asia, or within their sea-boundary line.

"2. For such permits or licenses foreign vessels should apply to Vladivostock evolusively."

"2. For such permits or licenses foreign vessels should apply to value of exclusively.

"3. In the port of Petropaulovsk, though being the only port of entry in Kamschatka, such permits or licenses shall not be issued.

"4. No permits or licenses whatever shall be issued for hunting, fishing, or trading at or on the Commodore or Robben Islands.

"5. Foreign vessels found trading, fishing, hunting, etc., in Russian waters without a license or permit from the governor-general, and also those possessing a license or permit who may infringe the existing by-laws on hunting, shall be confiscated, both vessels and cargoes, for the benefit of the government. This enactment shall be enforced henceforth, commencing with A. D. 1882.

"6. The enforcement of the above will be intrusted to Russian men-of-war, and also Russian merchant vessels, which, for that purpose, will carry military detachments and be provided with proper instructions.

"A, PELIKAN, H. I. R. M. Consul.

"YOKOHAMA, November 15, 1881.".

This warning was published fifteen years after the transfer of the eastern half of Behring Sea to the United States, and gives notice to all concerned that Russia will enforce her jurisdiction over the western half within her "sea-boundary line."

RUSSIA'S TITLE TO BEHRING SEA.

The Sea of Kamschatka, as it was formerly called, was discovered by Vitus Behring, a Russian subject, in 1725. From the date of discovery until the purchase of Alaska its waters were surrounded by Russian territory, except the narrow straits leading to the Frozen Ocean and the southwestern outlet to the North Pacific. Within a few years from its discovery trading companies were formed and trading stations established on its coasts and islands by Siberian merchants and traders, and on the northwest coast of the North Pacific. The glowing accounts of the rich products of the new possessions stimulated Russian enterprises; companies were formed, ships were built, and factories established at different points on the coasts and islands.

In 1745 the Aleutian Islands were discovered, and in 1768 the whole archipelago and the peninsula of Alaska were explored by an expedition ordered by the Empress Catharine. The coast of British Columbia was discovered by Vancouver in 1790, and in the same year Gray entered the Columbia River, so that the title of Russia is the earliest on the Northwestern coast. Subsequently there were four other Russian expeditions: The first, under Commodore Billings, in 1785; the second, under Krusenstern, of the Russian navy, in 1893; the third, under Lieutenant Kotzebue, in 1815, and the fourth, under Admiral Lütke, in 1826.

As early as 1761 the Russian Government granted to certain merchants the ex-under Lleutenant Kotzebue, in 1815, and the fourth, under Admiral Lütke, in 1826.

As early as 1764 the Russian Government granted to certain merchants the exclusive right to trade upon the Aleutian Islands, reserving to itself a tithe of the profits; and in 1783 a trading company, which was originally formed at Okhotsk, established its headquarters at Kadiak, with branches at Algonak and Unalaska Island, and on Kenayan and Tshugatshain Bays. Numerous other companies were subsequently formed, but in 1797 the different interests were consolidated and a new company formed, with headquarters at Irkutsk, which made application to the Czar for an imperial charter. The imperial commission to whom the application was referred said: "Having received information from all sides of disorders, outrages, and oppressions of the natives caused in the colonies by parties of Russian hunters, as well as groundless claims advanced by foreign navigators to lands discovered by Russians, it had reason to hope that placing the business of that distant region in the hands of one strong company would serve on the one hand to perpetuate Russian supremacy there, and on the other would prevent many disorders and preserve the fur trade, the principal wealth of the country, affording protection to the natives against violence and abuse, and tending toward general improvement of their condition." (Bancroft's Hist. Alaska, 378.)

In accordance with this recommendation, an imperial ukase was issued December 27, 1799, as follows:

"By the grace of a merciful God, we, Paul the First, Emperor and Autocrat

"By the grace of a merciful God, we, Paul the First, Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, etc., to the Russian American Company under our highest

"By the grace of a merciful God, we, Fair the First, Supported of all the Russias, etc., to the Russian American Company under our highest protection.

"The benefits and advantages resulting to our Empire from the hunting and trading carried on by our loyal subjects in the northeastern seas and along the coasts of America have attracted our royal attention and consideration; therefore having taken under our immediate protection a company organized for the above-named purpose of carrying on hunting and trading, we allow it to assume the appellation of 'Russian American Company under our highest protection;' and for the purpose of aiding the company in its enterprise, we allow the commanders of our land and sea forces to employ said forces in the company's aid if occasion requires it, while for further relief and assistance of said company, and having examined their rules and regulations, we hereby declare it to be our highest imperial will to grant to this company for a period of twenty years the following rights and privileges:

"I. By the right of discovery in past times, by Russian navigators, of the northeastern (western) part of America, beginning from the fifty-fifth degree of north latitude and of the chain of falands extending from Kamschatka to the north to America and southward to Japan, and by right of possession of the same by Russia, we most graciously permit the company to have the use of all hunting grounds and establishments now existing on the northeastern (western) coast of America, from the above-mentioned fifty-fifth degree to Behring Strait, and on the same also on the Aleutian, Kurile, and other islands situated on the Northeastern Ocean.

"II. To make new discoveries not only north of the fifty-fifth degree of north Strait, and on the same also on the Aleutian, Kurile, and other islands situated on the Northeastern Ocean.

"II. To make new discoveries not only north of the fifty-fifth degree of north latitude, but further to the south, and to occupy the new lands discovered, as Russian possessions, according to prescribed rules, if they have not been previously occupied by any other nation, or been dependent on another nation.

"III. To use and profit by everything which has been or shall be discovered in those localities, on the surface and in the bosom of the earth, without any competition by others.

"IV. We most graciously permit this company to establish settlements in future times, wherever they are wanted, according to their best knowledge and belief, and fortify them to insure the safety of the inhabitants, and to send ships to those shores with goods and hunters, without any obstacles on the part of the government.

to those shores with goods and nunters, without any obstacles on the part of the government.

"V. To extend their navigation to all adjoining nations and hold business intercourse with all surrounding powers upon obtaining their free consent for the purpose, and under our highest protection, to enable them to prosecute their enterprises with greater force and advantage.

"VI. To employ for navigation, hunting, and all other business, free and unsuspected people having no illegal views or intentions. In consideration of the distance of the localities where they will be sent, the provincial authorities will grant to all persons sent out as settlers, hunters, and in other capacities, passports for seven years. Serfs and house servants will only be employed by the company with the consent of their landholders, and government taxes will be paid for all serfs thus employed.

"VII. Though it is forbidden by our highest order to cut government timber anywhere without the permission of the college of admiralty, this company is hereby permitted on account of the distance of the admiralty from Okhotsk, when it needs timber for repairs, and occasionally for the construction of new ships, to use freely such timber as is required."

The remaining paragraphs are not pertinent to the subject we are considering. We quote only the last one:

"In conclusion of this our most gracious order for the benefit of the Russian American Company under (highest protection), we enjoin all our military and civil authorities in the above-mentioned localities not only not to prevent them from enjoying to the fullest extent the privileges granted by us, but in case of need to protect them with all their power from loss or injury, and to render them, upon application of the company's authorities, all necessary aid, assistance, and protection. To give effect to this our most gracious order, we subscribe it with our own hand and give orders to confirm it with our imperial seal. Given at St. Petersburg, in the year after the birth of Christ 1799, the 27th day of December, in the fourth year of our reign.

"PAUL."

This assertion of dominion was not disputed or questioned by any of the powers; the right of the Autocrat of Russia to control and dispose of these possessions was conceded, tacitly at least, by all the nations. His title rested upon (1) discovery; (2) first occupation; (3) peaceful and undisputed possession for more than half a century. By virtue of this imperial decree, the Russian American Company as early as 1799, without protest or objection from any quarter, were invested with absolute control of all the territory embraced in its charter, from Behring Straits to the fifty-fifth parallel on the American coast, and as far south as Japan on the continent of Asia, subject only to the ultimate sovereignty of the Czar.

Twenty-two years later, upon the complaint of the company that foreign traders were interfering with the rights conferred by its charter, the Emperor Alexander issued the celebrated ordinance extending his dominion to the fifty-first parallel on the North American coast, and prohibiting foreign vessels to approach within 100 miles of the shore. We quote the first three sections:

"Whereas it appears from reports submitted to us that the commerce of our subjects on the Aleutian Islands and along that part of the coast of Northwestern America belonging to the Russian dominion is exposed to injury and various molestations owing to the existence of secret, illicit trade; and whereas it appears that the principal cause of such molestations is to be found in the want of regulations establishing the limits of navigation along these shores and prescribing the order of procedure in maritime matters along said shores, as in general on the eastern coast of Siberia and the Kurlle Islands, we have resolved to regulate these matters by a special ordinance herewith appended.

"Transmitting said ordinance to the administrative senate, we order that it be published for general information and the proper steps be taken to carry it into execution:

"Ordinance concerning the restriction of navigation and regulating the coast."

Ordinance concerning the restriction of navigation and regulating the coast-ing traffic along the coasts of Eastern Siberia, Northwestern America, the Aleu-tian and Kurile Islands, etc.

tian and Kurile Islands, etc.

"'SECTION I. The transaction of commerce and the pursuit of whaling and fishing, or any other industry, on the islands, in the harbors and inlets, and, in general, all along the northwestern coast of America from Behring Strait to the fifty-first parallel of northern latitude, and likewise on the Aleutian Islands, and along the eastern coast of Siberia, and on the Kurile Islands, that is, from Behring Strait to the southern promontory of the island of Urup, namely, as far south as latitude 45° 50′ north, are exclusively reserved to subjects of the Russian Empire.

"'SEC. 2. Accordingly, no foreign vessel shall be allowed either to put to shore at any of the coasts and islands under Russian dominion as specified in the preceding section, or even to approach the same to within a distance of less than 100 Italian miles. Any vessel contravening this provision shall be subject to confiscation, with her whole cargo.

"'SEC. 3. Exempt from this prohibition are: Vessels cast away in a storm, or compelled to put to shore on account of complete want of food provisions, provided they are unable to land anywhere else except at a coast belonging to Russia. In such cases the vessels are required to furnish proof of the real existence of causes necessitating the exemption. Ships sent out by friendly powers for merely scientific purposes are also exempted from the preceding regulation (section 2). Such ships must, however, be provided beforehand with passports issued by the Russian ministry of marine.'"

With reference to those portions of this ordinance which extended Russian dominion four degrees farther south and prohibited foreign vessels from approaching to within a distance of less than 100 miles from the shore, the Governments of Great Britain and the United States entered protests.

Mr. Adams, then Secretary of State, conceded the boundary named in the charter of the Russian American Company, namely, the fifty-fifth parallel on the coast of the North Pacific Ocean, but resisted what he designates as "a new pretension," the claim of Russia to the coast between latitude 51 and 55. He also repelled the exclusion of American ships from the coast of the North Pacific Ocean, stating that "with the Russian settlements at Kadlak or at New Archangel (Sitka), they, the United States, may fairly claim the advantage of a free trade, having so long enjoyed it unmolested, and because it has been, and would continue to be, as advantageous at least to those settlements as to them."

The committee cite these extracts to show that the contention had reference to a section of the coast of the North Pacific Ocean and entirely remote from Behring Sea.

The committee cite these extracts to snow that the contention has recleared to a section of the coast of the North Pacific Ocean and entirely remote from Behring Sea.

In reply to the suggestions of Mr. Politica that "the extent of sea, of which these possessions form the limits, comprehends all the conditions which are ordinarily attached to shut seas (mers fermes)." Mr. Adams replied: "Itmay suffice to say that the distance from shore to shore on this sea, in latitude 519 north, is not less than 90° of longitude, or 4,000 miles." (Having direct reference to the Pacific Ocean.)

The committee have carefully examined the protests and the correspondence in reference to the matters in controversy, as well as the treaties of 1824 and 1825, which settled them, and find that they all had reference to that section of the coast and waters of the North Pacific Ocean between the fifty-first parallel of north latitude and Mount St. Elias, and east of the one hundred and forty-first meridian.

In all the correspondence, projects, and treaties there is no allusion to Behring Sea or to any region of country within 1,000 miles of its eastern border; so that the dominion asserted and exercised by Russia over that sea, from its discovery in 1725 to its partition by the treaty of cession in 1867, had never been denied or questioned. (See treaty between Russia and the United States, April 5,1824, and the treaty of the Walle of the Marine Terrettory Acquired by The Treaty

EIGHTH. THE VALUE OF THE MARINE TERRITORY ACQUIRED BY THE TREATY

By referring to the debate on the purchase of Alaska, and the contemporaneous discussion of the subject by the periodicals and newspapers of this country, it will be noticed that the acquisition of the products of Behring Se, its furbearing animals and fisheries, was regarded as an important, if not its chief, consideration for the purchase.

Mr. Sumner, speaking for the treaty, said in the Senate, after enumerating the land furs of Alaska:

"The seal amphibiage volves and the seal amphibiage volves are set of the seal amphibiage.

Mr. Sumner, speaking for the treaty, said in the Senate, after enumerating the land furs of Alaska:

"The seal, amphibious, polygamous, and intelligent as the beaver, has always supplied the largest multitude of furs to the Russian company."

Speaking of the walrus, he says these animals are found in these waters in great multitudes, and are of great value for their ivory. He then adds:
"I mention the sea-otter last, but in beauty and value it is the first. In these respects it far surpasses the river and land otter, etc. * * I come now to the fisheries, the last head of this inquiry and not inferior to any other in importance—perhaps the most important of all. What even are sea-otter skins by the side of that product of the sea, incalculable in amount, which contributes to the sustenance of the human family? * * Salmon exist in unequaled numbers, so that this fish, so aristocratic elsewhere, becomes common enough. * * Herring seem to be not less multitudinous than the salmon; their name, derived from the German heer, signifying an army, is amply verified. The cod is perhaps the most generally diffused and abundant of all, for it swims in all the waters of this coast from the Frozen Ocean to the southern limit, and in some places it is in immense numbers. Behind all these is the whale, whose corporal dimensions strictly represent the space which he occupies in the fisheries of the world, hardly diminished by petroleum or gas." * * *

Speaking of fishing banks or soundings, he adds:

"The sea and straits of Behring as far as the Frozen Ocean have been surveyed by a naval expedition of the United States under Commander John Rodgers.

"From one of his charts now before me, it appears that, beginning at the Frozen Ocean and descending through Behring Straits and Behring Sea, embracing Kotzpue Sound, Norton Bay, and Bristol Bay to the peninsula of Alaska, a distance of more than 12 degrees, there are constant uninterrupted soundings from 20 to 50 fathoms, thus presenting an immense extent proper in this respect for fisher.

a distance of more than 12 degrees, there are constant uninterrupted soundlings from 20 to 50 fathoms, thus presenting an immense extent proper in this respect for fishery.

"Our own fisheries, now so considerable, were small in the beginning; they were small even when they inspired the eloquence of Burke in that most splendid page never equaled even by himself. But the Continental Congress, in its original instructions to its commissioners for the negotiation of peace with Great Britain, required, as a fundamental condition next to independence, that these fisheries should be preserved unimpaired. While this proposition was under discussion Elbridge Gerry, who had grown up among the fishermen of Massachusetts, repelled the attacks upon their pursuit in words which are not out of place here. It is not so much fishing; he said, 'as enterprise, industry, employment. It is not so much fishir; it is gold, the produce of that avocation. It is the employment of those who would otherwise be idle, the food of those who would otherwise be hungry, the wealth of those who would otherwise be poor.' After debate it was resolved by Congress that 'the common right of taking fish should in no case be given up.'

"For this principle the eldest Adams contended with ability and constancy until it was fixed in the treaty where it stands side by side with the acknowledgment of independence."

The acquisition of this wealth of marine products was presented to the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations as the most important achievement of the treaty, and no one questioned the right of Russia to sell and transfer it to this country, and no suggestion was made in the Senate or elsewhere that this valuable marine territory was not included in the proposed purchase.

purchase.

On the 17th of February, 1868, the President transmitted to the House of Representatives a message in relation to Russian America, accompanied by documents from the Department of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, all of which are printed in Executive Document No. 177, Fortieth Congress, second session. From these documents we make the following extracts. Under date of May 10, 1867, the American minister, Mr. Clay, writes from St. Petersburg to Secretary Seward as follows:

"Sir: Your dispatch No. 241, April 1, 1867, inclosing the treaty between Russia and America ceding us all Russian America, was duly received. I awaited the expression of European and Russian sentiments in reference thereto before answering you.

"I congratulate you upon this brilliant achievement, which adds so vast a territory to our Union; whose ports, whose mines, whose waters, whose furs, whose fisheries are of untold value, and whose fields will produce many grains, even wheat, and become hereafter, in time, the seat of a hearty white population."

On the 4th of July, 1867, Quartermaster-General Meigs wrote to Mr. Seward

On the 4th of July, 1867, Quartermaster-teneral Meigs wrote to Mr. Seward as follows:

"My Dear Sir: I am surprised to find it stated that objections are made to the acquisition of Russian America. I can conceive of no greater boon to the Pacific States, and I can not suppose that Atlantic Senators will deny to the people of those States the fisheries depending upon Russian America now within their group. We need such a nursery of seamen, such a commerce, as the fisheries will produce. They will feed the coasts and islands of the Pacific, and the vigorous climate will breed a race of hardy adventurers to repeat on the Pacific, softened by Christian civilization, the deeds of the old Norse sea-kings on the softened by Christian civilization, the deeds of the old Norse sea-kings on the Atlantic.

"As a lover of my country, anxious for the growth, and prosperity, and strength, and virtue of the nation, I should value Russian America, its fisheries and mines, beyond the hot plains of Mexico or the fertile plantations of Cuba.

"I trust that no effort needed to secure this great acquisition will be omitted. The execution of the treaty will crown our generation with the praises and thanks of future ages."

In "A memorandum description of the Russian imperial system of Russian America," transmitted to Secretary Seward by the American minister at St. Petersburg, November 21, 1867, it is stated as follows:

"The Alcutian Islands may attract transient traders, but no permanent settlers; to inhabit them one must be an Alcut; and if it were not for the sea surrounding the islands, this country, owing to its unfavorable climatic conditions and the sterility of its ground, would have never been inhabited at all."

In the summary of the products of Alaska furnished the State Department by Professor Baird, of the Smithsonian Institution, he says:

"Animals: Furred animals, such as sea otter, river otter, sable-furred seal, mink, foxes, black, silver, red, etc., abound in great numbers. Red deer are on the south and reindeer on the north side.

"Fish: Herring, salmon, hallbut, and codfish abound in exhaustless numbers. In Behring Sea great whales are very numerous."

On the 2d day of September, 1867, Mr. W. W. Miller wrote as follows:

"I have watched anxiously for the proceedings of the House to appropriate the purchase money to carry into execution that treaty. The sum our Government is to pay is a mere pittance for that vast region and its many substantial benefits which must accure from its acquisition.

"The privilege of fishing on those banks, with Sika as a free port of perpetuity, is of itself worth the price we are paying for the whole territory with all its incidents."

Mr. Charles Brewer, who was during the years 1826

all its incidents."

Mr. Charles Brewer, who was during the years 1826, 1827, 1828 first officer of the American brig Chinchella, trading between the Sandwich Islands, Sitka, and China, writes under the date of December 16, 1867, as follows:

"The coast of Alaska abounds with fish of various kinds, such as salmon, halibut, and codfish, and I think the fisheries of that Territory are of more value to our possessions of California and Oregon than those of Newfoundland to New England.

"The the years 1826 to 1828 we sold our cargoes direct to the Possion Country."

England. * * * * " In the years 1826 to 1828 we sold our cargoes direct to the Russian Government and received our pay entirely in fur-seal skins, which skins were all taken upon the northern part of that coast and the adjacent islands, as also large quantities of ivory (walrus teeth), and walrus skins, and brought into the port of Sitka in the vessels of the Russian American Company."

The committee cite these documents because they were transmitted to the House of Representatives, with many others of a like character, by the President under a resolution of the House, December 19, 1867, "calling for correspondence and information in relation to Russian America," to enable the House to take proper action on the pending bill appropriating the purchase money; but chiefly because it seems to the committee to have been taken for granted that by the purchase of Alaska the United States would acquire exclusive ownership of and jurisdiction over Behring Sea, including its products, the fur-seal, sea-otter, walrus, whale, codfish, salmon, and other fisheries; for it is on account of these valuable products that the appropriation of the purchase money was urged.

The extracts above quoted, in reference to these products, are emphasized by the fact that the fur-seal fisheries alone have already yielded to the Government a revenue greater than the entire cost of the Territory.

It seems clear to the committee that, if the waters of Behring Sea were the "high seas," these products were as free to our fishermen and seal-hunters as the Russians, and there was, therefore, no reason on that account for the purchase. But it was well understood that Russia controlled those waters; that her ships of war patrolled them and seized and confiscated foreign vessels which had violated the regulations she had prescribed concerning them; and the argument in favor of the purchase was that by the transfer of the mainland, islands, and waters of Alaska we would acquire these valuable products and the right to protect them. This protection can only be effective by the employment of means similar to those adopted by Russia. Armed vessels should patrol Alaskan waters and enforce the laws of the United States.

It must be remembered that only a small number, comparatively speaking, of the fur-seals remain on the islands the entire season, and that millions of them traverse Behring Sea for miles in quest of food, and cover large areas of water. Now, if the protection only embraced the islands and the 3-mile belt of water surrounding them, a vast number of seals would be left to the mercy of the seal-hunters, and the destruction of the rookeries would be swift and certain.

them traverse Behring Sea for miles in quest of food, and cover large areas of water. Surrounding them, a vast number of seals would be left to the mercy of the seal-hunters, and the destruction of the rookeries would be swift and certain.

In settling the policy of the Government in connection with the future disposition of the Priblytov Islands, the present and prospective condition of the inhabitants of the Aleutian chain of islands, from Ounalaska to Attou, inclusive, should not be neglected. There are to-day about one thousand persons inhabiting these islands who mainly derive their means of subsistence from the sale of sea-otter skins taken by them; they also take some fish about the shores, possibly in quantities sufficient to sustain life, but this catch is not available for sale or barter so as to in any way increase their income or enable them through it to better their material condition. The pursuit of the sea-otter is now so eager and persistent that the animal can not hold its own against the hunters, and in a few years doubtless will be exterminated from its haunts in the localities above referred to.

Had the Government in the past prohibited the hunting of the sea-otter by any but Aleuts, and not permitted white men married to Aleutian women to rank as native hunters, and also confined the Aleut in his hunting to the use of spear and arrow (not allowing direarms), it is possible that the animals might placed, but even the rules made have been disregarded, and the estimation is given to their case. As it is to-day, the people of Attou, the westermost island, would hardly have been able to maintain existence for the past three years had not the present lessees of the seal islands annually sent a vessel with supplies and necessaries from Ounalaska to their island, a distance of about 700 miles, to aid this improvershed community, getting a return in skins (the only trade of the people) insufficient at their retail value to compensate or the coal consumed in making the trip.

Before suggesting meth make his lot very desirable in the eyes of his fellow-men of the Aleutian chain.

The "inhabitant" is equally sensible of his advantages and is naturally unwilling to have the population of his islands increased and his undivided share thus diminished. So long as there were laborers sufficient to do the sealing, and so long as the Aleuts of the chain had the sea-otter to look to as a source of support, the state of affairs was well enough, but now that the time has come when the population of the seal islands is insufficient to properly do the work of killing, skinning, and salting, and the assured speedy extinction of the sea otter will leave the Aleuts from Ounalaska to Altou in a state of destitution, the question of what to do in the premises becomes urgent and demands attention.

the question of what to do in the premises becomes urgent and demands attention.

The Pribylov Islands when discovered by the Russians in 1790 were uninhabited, and people from the Aleutian Islands were transferred to them to carry on the required work. Under Russian rule life there was deemed a hardship, from which the people desired escape. Under American rule the conditions are all changed, and the desire of the Aleuts now is to have a settlement on these islands. The people being all of one race or tribe, and their distribution being an enforced one originally, it is but just that the resources of the islands occupied should contribute towards the support of all the people. The people are docile and childlike, devout in their religious services, and with kind and judicious treatment can be guided, preserved, and elevated, provided a comfortable material condition can be assured for them. To accomplish this the action of the Government and that of the lessees must be in unison and the requirements of the situation be freely comprehended.

As now represented there seem to be indications that more laborers are imperatively needed on the seal islands, and that to meet this demand the lessees should be permitted under regulations to transfer a part or all of the destibilish them there under the conditions that now govern the natives resident on those islands; that, as sources of support now available to the inhabitants of Ounalaska and the other islands to the westward diminish, means should be taken to insure a proper supply of food and shelter to the people, and sufficient occupation to preserve and develop a sense of self-respect, and prevent a feeling that they were to be sustained without efforts on their own part.

These ends can, it is believed, be accomplished by utilizing the seal meat now necessarily wasted on the Pribylov Islands either by the process of canning, or by means of cold storage, and from this supply furnishing the chief food of the natives. In this labor of preparing and distributing, the services of a considerable number of natives could be made available. The details of such plan would need much consideration, but could without difficulty be worked out. The main objection of the canning process would be that which manifested itself when the effort was made to derive income from the oil obtainable from the seal blubber, namely, the smoke and smell proved offensive and disturbing to the breeding seals on the rookeries, and the Government decided that it was unwise to further pursue the effort. But possibly improved methods could now be applied, or the meat preserved in some other manner. The women could be instructed and encouraged to further develop the little industries they now practice, such as weaving grass baskets, making nets, etc., and thus contribute in a minor way to the general well-being.

It is possible also that about Atka a fishery could be established for taking and salking some of the fish products about that island. It is not supposed that these endeavors would be pursued with the expectation of realizing a pecuniary profit from them, but in the hope of sustaining and improving the natives, and it is believed that if the Government, the lessees, and the people work in accord the desired end could be attained. In this matter all interests are identical. The Government has its obligations to the people, and desires also to continue its present revenue from the seal islands. The lessees need the help of the natives to properly prosecute their work according to their contract.

The people need watchful care and guidance to strengthen them to resist the temptations that assail a people just emerging from an inferior state. Their only grievance now put forth is that the Government. Not only in the seal islands, but also and with more importance in the limits of Behring

CONCLUSION.

CONCLUSION.

The committee have examined numerous witnesses who are familiar with this industry and the nature and habits of the fur-seal, with reference to the best method or system to be adopted by the Government to secure the greatest amount of revenue, preserve the seal rookeries, and provide for the welfare of the native inhabitants of the islands. All these witnesses concur in testifying to the wisdom of the existing law on the subject, and favor the retention of the present system. All other existing rookeries are managed substantially in the same way by the different governments to which they belong, all following the lead of Russia, who managed and protected our rookeries by a similar method from their discovery until their transfer to the United States.

It did not require the testimony of witnesses to convince the committee that the Government itself could not successfully manage this business, or that it would be wisdom on its part to repeal the laws which protect seal life in Alaska, and open these waters to all comers, and invite the speedy destruction of this valuable industry.

It is conclusively established by the testimony that this business must be controlled by one direction—by proper and responsible parties as required by the statute, with direct and single responsibility to the Government.

Your committee therefore recommend that the act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and amended as recommended by the committee, be continued in force; believing that not only the system it adopts, but the method of carrying it into effect, is well adapted for the purpose intended.

In conclusion, your committee find the following facts:

First, That if the law protecting seal life is enforced, the preservation of the seal rookeries will be assured, the revenue continued and increased, and the native inhabitants of the seal islands maintained without cost to the Government.

ment.

Second. That the Alaska Commercial Company has fully performed its contract with the Government and has contributed liberally to the support, maintenance, comfort, and civilization of the inhabitants of not only the seal islands, but also to those of the Aleutian Islands, Kodiak, and the mainland.

Third. That the fur-seal industry will have paid into the Treasury over nine millions of dollars during the period of the present lease.

Fourth. That the chief object of the purchase of Alaska was the acquisition of the valuable products of Behring Sea.

Fifth. That at the date of the cession of Alaska to the United States Russia's title to Behring Sea was perfect and undisputed.

Sixth. That by virtue of the treaty of cession the United States acquired complete title to all that portion of Behring Sea situate within the limits prescribed by the treaty.

plete title to all that portion of bearing Gos and the portion of bearing by the treaty.

The committee herewith report a bill making necessary amendments of the existing law relating to these subjects and recommend its passage.

Section 1 of the bill amends section 1963 of the Revised Statutes in two materials.

existing law relating to these subjects and recommend its passage.

Section 1 of the bill amends section 1963 of the Revised Statutes in two material respects.

As the statute now reads the Secretary of the Treasury does not think he is authorized to advertise for bids and make another lease of the seal islands until after the present lease expires. The amendment requires him to do so within one year prior to the expiration of the existing lease, so that there will be no cessation of responsibility. Section 1959 of the Revised Statutes imposes "a revenue tax or duty of $2 per skin upon each fur-seal-skin taken and shipped away from the islands of $1. Paul and $2. George."

The amendment repeals that section, and requires "the sum of not less than $3.50 per skin for each fur-seal-skin taken and shipped away from these islands," to be paid by the lease in addition to the $50,000 per annum as a consideration for the lease.

The amendment also declares the true meaning and intent of section 1956 of the Revised Statutes, which prohibits the killing of fur-seals, etc., in the waters of Alaska, and requires the President to issue an annual proclamation and cause one or more Government vessels to cruise said waters, in order to prohibit the unlawful killing of fur-seals therein.

The amendment increases the revenue of the Government from this source by at least $150,000 per annum.

Sections 4 and 5 provide for the temporary protection and preservation of our valuable salmon fisheries in Alaska, and require the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to diligently prosecute his exploration and investigation of the salmon and other food-fishes of Alaska, and report to Congress in order to secure such additional legislation as may appear necessary to place the salmon fisheries of Alaska under permanent and regular conditions of production and preservation.

APPENDIX A.

Subsequent to the closing of the testimony in this investigation, the governor of Alaska submitted to Congress a special report in reference to the operations of the Alaska Commercial Company under its contract with the United States. In that report the governor asserts that he visited the Pribylov Islands and personally investigated the operations of the company and the condition of the native inhabitants.

As a result of his observation and examination he is convinced that the company and the company a personally investigated the operations of the company and the condition of the native inhabitants.

As a result of his observation and examination he is convinced that the company has not only strictly complied with its contract, but has largely contributed to the welfare, comfort, and education of the natives of the islands, in addition to the requirements of the lease; and, while adhering to his former criticism of the operations of the company in other parts of Alaska, he strongly approves and commends the conduct of the company and its agents in the performance of the stipulations of the lease and the treatment of the natives. He also states that in his intercourse with the native inhabitants he "heard no complaints concerning their treatment either by the agent or any one else connected with the company."

Inasmuch as the law makes it the duty of the governor of Alaska "from time to time to inquire into the operations of the Alaska Seal and Fur Company, and annually report to Congress the result of such inquiries and any and all violations by said company of the agreement existing between the United States and said company," the committee deem it proper to include in its report all that portion of Governor Swineford's report which has reference to that subject.

A. P. SWINEFORD, Governor of Alaska.

While the scope of the resolution directing this inquiry by the committee did not embrace the investigation of affairs in Alaska, except as to the Government reservation of St. Paul and St. George Islands, the committee admitted evidence showing the condition of the natives of the seal islands, as compared with that of the native inhabitants of other parts of Alaska, and particularly as to those parts of the Territory in which said company had trading stations and came in contact with these inhabitants, as well as to their present condition compared with their condition under the Russian Government. On these points numerous witnesses were examined, all of whom testified that the condition of the native inhabitants, not only of the seal islands, but in all other parts of the Territory to which the operations of the company extend, had materially improved since the transfer of the Territory to the United States; and that these people who inhabit localities at or near which the company have trading stations are better cared for, more civilized and prosperous than those inhabiting other sections of the Territory beyond the limits of the company's operations.

The following extracts from the testimony on this subject are herewith submitted:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 24, 1888.

George R. Tingle sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. Please state your official position.
A. I am the United States Treasury agent in charge of the fur-seal islands of Alaska at the present time.

Q. Have you had occasion to observe and judge of the general effect that this lease has on the natives, and whether this lease enables the Alaska Commercial Company to exercise over the business interests and general prosperity of the natives any influence?

A. Yes, sir; it enables them to exercise a very large influence throughout Alaska.

Q. Is it injurious?
A. The basis of their business is the fur-seal industry. Without this contract it would not be there. This contract enables the company to maintain stations in other portions of the Territory where there are natives congregated, and where they collect more or less land furs. This business they could not maintain without the fur-seal contract, because a number of these stations are non-tain without the fur-scal contract, because a number of these stations are non-paying.

Q. You mean unprofitable, maintained at an actual cash loss annually. Most of their stations pay something. The most valuable fur that they have heretofore gotten has been the sea otter, but of late years the sea otter has been hunted so vigorously by white hunters and others that the supply of that fur is very largely reduced.

O. By competition?

Q. By competition?

A. Yes; by competition. Their business in Alaska is principally on the furseal islands, and their business elsewhere has no connection with that and does not keep people out of the Territory at all. Since I have been there their vessels have been at the service of any person wishing to travel up to Alaska. It carried missionaries, traders and their families, miners, and others who happen to be at the stations. Such always got passage. I have never known an instance where they fefused passage to any one who undertook the establishment of a store or trading-post at any point in Alaska. The company has its stations at all points where it is at all probable they will have a profit, and it does all the business it can, but it is in competition with many others.

Q. Is their influence in any respect, in your opinion, deleterious to the public interest?

lic interest?

A. Not to the natives. If it were not for this company I believe the natives in many portions of Alaska would be in a starving condition. If this company did not go there and carry provisions to them and take what few furs they have the natives would have to go some place else, for they would be in a half-starved condition, and no better than they were under Russian rule, which was certainly deplorable. The presence of the Alaska Commercial Company in Alaska has been of more benefit to them than all the Rev. Sheldon Jackson's crowd of missionaries has ever been.

[Testimony of W. B. Taylor, ex-Treasury agent.]

Q. The fur trade there was open to free competition throughout the Terri-

Q. The fur trade there was open to free competition throughout the Territory?

A. So far as I know. I know of no reason why, if they conform to the general law which is applicable to fur trading, that is, the employment of natives, that any other company has not the same right that the Alaska Commercial Company has to carry on business, but so far as I have been able to ascertain in regard to that, the business has not been a profitable one for more than one company, and in fact I think the Alaska Commercial Company could not carry on the business were it not that they have had the fur-seal island business, which made it necessary for them to own two vessels, and they could use them in the same trade to carry on business. And that is one reason why they have been able to carry on the other business and to extend the trade in the interior and through the Territory, and I look upon that trading business as a Godsend to those people. Without it the Government would be obliged to make provision to care for them—I mean for the natives throughout the Territory; of course the same thing is adapted to the seal islands, but it is the general trade I am speaking of now, because if you refer to revenue reports which have been made from time to time, you will find there a large number of small settlements that have been found in a starving condition almost every year that they have been visited, and large numbers of these people have died of starvation, and they have given them supplies over and over again.

Q. Do you mean the company?

A. No; the Government has. These supplies have been dealt out by the revenue-cutters to keep these people from starving in localities where there is no trading, and in localities where they have trading and collecting furs, ivory, and whalebone, and such things as that, and trade them to traders—the Alaska Commercial Company, I suppose, do the bulk of the business in that way—they can get provisions, money, food, clothing, and all that which is necessary, and can exist. Just how many people

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 17, 1888,

Dr. H. H. McIntyre called and examined.

By Mr. JEFFRIES:

Q. Please state your name and occupation. A. H. H. McIntyre. I am superintendent of the seal fisheries of Alaska for the Q. How long have you been in the employ of the Alaska Commercial Company? A. Since June, 1870.

Q. Does the company build any houses?

A. We have built a large number of houses at Ounalaska and several in other parts of the Territory. The sea-otter business was formerly profitable, but during the last three years in the entire Aleutian Archipelago it is non-paying.

Q. It is open to competition?
A Yes, sir; and in the portion west of Athka we get almost nothing. I think in the country west of and including Athka we have during the last year spent not less than $4,000 or $5,000 to obtain $500 worth of furs.
Q. For what purpose?
A. To keep up stations and to keep the people from starving. At Attou Island there are about one hundred people now. From there we get absolutely nothing except a dozen or two of fox-skins. Now it is proposed to take the people from that island and carry them to Conalaska, and thence to the seal islands, if they can be induced to go and if the Government gives us permission.
Q. Are you supporting them without remuneration?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are the sea-otters diminishing in numbers?
A. Yes, sir; because white hunters, who have better facilities for killing them than the natives, follow them long distances from the coast and kill old and young indiscriminately. The native hunter can not compete with white hunters without assistance, and under most favorable circumstances are beaten by them.
Q. Would it seem that that may soon result in their extermination?
A. I think it will.
Q. Who are engaged in the extermination of these sea-otters?
A. White hunters entirely, independent of the company and in competition with each other.
Q. Do traders from San Francisco and other places go there?
A. Yes, sir; six or seven vessels are on the sea-otter grounds from some of these places this season, while the company has but one, and this one is manned wholly by native hunters, with their skin boats and otter spears.
Q. They get the trade while you feed the natives?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What would be the condition of these people if the Alaska Commercial Company should fail to provide for them?
A. They would be left in a very deplorable condition. I do not think they could get the means of subsistence. I think they would starve.

Cross-examination by Mr. Jeffers:
Q. You are editor of the Pittsburgh Press, are you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long did you say you had been on St. George Island?
A. I was stationed there four years; that was my station.
Q. Subsequent to that you had been over the entire Territory of Alaska?
A. Previous to that, in 1879.
Q. You have written a book on Alaska?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I want to ask you now how the natives of St. George Island compare with the other natives of Alaska-I mean the different parts of Alaska?
A. Well, the natives of St. Paul and St. George rank about alike, and they are considered the native aristocracy of the Territory. There is one of the St. George girls, Natalia Merculiff, who had several offers of marriage from Ounalaska men; but she would not marry them. She said she would rather live single all her life than marry them. She could not marry anybody on St. George or St. Paul because she was connected by ties of consanguinity, some remote to the forty-seventh idegree, with about everybody on the two islands. The Russian church does not permit the marriage of such relations. She had the reputation of being a very nice and decent girl—the best of the lot, the general report went. The real facts in the case I do not know.
Q. You have been on the Aleutian Islands?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I want to ask you now, from your own observation, what do you say as to the condition of the natives of Alaska before and since the transfer of the Territory to the United States, whether it has been improved or not?
A. You mean natives generally?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. When I made that cruise in the Rush, in 1879, down about Fort Wrangel and Sitka they had some mission schools, and the general reputation of the native women there was exceedingly bad; that is, they would send girls to the mission schools until they learned to wash and clean themselves and then sell them to the Miners. That was common report, but I never knew anything like that on the Aleutian Islands.
Q. What do you sa

A. They built houses. They does houses.

Q. That you know has nothing to do with the lease?

A. Nothing whatever. The Alaska Commercial Company has no monopoly at Ounalaska. Anybody that wants to can go there and do business.

Q. That is so anywhere in the Territory except on the seal islands?

A. Yes, sir. As I stated when I was here last summer, there was competition for the fur trade at various points—Kadiak, Unga, Ounalaska, St. Michael's, and other trading points.

Capt. L. G. Shepard sworn and examined.

Q. Did you observe the condition of the natives in other parts of Alaska to any great extent?

A. Yes, sir; along the Aleutian Islands.

Q. How did the natives of St. Paul and St. George compare with those of other parts of Alaska?

A. They are better clothed and better cared for on those islands, have much better houses to live in than those living in other settlements, excepting at Ounalaska. In a number of other places the houses are partly under-ground. In Ounalaska the company has made about the same provisions a have been made on the islands; has built at least forty houses, which they allow the natives to occupy free of rent.

Q. The condition of the natives on St. Paul and St. George is better than the natives elsewhere in that Territory?

A. Yes, sir. I understand the natives of those islands consider themselves the aristocracy of Western Alaska; it is looked upon as a privilege to be allowed to live there.

Jacob H. Moulton recalled and examined.

Jacob H. Moulton recalled and examined.

By the Chairman: Q. Will you please state if at any time you have occupied an official position under the Government in connection with the administration of the lease of the seal islands of Alaska, and at what time?

A. I was special agent of the Treasury Department at the seal islands from 1877 until 1885, eight years.
Q. State what your duties were there.
A. My duties were to see that the law in regard to the killing of seals was complied with and to take general charge of the native population of the island.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jeffres:

Q. What do you say, Mr. Moulton, as to the condition of the natives who have come in contact with the Alaska Commercial Company as compared with the other people of Alaska who have not come in contact with that company or with its agents?

A. I know the people very well in Ounalaska, as we always visited there going and coming. That is the only point of Alaska I ever visited except one spring I went to Kadiak. The condition of the natives of St. Paul is much superior to the natives of Ounalaska, while the condition of the natives of Ounalaska is much superior to the natives of Kadiak. That is as far as I observed. I know of nothing outside of those three points—the seal islands, Ounalaska, and Kadiak.

Q. Do you know whether the company has done. and Kadiak.
Q. Do you know whether the company has done anything in regard to ameliorating the condition of the people of Ounalaska?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What have they done?
A. They have built houses there.
Q. Have they furnished a doctor?
A. Yes; a doctor and a school-house.
Q. Is that included in the contract with the seal islands?
A. No, sir.

Joseph B. Johnston sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:
Q. State to the reporter your name and place of residence, and the official position that you occupy, if any.
A. My name is Joseph B. Johnston, United States commissioner, stationed at Ounalaska. I reside there, and I have resided there for the last two years.
Q. Have you occupied that official position during those two years?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. From your observation during your official residence there, is it your opinion that the lease of the seal islands and their administration by the Government under the present policy exercises a deleterious influence to public interests in Alaska generally?

A. I think not; I know to the contrary.

Q. Do you know anything in their operations there which leads you to conclude that their influence is unfavorable to immigration and the settlement of the country?

clude that their influence is unfavorable to immigration and the settlement of the country?

A. Iknow nothing of that kind.

Q. Do you know of any act of the company or its agents which would tend to prevent and discourage other people from engaging in trade and commerce in that Territory?

A. I do not, and I never heard of any.

Q. I will be glad if you will state to the committee in a general way the result of your observation as relating to the administration of that interest there and the interests of the company in the Territory.

A. In the Territory in general or simply in regard to those islands?

Q. Their general influence and conduct.

A. I think the influence is good. I have traveled considerably over the Aleutian Islands; in fact, everywhere except at Attou and Athka. I have always found the company exerted a very good influence amongst the natives.

Q. Do they treat them humanely and kindly?

A. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination by Mr. JEFFEIES:

Q. How long have you been a United States commissioner of Alaska?

A. Since the 13th of September, 1886.
Q. Are you the son of ex-Senator Johnston, of Virginia?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where do you make your headquarters?

A. At Oonalaska.
Q. How many other commissioners are there for Alaska?

A. Three.
Q. Where are they?

A. One is at Sitka, one at Juneau, and the third at Fort Wrangel.
Q. Have you traveled pretty extensively over Alaska?

A. Then you have some idea of the comparative condition of the natives on the seal islands with the other parts of Alaska which you have visited?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. What do you say as to their condition?

A. It is much superior to any other part of Alaska that I have been in.
Q. What do you say as to the conditions of the natives of Ounalaska since the Alaska Commercial Company commenced business there compared to what it was formerly?

A. I this high it has improved wonderfully.

All states compared company continenced business these compared to what was formerly?

A. I think it has improved wonderfully.

Q. You are familiar with the law governing the lease of the seal islands generally?

Q. At these points the company have trading stations?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Isit wherever the company have trading stations that they make accommodations for the natives in regard to houses and furnish them medicines and dress? Is that the rule of the company?
A. That is the rule.
Q. Now, what do you say as to whether or not the condition of the natives of Alaska—I am speaking now outside of the seal islands—is improved wherever they have come in contact with the Alaska Commercial Company?
A. I believe their condition has been very much improved.

A. My residence is La Fayette, Ind.
Q. Have you at any time been an official of the Government, and if so, in what capacity and where?
A. Yes, sir; I was assistant Treasury agent at the seal islands, stationed on St. George Island.

Q. Do you think the company exercises an influence on that Territory that prevents the occupation and settlement by emigrants?

A. I do not think they interfere with that in the least.
Q. You do not think their influence has interfered with anything of that sort?
A. No, sir.
Q. Has their influence on the natives been deleterious or beneficial?
A. Beneficial.
Q. You are satisfied the influence has been beneficial to the natives generally?
A. Their condition has improved considerably.

Philadelphia.
Q. Have you been stationed in Alaska recently?
A. Since 1884.
Q. Whereabouts in Alaska?
A. I was most of the time on St. George Island, and during the summer I visited some of the other stations.

Q. Have you been around to other portions of Alaska?

A. I visited St. Michaels and two or three other places.
Q. St. Michaels is up on Behring Sea 700 or 800 miles north. How do the natives of St. Michael's compare with the natives of St. George?

A. I think the natives of St. George are very much superior.
Q. What do you say as to the influence of the Alaska Commercial Company upon the natives of the section of the country where it is brought in contact with the people? Is it good or bad?

A. It is very beneficial to them.

I have lived at San Francisco two years; at Oakland ten years,
What is your present business?
Mining business in Alaska.
What pat?
Unga Island.
Where is that?
East from Ounalaska about 250 miles.
That is one of the Aleutian Islands?
Yes, sir.

Q. Have you visited many parts of Alaska?
A. Most of it, I think, sir.
Q. Been pretty nearly all over the whole Territory?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been on the seal islands?
A. On St. Paul only.
Q. I would like for you to state with regard to the condition of the natives of St. Paul Island as compared to the natives in the other parts of Alaska that you have visited.
A. I think they are much more improved on St. Paul Island than in some other parts of Alaska.
Q. What do you know as to what the company has done for the natives in Oonalaska?
A. Well, they have built houses and given them free of rent, built schoolhouses and churches.
Q. What do you say as to the different natives at such points as they come in contact with the Alaska Commercial Company as compared with the natives of other parts of the Territory where they do not come in contact with the company?

of other parts of the Ferritory

A. I think they are much further advanced than in the Territory where they are not reached by the company.

Q. Then you would say that the influence of the company has wrought good for the natives of Alaska; is that your judgment?

A. Yes, sir; decidedly.

Q. What portion of Alaska is it that the most densely populated with white people?

Q. What portion of Alaska is it that the most densely populated with white people?

A. Unga Island, Juneau, and Douglas Island, and up the Yukon, to which immigration tends, and mining to the business portion. There are many miners at the Yukon River, more than at any other part of the Territory.

Q. How about Southeastern Alaska?

A. I have not traveled a great deal through there.

Q. Sitka?

A. I stopped there and was in Sitka about a week. Ounalaska is far ahead of Sitka in regard to the natives there.

Q. How about Kadiak?

A. I was there twice. They all looked contented there, about the same as in Oonalaska.

Q. Has the company a station there?

APPENDIX B.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 28, 1889.

Siz: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the information of your committee a copy of certain statements in regard to the conditions under which the salmon fisheries of Alaska are now being prosecuted, the same having been transmitted to me by Mr. Redding, commissioner of fisheries for California.

I beg to suggest to your honorable committee that prompt measures are necessary upon the part of the Government to place the salmon fisheries of the Alaskan region under such conditions as will insure their permanence. To prevent the ascent of the salmon to their spawning grounds will certainly result in a few years in the destruction of this valuable fishery. The crection of dams or barricades across the rivers and the use of fixed contrivances for the capture of salmon in the rivers, should be prohibited by law, under sufficient penalties actively and stringently enforced.

I respectfully transmit herewith memorandum of such legislation as appears necessary to provide for present emergencies, and will lay the foundation for such additional legislation as may be necessary to place the salmon fisheries of Alaska under permanent and regular conditions of production.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

MARSHALL McDONALD,

Commissioner,

Hon. Phindexter Dunn, Chairman Committee on Fisheries, House of Representatives.

Hon. Phindexter Dunn,
Chairman Committee on Fisheries, House of Representatives.

The streams on the eastern shore of the Alaska Peninsula and the large islands, especially Kadiak and Afognak, are all small, running from lakes which are the objective point of the salmon for spawning purposes. These streams are in some cases mere rivulets where they empty into the ocean at low tide, and the largest two to three hundred feet in width, with but one to three feet of water when the tide is out. We are told the salmon returns to the place where he has spawned, and having arrived at maturity at sea, seeks his native water, there to spawn and die.

This past season parties on the Karluk River, on Kadiak Island, conceived the idea of putting up a tight dam, merely using stakes and wire-netting, intending, no doubt, to take what fish they required and allowing the remainder to pass up to the lake; but no less than four other canneries started for the same place, consequently to supply all the river was closed from in May to October, the fish surging back and forward with the tide. The result was one company packed over 100,000 cases of salmon, and all the rest filled all their cans and made a perfect success. No care was taken of the surplus fish, and tens of thousands rotted on the banks. The remarkable success of those canneries was such and the wide publicity given as to the pack has so excited both those engaged in this industry and more who know nothing of the business to organize expeditions, and all on this grand scale, to pack salmon in Alaska, until something over twenty-five new parties will be in the field, and all old canners doubling up on their present plant.

Now the point is, let this number of people locate on these small streams, shut the fish off from their spawning grounds, and in five years there will not be a fish left. To-day there is not a location east of the Peninsular and Aleutian Islands but is taken up, and it is a mistaken idea that the fish of commerce abound in every stream. Many of them h

Six: In response to your request for information concerning the salt-water fisheries of Alaska, I have the honor to make the following report:

THE FOOD-FISHES.

Cod and halibut are the principal salt-water food-fishes of the Northern Pacific as they are of the Northern Atlantic coast. The species are identical in the two oceans. In the Pacific Ocean both species have practically the same distribution and the same center of abundance. Cod have been recorded, doubtfully, from as far south as the Farallone Islands, off San Francisco. They occur on Heccat Bank, off the coast of Oregon, in the vicinity of the Straits of Fuca, and on the coast of British Columbia. From this point they range continuously northward along the Alaskan coast of St. Lawrence Island and Norton Sound, in the northern part of Behring Sea. They are most abundant in the Alaskan region, between Sitka and probably the central part of Behring Sea, becoming scarce in the northern part of that sea, and affording the most extensive fisheries along the coasts and islands and upon the off-shore banks south of Kenai and Alaska Peninsulas, along the line of the Aleutian Islands, as far to the westward as Atka, and in the southern part of Behring Sea.

The halibut also ranges from the Farallone Islands to Behring Straits, and is exceedingly abundant along the central Alaskan coast, associated with the cod. Salmon of several species, for which the Alaskan rivers are justly noted, are also sometimes captured in salt water, but only in the bays and harbors, respecting which no question of ownership can arise. These and the remaining food and bait fishes of Alaska are briefly discussed as to the distribution, abundance, and uses, in the inclosed report by Dr. T. H. Bean, the ichthyologist of this commission.

THE FISHING GROUNDS.

The fishing grounds.

The natives are greatly dependent upon the catch of halibut for supplying their own wants, but the only important commercial fishery conducted at present in salt water is directed toward the cod. Cod and halibut banks are found among the islands of Southeastern Alaska, and a very limited fishery is carried on in that region, and also along the coast to the northward of Sitka, as far as the Kenai Peninsula. The principal grounds resorted to are, however, located on the submerged continental plateau south of the Kenai and Alaska Peninsulas, and in the vicinity of Unimak and Unalashka Islands. That portion of the submerged plateau situated between Middleton Island, south of Prince William's Sound, and the island of Unalashka is covered with a succession of banks and island groups, which afford almost continuous fishing grounds, whose richness in marine products is only comparable with that of the great fishing banks of eastern North America.

Parts of this region have been resorted to for the capture of cod during nearly thirty years, but, of course, only to a very limited extent compared with the fishing grounds of the eastern coast. The fishing has been carried on mostly within easy reach of the land in the vicinity of the Shumagin Islands, Unalashka, and Kadiak. The existence of well-defined banks in this region has been known and Kadiak. The existence of well-defined banks in this region has been known for a long time, their positions and characteristics having been determined in a general way from information obtained from the fishermen and from the occasional soundings of exploring vessels. The extent and contours of these banks and their exceeding richness in all parts have, however, only been ascertained during the past year, through the researches of the Fish Commission steamer Albatross, which spent about two months in making a preliminary survey of the region.

Five of these banks were developed by the steamer Albatross, and several others partly explored. They are located, as a whole, much nearer the coast line than the off-shore banks of New England and the British provinces, the most of them being within easy reach of secure harbors. They are limited on the outer side by the steep slope bordering the continental plateau, which varies in width from about 80 miles at the eastern end to about 40 miles at the western end, many of the banks reaching from this slope to the mainland, or to the shores of the adjacent islands. The entire length of the plateau, so far as it has been explored, is over 600 miles, and the extent of the fishing grounds examined, about 23,400 square geographical miles. All of this area abounds in cod and halibut, but some localities afford much better fishing and a better grade of fish than others, as is the case in all fishing regions. Good fishing occurs among the islands, and in the bays and harbors which indent the mainland coasts, especially at the mouth of Cock's Inlet and in Prince William's Sound, but the largest and best fish are taken off shore in the deeper waters.

The banks examined by the steamer Albatross during the summer of 1888 are as follows:

Portlock Bank.—This bank lies to the northward and eastward of Kadiak Island, and extends from near the island to about latitude 149° west. It covers an area of about 5,800 square miles.

Albatross Bank lies to the southeastward of Kadiak Island.

Shumagin Bank lies south and east of the Shumagin Islands, between which and the 10-fathom line it has an area of about 1,800 square miles. This is one of the best known of the Alaskan grounds, and has been much resorted to by the fishermen.

the fishermen.

Between the Shumagins and the Sanakh Bank about 1,800 square miles of excellent fishing grounds have been partly explored.

Sanakh Bank lies south and east of the Sanakh Islands, and covers an area of about 1,300 square miles. Good fishing grounds are also reported from the region lying to north of the Sanakh Islands and west of the Sandman Reefs. It has not, however, been explored.

Davidson Bank extends from the region of Ugomok eastward to the vicinity of the Sanakhs, and contains an area of 1,600 square miles inside of the 100-fathom curve.

of the Sanakis, and contains an area of 1,000 square miles insuce of the 100-fathom curve.

Between Unimak Pass and the western end of Unalashka Island an area of 2,000 square miles has been partly explored. Goodfishing was found wherever trials were made.

The Aleutian Islands: Codare abundant along the line of the Aleutian chain,

The Aleutian Islands: Cod are abundant along the line of the Aleutian chain, as far as the island of Atka, and perhaps farther west, but as these islands, to the westward of Unalashka, are closely bounded by very deep water on both the northern and the southern sides, the fish are found only in the immediate vicinity of the islands. Good fishing occurs about Unalashka and between there and Unimak Island, exceptionally rich groundsfor large fish being said to exist off the northern and southern entrances to Unimak Pass.

Behring Sea: Very little cod-fishing has yet been done in Behring Sea, and not much can positively be said of its resources in that respect except with reference to a few localities.

Captain Bryant wrote of this region that "Behring Sea is a mighty reservoir of cod and halibut, so that he never threw over his lines without bringing up fish in whatever part of the sea he might happen."

Professor Davidson, of the United States Coast Survey, has described its principal characteristics in the following brief manner: "The soundings of this sea and of the Arctic Ocean north of Behring's Strait indicate it as the most remarkable submarine plateau of such great extent yet known. On the eastern half of this sea soundings of less than 50 fathoms are found over an extent of 18,000 square miles."

and of the Arctic Ocean north of Behring's Strait indicate it as the most remarkable submarine plateau of such great extent yet known. On the eastern half of this sea soundings of less than 50 fathoms are found over an extent of 18,000 square miles."

Behring Sea has been surveyed only in its eastern and northern portions and adjacent to the Aleutian chain of islands. The depths increase very gradually from the shores of the Alaskan mainland, on the eastern side, and from the vicinity of Behring Strait in the north toward the central and southern portions of the sea the greatest known depths—excepting along the Aleutian Islands, 100 fathoms—occurring to the southeast of St. Matthew's Island and to the east of the Pribyloff group. The soundings of the United States steamer Tuscarora, in 1874, indicate a deep trough of 600 to 1,681 fathoms bordering the northern side of the Aleutian Islands from Unalaschka to Tanaga.

Cod and halibut have been taken as far up as St. Lawrenge Island and Narton Sound, but are said to be scarce in the northern part of the sea. These fish are also a favorite food of seals and sea lions, and are therefore not to be found in abundance around the rookeries of those animals. Vessels from San Francisco occasionally visit the southern and eastern parts of the sea, and have reported good fares, but the grounds about Unalashka, the Shumagins, and Kadiak are given the preference, as being located nearer the markets and having good harbors close at hand.

The Albatross entered Behring Sea through Unimak Pass but did not extend her investigations beyond the immediate vicinity of the islands adjacent to the pass, the work upon the southern grounds being considered the most important which she could undertake on the first cruise. The following information respecting the Behring Sea grounds was, however, obtained at Shumagin Islands. While at Humboldt Harbor, Popoff Island, the 1st of August, the schooner Arago, owned by Lynde & Hough, of San Francisco, arrived in port from a trip to Behring Sea, and is occasionally resorted to by the fishermen. Only one vessel besides the Arago, the Dashing Wave, was engaged in fishing in Behring Sea during 1888. Only a single trip is usually made by a vessel in the course of one season; this year the Dashing Wave intended making a second trip, but the attempt was subsequently abandoned.

THE OKHOTSK SEA.

THE OKHOTSK SEA.

The shallow waters of the Okhotsk Sea were noted for their cod-fisheries before the Alaskan grounds were opened to American enterprise, and they are still visited to a limited extent by American fishing vessels from San Francisco. The grounds mostly resorted to at present are said to lie about 30 or 40 miles north of Saghalin Island, on the western side of the sea. Other good grounds are located on the eastern side of the sea, off the coast of Kamschatka, and in the Kurile Straits. In 1866 about fifteen American vessels visited the Okhotsk Sea, but in recent years, and especially since the Alaskan grounds have become better known, the number has been much less.

GENERAL NOTES.

GENERAL NOTES.

Cod are present on the Alaskan grounds during the entire year, but cold weather tends to drive them off from the shallow grounds into deeper water. The best seasons for fishing occur at different localities. A part of the shore-fish approach the islands in separate schools, as is also the case on the Atlantic coast. These schools are classed as follows, in the order of their appearance, which continues from about May I in to September, namely: The herring school, the lant school, the capelin school, and the squid school. The last-mentioned school is composed of the largest fish, averaging about 12 pounds each, but the bank fish are still larger.

The majority of the Alaskan cod sent to market are, in size, below the average of the George's Bank fish, but it is to be remembered that the Alaskan fishery has so far been chiefly limited to the immediate vicinity of the islands, where the fish are much smaller than upon the banks. A length of 28 inches is generally regarded as the standard for the eastern fish. In the trials made by the steamer Albatross the average size of the fish in each each varied from about 25 to about 31 inches. These were, however, all short trials with hand-lines, and the fact is recognized among fishermen that the smaller fish take the bait first, the larger ones being finally "tolled" up to the hooks. The visit of the Albatross to this region was also not made at the best season for obtaining large cod. The fish generally took the hook rapidly, both cod and halibut being secured at most of the trials.

The bait question will give no concern for many years. There is everywhere an abundance of fishes squid and clams suited to the supersex and the

The bait question will give no concern for many years. There is everywhere an abundance of fishes, squid, and clams, suited to this purpose, and it is now the custom to start out with only a sufficient amount of cured bait to begin fishing. The hooks quickly supply live bate, which appears never to be lacking. Halibut, yellow-fish, herring, sculpins, pollock, lant, and even salmon are among the fishes used.

THE FOOD-FISHES OF ALASKA. [By Dr. T. H. Bean.]

There are at present known from the Territory of Alaska one hundred and thirty-five species of fishes, nearly all of which inhabit either the fresh waters, the shallow waters along the shore, or the moderate depths of the ocean. Only two species of deep-sea fishes are recorded. No exploration of the deep waters had been attempted until the cruise of the Albatross in the Gulf of Alaska in two species of deep-sea fishes are recorded. No exploration of the deep waters had been attempted until the cruise of the Albatross in the Gulf of Alaska in 1888. The collections made during this cruise are in Washington, but have not yet been studied.

Of the 135 species known to exist in Alaska, 108 are marine, and the remainder either fresh water or anadromous. Sixty-two of the species are valuable for food, not including some other fishes which are extensively eaten by natives, but are not usually classed as food fishes.

The food fishes, as a rule, are abundant, and most of them are excessively common. Seventeen of the species grow to a very large size, particularly the halibut, the cod, the burbot, the cultus cod, the beshowe, the pike, Richardson's white fish, the nelma, or inconu, the lake trout, the Dolly Varden, Clark's trout, Gardner's trout, and the five species of Pacific salmon. Most of the useful species are very widely distributed in the waters of the Territory.

Flounders exist everywhere, but the larger kinds are limited to the Gulf of Alaska and Behring Sea. In the far north, while the number of individuals is very great, there are no large species. There are as many specimens of flounders and flat-fishes in the seas of Alaska as in the corresponding Intitudes of the Western Atlantic. The whole number of edible kinds in this family is nine; one of these, the stellate flounder, has perhaps the most extensive distribution in latitude of any species of the family, ranging as it does from the southern part of California to Mackenzie's River, or through about 37° of latitude. The halibut, which is identical with the well-known species of the Atlantic fishing banks, is very abundant in the Gulf of Alaska and in Behring Sea, except in localities where it is destroyed by fur-seals and other fish-eating mammals.

In Behring Sea the halibut is usually found up to the fee line. Its northern limit in summer appears to be in Norton Sound (latitude 64° north, longitude 163° west from Greenwich), where it o Inshed that Behring Sea furnishes suitable grounds for the permanent residence and reproduction of the halibut.

The cod family numbers six species of food-fishes, one of which, the burbot, inhabits fresh waters. This burbot is identical with the eastern species of the same name. In some of the Alaskan rivers, notably the Yukon, it reaches the enormous length of 5 feet, and specimens weighing 60 pounds have been recorded by Dall and Turner. This would make it a rival of the cod in size. Most of the members of this family in Northern Alaska are small, but the individuals of the species are excessively abundant in the Arctic portion of the Territory. The polar cod, which is the same as the species of that name in the North Atlantic, is one of the most important and valued of the food-fishes. The Signal Service party at Point Barrow, in 1831 to 1833, found them quite plenty at most seasons of the year. Murdock mentions this fish as one of the most important to the natives. It is found at St, Michael's in winter only. In Plover Bay, Siberia, we found plenty of them in August and September. The species grows to about I foot in length.

The wachna, so called by the Russian-speaking population, has received the name of tomcod from the white traders; the Eskimo call it ekathloouk. This is an Arctic species, but was not obtained by the Point Barrow party during their stay. At St, Michael's it is a constant resident and always abundant. It is an extremely valuable fish both for men and dogs. The species abounds in Behring Sea, and we found it very common in Cook's Inite. It does not reach a greater length than 15 inches, and the maximum weight is a little more than a pound.

The little tomcod, which belongs to the same genus as the tomcod of New England, has not yet been obtained around the shores of Behring Sea; but in the Gulf of Alaska it is extremely plentiful, and is an excellent food-fish. Its size is small, scarcely reaching I foot in length.

The pollock of Alaska is a much smaller species than our pollock and very differently marked. It has dark longitudinal bands along the sides, and is a very slender fish. Although not used for food, it is one of the best known baits for cod. At the Shumagins and on the banks in the vicinity of Kadiak it is very common and extensively used for bait. This species is abundant also in Behring Sea, and extends to the Okhotsk. It reaches a length of about 2 feet and a weight of 5 or 6 pounds.

The Alaskan cod is one of the most valuable fishes in the Territory and one of the most plentiful. It grows as large as the Eastern cod, from which it does not differ specifically. It congregates in schools and is distinguished by the fishermen according to the kind of food upon which it may be feeding. The schools of cod are known by the same names as in the East; for example, the shore fish about the Shumagins and Kadiak, named in the order of their appearance, are the herring school, the lant school, the capelin school, the squid school, and the winter school. Besides these there is an abundance of bank fish made up of larger individuals than the shore fish. The favorite food species, as indicated by the names of the schools, are excessively abundant. There is reliable information to the effect that schools of herring many miles in extent appear frequently about the fishing shores.

Thave taken forty good sized capelin from the stomach of a rather small cod on Marmot Island bank. In fact bait is so plentiful that fishermen can get their supplies upon the grounds with the greatest ease. In Behring Sea the cod is just as abundant as in the Gulf of Alaska, but the banks are less clearly marked out. Cod have been caught on the American shores as far nort small fish called cusk, which is not closely related to the cusk of New England, but belongs to the family of Trachinidae. This fish seldom exceeds a foot in length and is not used for food, but at the Shumagin Islands it is one of the most valuable of all the baits for cod.

The sculpins are among the most numerous of fishes in Alaska, constituting nearly one-fifth of the entire known fauna. Probably the largest sculpins in the world are found in that country. I have seen specimens measuring 30 inches. Two of the species are excellent for food and many of the others furnish food for fishes and other aquatic animals. The species which I have personally tasted and found to be acceptable food are distinguished by strips of scales along the sides.

The family of Scorpusnidae, which in New England waters is represented by the well-known red fish, Norway haddock, or brim, includes seven species in Alaska. These are among the choice food fishes of the Territory. They appear to the Gulf of Alaska. The name usually applied to this fish is rock bass. The red rock bass grows to a length of 18 inches; the black-banded rock bass, 15 inches; the black rock bass nearly 2 feet, and the other species about 15 inches. All of them take the hook very freely, and are found usually in moderate depths.

The so-called rock cods, members of the family Chiridae, are, also, very abundant and highly prized as food. They belong to the genera Hezagrammus, with the species of small or moderate size; Pleurogrammus, also of moderate size; Ophiodon, which is one of the largest fishes in the Territory, and Anoplopoma, another very large species. The species of Hezagrammus are styled rock cod, although they have no relation to the cod family. Another name for some of the species is green fish, because of the green color of the fiesh before cooking. Among the Russians they are known as torpoog, One of the species extends as far north as Port Clarence. All of them are found in Behring Sea. The largest species grows to a length of 18 inches.

The P

The smelt of Alaska resembles our own; it is a very important food-fish, both in the fresh and the dried condition. It is most abundant in Behring Sea and in the fresh and the dried condition. It is most abundant in Behring Sea and northward.

The capelin occurs around the entire coast of Alaska, and furnishes food for the cod, halibut, salmon, and other commercial fishes.

The surf smelt of Southern Alaska is also a valuable species of food and bait. The eulachon is a very important food-fish both fresh and dried, and it is very attractive to other fishes. The fat or oil made from this fish is used as a substitute for butter, and, to some extent, to take the place of cod-liver oil. Salted eulachon are prepared on the west shores of Shellikoff Strait, and are said to be excellent for the table.

excellent for the table.

In the fresh waters there is a great wealth of whitefish, seven species being known in the Territory. One of these, Richardson's whitefish, reaches a weight known in the Territory. One of these, Richardson's whitefish, reaches a weight of over 30 pounds.

Related to the whitefish is the inconnu, a very excellent food-fish, which grows to a length of 4 feet and sometimes weighs 50 pounds.
The grayling is very common in Alaska in the spring. It is a very handsome fish and much valued for food.
The trout of Alaska are very large and excessively numerous. The lake trout, so well and favorably known in our Great Lakes and elsewhere, is very abundant and grows very large in Alaska. Dr. Dawson found specimens measuring 30 inches in length.
The Dolly Varden trout is found everywhere, being known from the Colville and from various points throughout the limits of the Territory. It reaches a very large size and in the sea-run condition is extensively salted in Kadiak under the name of salmon trout.

Clark's trout attains to a weight of 20 pounds. It is very abundant at Sitka, Kadiak, and as far north as the Bristol Bay region.

Gardner's trout, also called the steel-head, is known from Southern Alaska and probably extends northward at least to Bristol Bay. It sometimes exceeds 20 pounds in weight.

The great salmon of the west coast are all found in Alaska. The Quinnat salmon, which is the largest of the five species, abounds even as far north as the Yukon. Specimens weighing over 80 pounds are found. Canneries using this and other species are located in various parts of the Territory, Sitka, Kadiak, and Cook's Inlet, and the fish is salted as far north as the Yukon. The abundance of salmon in Alaskan waters is marvelous. In the summer season every village along the coast is reddened with the drying-frames containing ukali in course of preparation for winter use.

The herring of Alaska resemble our own sea-herring very closely. They occur in countless multitudes, are fat and of excellent quality, and supply a notable amount of food for large fishes, and food and balt for fishermen. We have taken them all around the coast as far north as Port Clarence, and they are said to occur as far north as the Colville River.

The spined dog-fish is very common in the Gulf of Alaska and it is a great nuisance to the fishermen. Its liver might be utilized for oil, as they are on the New England coast, and the remainder as a fertilizer.

The sleeper shark is sufficiently common at Kadiak appearing during the salmon run in schools of thirty to fifty. Turner has seen specimens weighing 340 pounds. The natives drain the oil out of the livers and use them as food.

A fresh-water lamprey is particularly abundant in the Yukon, and furnishes a vast amount of food, which is highly relished by the natives. It is caught in enormous numbers through the ice and left to freeze where it falls. Turner says that a native, provided with a stick having left upon it several prongs, can easily pull out a wagon-load by a couple hours' labor.

In the name of the Most Holy and Indivisible Trinity.

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, wishing to cement the bonds of amity which unite them, and to secure between them the invariable maintenance of a perfect concord by means of the present convention, have named as their plenipotentiaries to this effect, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, Henry Middleton, a citizen of said States, and their envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary near His Imperial Majesty; and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, his beloved and faithful Charles Robert Count of Nesselrode, actual privy counselor, member of the council of state, secretary of state, directing the administration of foreign affairs, actual chamberlain, Knight of the Order of St. Alexander Nevsky, Grand Cross of the Order of St. Wladimir of the first class, Knight of that of the White Eagle of Poland, Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen of Hungary, Knight of the Orders of the Holy Ghost and of St. Michael, and Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor of France, Knight Grand Cross of the Orders of the Black and of the Red Eagle of Prussia, of the Amnunciation of Sardinia, of Charles III of Spain, of St. Ferdinand and of Merit of Naples, of the Elephant of Denmark, of the Polar Star of Sweden, of the Crown of Würtemberg, of the Guelphs of Hanover, of the Belgic Lion, or Fidelity of Baden, and of St. Constantine of Parma; and Pierre de Poletica, actual counselor of state, Knight of the Order of St. Anne of the first class, and Grand Cross of the Order of St. Wladimir of the second;

Who, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and signed the following stipulations:

Arr. I. It is agreed that in any part of the Great Ocean, commonly called the Pacific Ocean, or South Sea, the respective citizens or subj not already have been occupied, for the purpose of trading with the natives, saving always the restrictions and conditions determined by the following articles.

Aft. II. With a view of preventing the rights of navigation and of fishing exercised upon the Great Ocean by the citizens and subjects of the high contracting powers from becoming the pretext for an illicit trade, it is agreed that the citizens of the United States shall not resort to any point where there is a Russian establishment without the permission of the governor or commander; and that, reciprocally, the subjects of Russia shall not resort, without permission, to any establishment of the United States upon the northwest coast.

Aft. III. It is moreoveragreed that hereafter there shall not be formed by the citizens of the United States, or under the authority of the said States, any establishment upon the northwest coast of America, nor in any of the islands adjacent, to the north of 54 degrees and 40 minutes of north latitude; and that, in the same manner, there shall be none formed by Russian subjects, or under the authority of Russia, south of the same parallel.

Aft. IV. It is nevertheless understood that during a term of ten years, counting from the signature of the present convention, the ships of both powers, or which belong to their citizens or subjects respectively, may reciprocally frequent, without any hinderance whatever, the interior seas, gulfs, harbors, and creeks upon the coast mentioned in the preceding article, for the purpose of fishing and trading with the natives of the country.

Aft. V. All spirituous liquors, fire-arms, other arms, powder, and munitions of war of every kind are always excepted from this same commerce permitted by the preceding article; and the two powers engage reciprocally neither to sell nor suffer them to be sold to the natives by their respective citizens and subjects, nor by any person who may be under their authority. It is likewise stipulated that this restriction shall never afford a pretext nor be

Arr. IV. His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias shall appoint, with convenient dispatch, an agent or agents for the purpose of formally delivering to a similar agent or agents, appointed on behalf of the United States, the territory, dominion, property, dependencies, and appurtenances which are ceded as above, and for doing any other act which may be necessary in regard thereto. But the cession, with the right of immediate possession, is nevertheless to be deemed complete and absolute on the exchange of ratifications, without waiting for such formal delivery.

Arr. V. Immediately after the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, any fortifications or military posts which may be in the ceded territory shall be delivered to the agent of the United States, and any Russian troops which may be in the territory shall be withdrawn as soon as may be reasonably and conveniently practicable.

Arr. V. I. In consideration of the cession aforesaid, the United States agree to pay at the Treasury in Washington, within ten months after the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, duly authorized to receive the same, $7,200,000 in gold. The cession of territory and dominion herein made is hereby declared to be free and unincumbered by any reservations, privileges, franchises, grants, or possessions, by any associated companies, whether corporate or incorporate, Russian or any other, or by any parties, except merely private individual property holders; and the cession hereby made conveys all the rights, franchises, and privileges now belonging to Russia in the said territory of ominion, and appurtenances thereto.

RUSSIA.—CONVENTION BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND RUSSIA, SIGNED AT ST.
PETERSBURG, FEBRUARY 28, 1825.

[Translation.]

In the name of the Most Holy and Undivided Trinity.

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, being desirous of drawing still closer the ties of good understanding and friendship which unite them, by means of an agreement which may settle, upon the basis of reciprocal convenience, different points connected with the commerce, navigation, and fisheries of their subjects on the Pacific Ocean as well as the limits of their respective possessions on the northwest coast of America, have named plenipotentiaries to conclude a convention for this purpose, that is to say: His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Hon. Stratford Canning, a member of His said Majesty's most honorable privy council of the empire, secretary of state for the department of foreign affairs, etc., and Sleur Pierre de Poletica, His Imperial Majesty's privy councilor, a member of the council of the empire, secretary of state for the department of foreign affairs, etc., and Sleur Pierre de Poletica, His Imperial Majesty's councilor of state, etc., who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and signed the following articles:

Arr. I. It is agreed that the respective subjects of the high contracting parties shall not be troubled or molested in any part of the ocean commonly called the Pacific Ocean, either in navigating the same, in fishing therein, or in landing at such parts of the coast as shall not have been already occupied, in order to trade with the natives, under the respective full powers, for in the following articles.

Arr. II. In order to prevent the right of navigating and fishing, exercised upon the ocean by the subjects of the high contracting parties from becoming the pretext for an illicit commerce, it is agreed that the subjects of His Britannic Majesty shall not land at any place where there may be a Russian establishment without he per northwest.

Aut. IV. With reference to the line of demarkation laid down in the preceding article it is understood:

First. That the island called Prince of Wales Island shall belong wholly to

ART. IV. With reference to the line of demarkation laid down in the preceding article it is understood:

First. That the island called Prince of Wales Island shall belong wholly to Russia.

Second. That whenever the summit of the mountains which extend in a direction parallel to the coast, from the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude to the point of intersection of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude, shall prove to be at the distance of more than 10 marine leagues from the ocean, the limit between the British possessions and the line of coast which is to belong to Russia, as above mentioned, shall be formed by a line parallel to the long to Russia, as above mentioned, shall be formed by a line parallel to the leagues therefrom.

ART. V. It is moreover agreed that no establishment shall be formed by either of the two parties within the limits assigned by the two preceding articles to the possessions of the other, consequently British subjects shall not form any establishment either upon the coast or upon the border of the continent comprised within the limits of the Russian possessions as designated in the two preceding articles; and in like manner no establishment shall be formed by Russian subjects beyond the said limits.

ART. VI. It is understood that the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, from whatever quarter they may arrive, whether from the ocean or from the interior of the continent, shall forever enjoy the right of navigating freely and without any hinderance whatever all the rivers and streams which in their course towards the Pacific Ocean may cross the line of demarkation upon the line of coast described in Article III of the present convention.

ART. VII. It is also understood that for the space of ten years from the signature of the present convention the vessels of the two powers, or those belonging to their respective subjects, shall mutually be at liberty to frequent, without any hindrance whatever, all the island seas, the gulfs, havens, and creeks on the coast mentioned

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch; A bill (H. R. 5752) for the relief of Julia Triggs;

A bill (H. R. 6755) granting a pension to Mary Jane Harris;
A bill (H. R. 9163) granting a pension to Eli Garrett;
A bill (H. R. 11052) granting a pension to Clara M. Owen;
A bill (H. R. 11223) to increase the pension of George A. Glover;
A bill (H. R. 11378) granting a pension to James S. Harden;
A bill (H. R. 11378) A bill (H. R. 11459) granting a pension to Erasmus W. Jones

A bill (H. R. 11578) to increase the pension of Rowland Ward; A bill (H. R. 11624) to increase the pension of Jacob Rogers; A bill (H. R. 11629) granting a pension to Elizabeth Clover; A bill (H. R. 11757) granting a pension to Rebecca H. Lyon; and

A bill (H. R. 12039) granting a pension to Thirza S. Jenner.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and to ask concurrence in the Senate amendments thereto. The amendments are all merely verbal with one exception. We ingrafted upon the bill as it passed the House an appropriation of $1,500 for a riding master, which the Senate has stricken out. The Committee on Military Affairs have concluded to recommend concurrence in all of the Senate amendments, and I now ask that those amendments be concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will state the substance of the most important of the amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have just stated that with the exception of some verbal amendments which are entirely unimportant in their character the only amendment of the Senate is one striking out the sum of $1,500, reducing by that amount the appropriations embraced in the

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendments will be

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McADOO. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments, from the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead lawsonly; which, with the amendments, was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to call up a privileged question-a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] calls up a privileged question, the motion to reconsider a vote heretofore taken in the House.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to allow me to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STRUBLE. Very well; I do not object.
Mr. ROGERS. The Committee on the Judiciary this morning by a unanimous vote instructed me to report back a resolution of investigation referred to the committee some days since, and to ask that it lie on the table. The committee also instructed me to report back Senate biii No. 3865 and to ask that it be printed and recommitted, with leave to report at any time.

JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety of amending the existing laws regulating the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, in order to correct the practice reported to exist in some of said courts of allowing suits to be maintained therein by assignees of choses in action, not made by a corporation, which could not have been maintained therein if no assignment had been made, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, this resolution will lie on the table, as proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WRITS OF ERROR, ETC., TO THE SUPREME COURT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Rogers] now desires leave to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill the title of which will be read; and he asks that the same be re-committed to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 12433) to provide for writs of error or appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States in all cases involving the question of the jurisdiction of the courts below.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Let the bill be read. Mr. ROGERS. Let me explain this matter in a sentence. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Senate committee as well as by the House committee; and it is designed simply to correct an error of practice in some of the courts below.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Let us have the bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does the right to report at any time carry with it the right also of consid-

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request for leave to report at any time. If there be no objection, the bill will be ordered to be printed and recommitted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF RUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] now calls up a privileged question.

Mr. McADOO. I rise to a question of order. I was recognized by the Speaker for the purpose of calling up the business of the morning hour, my object being to have the House go into Committee of the Whole to take up a bill from the Committee on the Militia, which is now on the Calendar of unfinished business. I had not yielded the floor. I did yield temporarily to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] in order that they might submit their reports, but I understood I was still in possession of the floor when the gentleman from Iowa rose and claimed the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose could the gentleman hold the floor? The gentleman made a motion, and of course when that motion was made he did not continue to hold the floor. Pending that proposition the gentleman from Iowa called up a privileged question. The gentleman from New Jersey can raise the question of consideration against the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will not do not. This matter will take but a short time.

MRS. GENERAL WARD B. BURNETT.

The SPEAKER. The motion which the gentleman from Iowa now calls up is to reconsider the vote by which the House rejected the bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 681) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett.

Mr. McADOO. Against that I raise the question of consideration.
Mr. STRUBLE. I would be glad to say one word before that question is put.

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE]?

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 63. Mr. STRUBLE. Tellers.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. STRUBLE and Mr. McADOO. The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 76.
The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. STRUBLE. Under the circumstances I do not make the point of no quorum.

So the House refused to consider the question.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at twenty minutes past 4 o'clock.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask for a moment to state that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Buchanan], on the opposite side, withdraws his objection to the request I made.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey withdraw his objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I made objection not because I had objection to the bill so much as I had to the new plan of getting right of way in I withdraw my objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I renew the objection.

DISTRICT MILITIA.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Committee on the Militia. Mr. McADOO. I move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the unfinished business on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Commite e of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr.

McMillin in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4961) to amend the act entitled "Anact more effectually to provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Colum-a," passed March 3, 1803. Mr. McADOO. When this bill was last under consideration the committee was dividing on the motion to rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. I ask by unanimous consent to go back and amend the bill in several particulars. I do this after full discussion with those opposed to it and with their These amendments will take away the objection they had to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments will be read in their order.

Mr. McADOO. In the first place, I will say I have reduced the infantry companies from thirty-six to twenty-eight. I have struck out the portion referring to a calvary company; and also the section precluding independent military companies parading.

Mr. BLOUNT. Send up the amendments.
Mr. McADOO. Certainly. I move, in section 5, page 11, to strike out "thirty-six" and in lieu thereof to insert "twenty-eight;" so it will read.

SEC. 11. That in time of peace the National Guard shall consist of not more than twenty-eight companies of infantry, which shall be arranged by the commanding general into such regiments, battalions, and unattached companies as he may deem expedient, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McADOO. In the same section I move to strike out "one troop of cavalry."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McADOO. I move to strike out section 15, which is as follows:

SEC. 15. That to the troop of cavalry there shall be one captain, one first lieutenant, one second lieutenant, one first sergeant, one quartermaster-sergeant, five sergeants, eight corporals, two trumpeters, and not more than eighty-three privates; and the minimum number of enlisted men shall be forty.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McADOO. I move to strike out section 58, as follows:

SEC. 58. That during the annual encampment, and on every duty or parade ordered by the commanding general, there may be employed such number of horses as the commanding general may authorize for the use of the battery of light artillery, the troop of cavalry, the ambulance corps, the signal corps, and the non-commissioned general staff, the cost of which shall be paid in the manner provided in section 60.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to this part of the bill to offer the amendment just read?

There was no objection.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. McADOO. The next amendment is, on page 25, to strike out section 66.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the section was stricken out when the bill was under consideration before.

Mr. McADOO. I suggest that it be read for the purpose of showing to the House what was stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows

SEC. 66. That it shall be a misdemeanor for any body of men, other than the regularly organized militia and the troops of the United States, except such independent military organizations as are now in existence, to associate themselves together as a military company or organization, or meet for drill with arms, or parade in public with arms, without the permission of the commanding general; and whoever belongs to or parades with any such unauthorized body of men with arms shall be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding $50, or by both; and the police court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of misdemeanors under the provisions of this section.

Mr. McADOO. That has already been stricken out. If nobody now wishes to discuss the bill, and as we have had a very full discussion of it heretofore, I move that the committee rise and report it favorably to

Mr. BREWER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey how much of the bill is left after all of this is stricken out?

Mr. McADOO. Twenty-eight companies of infantry, amply sufficient to take care of the German war when it comes along.

Mr. BREWER. Any cavalry?
Mr. McADOO. No, sir; they have disappeared; they were lost in the legislative charge when the bill was last up. [Laughter.] I move the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McCreary having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. McMillin reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 4961), had instructed him to report the same to the House favorably with amendments.

Mr. McADOO. I ask the previous question on the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not the vote will be taken in gross.

The amendments were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engressed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. McADOO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF OKLAHOMA BILL.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn,
Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to submit a privileged motion.
Mr. McMILLIN. I understand the gentleman from Illinois desires to make a request, and I will withdraw the motion to permit him to do so. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I only desire to have a reprint ordered of the bill for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, for the use of the House to-morrow.

Mr. STRUBLE. I have a privileged matter I wish to call up.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope gentlemen will not object to ordering a reprint of this bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McMILLIN. I withdraw the motion for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make his request, and if there is objection I will renew it

Mr. SPRINGER. The Doorkeeper informs me that the Oklahoma bill is out of print. A number of gentlemen have called for it and failed to procure copies.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do you ask to have it reprinted as it stands now amended?

Mr. SPRINGER, No; as it stands in the Committee of the Whole.

When reported to the House the amendments will be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let the amendments so far as agreed upon in committee be printed with the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that; and I ask that the amendments be printed in italics, and that the bill H. R. 10614, with the amendments as agreed upon in committee, be reprinted for the use of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

And then, on motion of Mr. McMillin (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 30, 1889.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented to the Senate the credentials of PRESTON B. PLUMB, chosen by the Legislature of Kansas a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1889; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring the opening of the Indian Territory to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, by Senator Murdock.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, by Senator Murdock.

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring therein), That we deem it for the best interests of the country that the Indian Territory be immediately opened for settlement.

That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to use all proper means to secure legislation in accordance with the sentiment herein expressed.

The secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives of this State in Congress.

State of Kansas Office of Secretary of State.

STATE OF KANSAS, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE I, William Higgins, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original concurrent resolution now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka, Kans., this 26th day of January, A. D. 1889.

[SEAL.]

WM. HIGGINS, Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLUMB presented a concurrent resolution of the house of representatives of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring a reduction of the price of lands to pre-emptors within railroad limits; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB. I also present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, to the same effect as the one just laid before the Senate by the Presiding Officer, favoring the opening of the Indian Territory to settlement. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER presented a petition of 14 citizens of Charleston, S. C., praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLODGETT presented a petition of members of the First Presbyterian Church of Stanhope, N. J., praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of Job S. Haines and 105 others (46 voters and 60 women), citizens of East Greenwich Township, New Jersey, praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PRINTING OF SUNDAY-REST HEARING.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution to print the hearing before the Committee on Education and Labor on the Sunday-rest bill, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read. The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. MANDERSON, January 28, 1889, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed for the use of Congress 32,000 extra copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fiftieth Congress, second session, being the hearing before the Committee on Education and Labor on Senate bill 2983, known as the Sunday-rest bill, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to. SINKING FUND OF UNION AND CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

sidered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as to the amounts, respectively, in the sinking fund to the credit of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, respectively, on the 1st day of February, 1889, under the operation of what is commonly known as the "Thurman sinking-fund act," stating the amounts of each invested in bonds, the character of bonds, and the amounts in cash to the credit of each company on said date, together with a statement of the market value in cash of the bonds to the credit of each of such companies on said date, and the difference in amount, if any, between such present cash value, including the cash on hand and the amount of cash that would have been in such fund to the credit of each of such companies on February 1, 1889, provided no investments whatever in bonds had been made of any portion of such funds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 6105) donating two 6-pound brass cannons to the Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home; and A bill (H. R. 11854) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHAND-LER], coming over from a previous day.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHAND-LEE] will let that resolution go over for another day.

Mr. CHANDLER. The document to which I referred has not yet been printed, and therefore I ask that the resolution may go over another day, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over without prejudice, retaining its place as current morning business until to-morrow, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11879.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11879) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, the pending question being on the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations, after line 174, to insert:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President, this appropriation to be immediately available.

For the survey, improvement, and occupation of the bay and harbor of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, Samoa, and for the construction of the necessary wharves and buildings for such occupation, and for a coaling station therein, under the direction of the President, $100,000, this appropriation to be immediately available.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I appreciate the anxiety of the Senator having charge of this bill to have an early vote on the pending amendments, but there are involved, directly or indirectly, in the pending question considerations of great import to this country and of a special and local interest to the people of the Pacific coast. Whatever might have been thought before the debate commenced yesterday as to the propriety of a general discussion of the subject of our rights and interests in the Samoan Islands and our relations to the German Government, the matter has now proceeded so far as in my judgment to render further discussion desirable. Interested as the people of the Pacific coast are in everything pertaining to the commerce of the Pacific and the control of the islands of that ocean, which in the not distant future will be the centers of an extensive commerce, I do not feel disposed to let the opportunity pass without submitting some observations of my own. It has seemed to me that the occasion calls for reference to those larger questions of national policy and principles which enter into the question of the control of the islands of the Pacific, and in the discussion our rights should not be based alone on the existing treaty between the United States and the Samoan Government. If my views are incorrect, coming from so humble a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations and of the Senate, they will be understood to be my individual views and will therefore neither compromise the Government nor receive undue attention elsewhere.

The Samoan Islands or Navigator's Islands are of considerable commercial and strategic importance to the United States. They are situated between parallels 13° 30' and 14° 20' south latitude and meridians 169° and 173° west longitude. The group is composed of nine islands; some writers have said thirteen, but they include the Manua group, lying 60 miles west of the Samoan group. Only three of the islands are of any considerable geographical or commercial importance. These three are Savaii, Upolu, and Tutuila

Savaii, the largest, is about 40 miles in length by 20 miles in breadth, and contains 700 square miles. It is occupied mainly by two mountain ranges of volcanic origin, one extending from east to west along the south coast, the other being more centrally located, and the two coming together near the north end of the island. There is but one harbor in this island where large vessels can anchor, and even that is not safe from November until February. It is of very little importance. The interior of the island is composed of mountains and lava-beds, is a wilderness destitute of animal life, and of no value. Wherever the mountains amproach the coast the shore line is above to and rocky. mountains approach the coast the shore line is abrupt and rocky, but where they recede from the shore there is a narrow strip of alluvial soil always covered with luxuriant vegetation and dotted over with Indian villages

The second island in size, but the most important one so far as population and resources are concerned, is Upolu. It is 37 miles long and 11 miles broad, and contains 550 square miles. Upon this island is the harbor of Apia, situated between Malaatua and Mulinuu at the head of an oval bay. It is the place where the seat of government for the islands is located, and where the principal residences of foreigners are. The center of this island is composed of mountains, and on a mountain near Apia is a celebrated lake 120 feet from the edge of a cruet, the top of a requirities 60 feet deep without any visible inlet or out.

at the top of a mountain, 60 feet deep, without any visible inlet or outlet, and supplied by the annual rainfall.

The harbor of Apia, the principal harbor in this island, is a very good one, probably the best in the islands for sailing vessels, and yet at certain portions of the year is dangerous.

Skirting portions of the island are strips of rich alluvial soil covered with luxuriant vegetation, and the hills themselves are covered to their summits with groves of trees, among which are the cocoanut, the tree fern, and various hard-wood trees which take a high polish and are suitable for manufacturing into furniture. Beneath these groves of trees tropical fruits, such as bananas, oranges, limes, and bread-fruit, grow. Cotton is indigenous, at least there is a species of wild cotton growing there. Undoubtedly the islands are adapted to the production of coffee and the sugar-cane.

The next in order of size is the island of Tutuila, and it is the island in which the United States, by reason of our treaty rights in the harbor of Pago Pago, probably have the greatest interests.

This island is 17 miles in length and 5 miles in width. The harbor of Pago Pago, situated on the south side of the island, is a deep indentation some 3 miles in length, nearly cutting the island in two, narrow at its mouth, being a little over a mile in width, surrounded by hills from 2,000 to 3,000 feet high, with a narrow fringe or strip of alluvial soil surrounding the bay at the foot of the mountain where the Indian villages are built, and which, as stated by the Senator from Ohio yesterday, would be suitable ground for the erection of wharves and other necessary structures for the full enjoyment by the United States of their treaty privileges. This island is of volcanic origin, and in the center is a chain of mountains like those in Upolu. The hills are wooded to their summits, the trees being of the same character as the groves of Upolu.

The population of these islands is 35,000 natives, but there are about 350 foreign residents, of which about 100 are citizens of the United States and something exceeding that number subjects of Germany, and the rest are mainly British subjects. The trade of the islands is about in proportion to the citizenship of the foreign residents. It is stated that in 1885 the annual amount of trade with Germany was $281,612, that with the United States $146,000, and with Great Britain $115,000. Our commerce is small, but it is worth protecting. The natives are, of the same race as the Kanakas of the Sandwich Islands. They belong to the so-called light race of the Southern Pacific islands, and are superior to any other native race now in the Pacific. They are well developed physically, of fair mental ability, and are susceptible of a great degree of improvement.

They are said to be easily led by foreign influences, have been at least nominally converted to Christianity, and Mr. Sewall, our conleast nominally converted to Christianity, and Mr. Sewall, our consul-general there, states that morning and evening in every house there is Christian worship. It seems to be conceded by all who have examined the question that what was stated yesterday by the Senator from Ohio in regard to the capacity of these natives for self-government is substantially correct, that they are not now prepared to establish or maintain a government which can enforce its authority and protect the interests of the natives and of the foreign residents in the islands. The question of the independence and autonomy of the Samoan Government is complicated by the presence of foreign residents and by the ment is complicated by the presence of foreign residents and by the effort which has been made to cultivate the islands and to create a commerce between them and foreign nations.

I think it will conduce to a better understanding of the recent occurrences in these islands which have involved the United States in some controversy with Germany, to take at least a hasty glance at the events which have occurred in Samoa from the time the United States first became connected with the islands up to the time when the course of Germany was commenced which has led to the present complications

Our attention was first called to the Samoan Islands in 1872 by Captain Webb, a ship-owner, and who was, I believe, a part owner of the line of steam-ships plying between San Francisco and Australia. His communication to our Government was based upon the report of the captain of one of his ships. He called the attention of the Government to the commercial importance to the United States of the harbor of Pago Pago. In the same year Commodore Meade, of the Navy, entered into a convention with the principal chiefs of the island of Tutuila for a cession of the harbor of Pago Pago to the United States. That convention was sent to our Government, and submitted by President Grant to the Senate, but was not ratified. The same year the principal chiefs of the islands sent a petition to the United States praying for the annexation of the islands to the United States. It is to be presumed that it was in pursuance of this invitation of the Samoan Government to the United States to annex the islands, or for a protectorate over them, that Colonel Steinberger, a citizen of San Francisco, was sent as special commissioner to the islands, to examine into Samoan affairs and report to the Government.

He went to the islands under the "mantle of authority," and when he returned made an elaborate report to this Government; and, in accordance with the request of the natives to have him returned, he was sent back by our Government. He brought with him when he first returned to the United States another petition from the chiefs of Samoa for annexation, and letters from the chiefs and people, among others a letter from Malietoa, the principal chief, from the tenor of which it is evident that the people of the islands then believed that annexation was already complete, or at least that our Government had extended its protection over them.

Colonel Steinberger was returned to the islands with presents from the Government of the United States to the Samoan Government consisting of a hundred muskets and ammunition, some larger guns, musical instruments, clothing, etc., and with a letter from President Grant in which he expressed the most lively interest in the people of the islands, and the hope that their independence and autonomy would be preserved.

When Colonel Steinberger reached the Samoan Islands the first time he found the government to be a government of chiefs called the Taimua and Pule or Faipule. The Taimua consisted, I think, as stated by him, of seven chiefs, not of the highest order, representing seven different districts. In some subsequent correspondence I have seen, it is stated that this body was composed afterwards of two chiefs from each district, making the number fourteen. The Faipule consisted of four chiefs of a higher order. There were besides in theislands other chiefs, village chiefs, who were not taken into this government.

During the first visit of Colonel Steinberger to the islands a written constitution and laws were adopted, probably the first that they had. After the return of Steinberger to the Samoan Islands his connection with the United States Government was discontinued, and in 1875 he reorganized the Samoan Government under a new constitution medeled after the Constitution of the United States, the Taimua and Faipule being legislative bodies somewhat similar to the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States; but the important feature of his government was that there was a premier who virtually had control of the government, and Steinberger himself was that premier. The government which he established, in form an autonomous government, was, in fact, I suppose, the individual government of Steinberger, who ruled the people at his will, but all agree that it was the first stable government which had existed in Samoa since foreigners had become residents in the islands.

During the time that Steinberger was absent in the United States between his first visit to the Samoan Islands and his return, the Samoan people had determined that they would have a king, and finding that they were embarrassed in the choice of a king they determined on having two kings and elected Malietoa Laupepa, the now deported king of the Samean Islands, deported by the German Government, and another, who was the principal chief of the opposing or rival family. Upon Steinberger's return he persuaded them that a government of two kings was impracticable, and an election was had or a choice of king was made, and Malietoa Laupepa was chosen.

An explanation is necessary in regard to the name or title of Malietoa which is taken by the kings of the Samoan Islands. It is a title that was given by the Samoans to a famous chief several hundred years ago who had driven the Tongans from the islands—a title which belongs to the Malietoa family. Upon the death of the father of Malietoa Laupepa, who was Malietoa Moli, in 1865, a dispute arose in the Malietoa family as to who was entitled to the title of Malietoa. The father had signified a desire just previous to his death that his son Malietoa Laupepa, who was then twenty years of age, should succeed him. He, how-ever, left a half-brother, Malietoa Talavou, who was a great warrior, a man of great influence, and certain influential members of the family believed that he should take the title, and in consequence both the son and uncle assumed the name of Malietoa; but they lived in harmony together in the same house until 1869, neither assuming the title of king.

could to secure his preference, and in 1869 a missionary by the name of Williams is said to have taken the younger Malietoa from the house of his uncle in Mulinuu, where they were living together, and brought him to Apia and crowned him king. Immediately after this the adherents of the older Malietoa crowned him king, and a war ensued which resulted in a compromise, by which the government was established which Colonel Steinberger found when he went to the island; that is the government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule.

Steinberger's government continued until February 2, 1876, when he was arrested by the officers and men of a British man-of-war and was carried on board the vessel, kept prisoner for a time, deported from the islands and taken to the British colony of Fiji and there released. To secure this, Malietoa, who was then king, had been induced to sign a request for his arrest. The result was that these legislative bodies, this government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, immediately after his arrest, the same night, held a meeting and deposed the king and drove him out from the seat of government. The next day he was found on a neighboring island, Savaii, and was taken from there by a British man-of-war and brought back.

Civil war resulted from the deposition of King Malietoa. The Taimua and Faipule became alarmed and sent a delegation of chiefs to the Fiji Islands to request British protection. The chiefs returned on the 23d of May, 1877, and our commercial agent in the islands, in order, as was supposed, to prevent British intervention and protection, and at the request and with the consent of the German consul, Mr. Weber, raised the American flag over the Samoan flag.

On February 22, 1878, our flag was again raised by our commercial The occasion for this was as follows: A high commissioner had been sent by Great Britain to negotiate a treaty with the Samoan Government, but in the mean time the latter Government had sent an envoy to the United States to ask the protection of our Government over the isl-The Samoan Government refused to enter into a treaty with Great Britain until they could hear the result of the mission of their envoy to the United States. This offended the high commissioner, who was there with a British man-of-war, or perhaps more than one. He was much annoyed at the prospective failure of his negotiations, and landed a force of marines at Apia, and it was supposed he intended to force upon Samoa the signing of the treaty at the point of the bayonet. At this juncture our commercial agent again hoisted the American flag, which interfered with the operation, and the treaty was not signed.

In the mean time the envoy to the United States returned to the islands, bringing the existing treaty with the United States, which, after being published, was on the 29th and 30th days of July considered in a meeting of the chiefs and ratified. The next year, 1879, the German Government secured a treaty with the Samoan Government, which, although severely criticised, was also ratified. The English obtained their treaty in 1879.

Although the government of the chiefs subdued the rebellion, they Although the government of the chiefs should the rependent, and became weaker and weaker, and in January, 1879, the elder Malietoa quiety returned to the seat of government and continued to reside there. On May 3, the younger Malietoa standing aside for him, he was anointed king. On May 28 his adherents notified the government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, to leave the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and Faipule, the seat of government of the chiefs, the Taimua and ment, which they did. War being now inevitable, the American and British and German consuls negotiated with both parties for a neutral territory, comprising the district of Apia, and within which most of the foreigners reside.

A battle followed, and the king was successful. In August, 1879—that is the date of the British treaty—Sir Arthur Gordon, the British high commissioner, returned to the Samoan Islands and consulted with the consuls of the various governments represented there as to what power in Samoa he should recognize, that is, with whom he should treat, and they all agreed that he should treat with King Malietoa the elder, then in power.

This was accordingly done, and on the next day all the consuls joined in a proclamation to the effect that they had resumed relations with the Government of the Samoan Islands and recognized the then king, Malietoa Talavou. At the same time they entered into a convention with Malietoa for a municipal government for the neutral district, the district of Apia, by which certain judicial powers were conferred upon the consuls, and not only the power to make regulations, but to enforce them.

This took effect on the 2d day of September, 1879, and having expired September 3, 1883, was renewed indefinitely by the consuls.

November 16, 1879, a decisive battle having been fought, a treaty of peace was secured by the intervention of Captain Deinhardt, of a German war ship then at Apia, by which Malietoa Talavou was to be king and Malietoa Laupepe vice-king, and was to be king at the death of Malietoa Talavou. In 1880 an agreement was entered into between the consuls and the Malietoa government for the support of the existing government and for the appointment of foreign advisers to the king by each of the three treaty powers, who were to participate in the government of Samoa. Three foreign advisers, one German, one British subject, and one American, were appointed, and certain laws were enacted with The missionaries, on account of the education of young Malietoa and their assistance, among them laws to prevent the sale of arms and amhis mild disposition, preferred him to his uncle, and did everything they munition to natives, to prevent Chinese immigration, and to provide quarantine regulations. In July, however, they suspended their operations to wait for delegates, it was said, from all Samoa, and never again resumed power.

November 9,1880, news was received of the death of the elder Malietoa, who was at the time of his death in the island of Savaii. The younger Malietoa, who was then vice-king, assumed the head of the govern-ment and was afterwards anointed king. Shortly afterwards the opposition anointed Tamasese king. War ensued; preparations at least were made for war. In June, 1881, Captain Gillis, of our naval vessel Lackawanna, being at Apia, undertook to secure peace. He visited the camps of the respective parties, made a speech to each of them, arranged for a meeting on board the Lackawanna, which was held and adjourned from time to time, submitted to them certain articles which he had prepared, and the result was that a peace was agreed upon by which Malietoa was to be king and Tamasese vice-king.

The agreement was signed on the 12th day of July, 1881, and from that time up to January, 1885, that government was recognized by all the treaty powers by repeated acts. It was the most stable government the islands had ever had. Its authority was enforced. Its laws were executed to the extent of capital punishment. The rights of person and property of the foreign residents were safe. It was while this government was proceeding with so much order, stability, and vigor that the course of Germany towards the islands was commenced which has led to the present complications.

Through the instrumentality of a German fleet at Apia the German consul-general secured the signature of the king and vice-king to the convention of November 10, 1884, which was referred to by the Senator from Ohio yesterday, which virtually—

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Has the German Government distinctly, in any note or authorized expression to this Government or to the English Government, acknowledged that treaty as no longer in force?

Mr. DOLPH. I think not. Although I have an impression that the Senator from Ohio stated that yesterday, the information we have in regard to these islands is scattered through many documents, is very voluminous, and I should not be surprised if either the Senator from Ohio or myself were mistaken in regard to any particular fact; but I do not understand that Germany has ever notified this Government that it did not insist that the treaty was binding upon the Samoan Government, and I understand that the repudiation of that treaty by Malietoa was, in fact, the cause for the personal war against himself and for recent acts of the German Government in Samoa

Mr. MORGAN. To which treaty does the Senator refer?
Mr. DOLPH. I refer to the treaty of November 10, 1884, signed by the king and vice-king and by the consul-general of Germany, and witnessed by Mr. Weber, the head of the commercial interests of Germany in the Samoan Islands.

Mr. MORGAN. The first municipal engagement they entered into?
Mr. DOLPH. No; it is not the municipal treaty at all. I will refer to the treaty. The Senator will find the treaty on pages 5, 6, and 7 of Executive Document 238, being a message from the President of the United States, with inclosures, in response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of February last. Article 1 of this treaty pro-

A German-Samoan council of state shall be formed. To it shall belong the German consul or his representative, two Samoans, one of whom shall be appointed by the king, the other by the vice-king, with the advice and consent of the Taimua and Faipule, and two Germans, who shall be appointed by the German consul.

That is, three Germans and two Samoans. Article 2 provides:

The German-Samoan council of state shall deliberate and decide concerning all laws and arrangements whose introduction may be desirable for the common interest of the Samoan Government and of the German residents of Samoa. Especially shall it establish legal provisions which shall be enforced in the case of criminal acts committed by Samoans, when a German, or a citizen or subject of another state in the German service, or a colored laborer in the German service, or the property of such persons has been thereby injured. The same provisions shall be enforced in the case of offenses committed by colored laborers in the German service. in the German service.

Article 3 provides that the laws and regulations which are to be made by this German-Samoan council of state shall be promulgated by the king and vice-king over their own signatures as laws of the kingdom.

It is then provided in Article IV:

The king shall appoint, with the advice and consent of the German consul, a German officer (as a member) of the Samoan Government. This officer shall be the secretary and the adviser of the king in all matters in which German residents of Samoa are concerned. He shall perform the functions of a German judge in criminal cases in which German residents of Samoa are interested.

It then provides what sentences may be pronounced and in what manner.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the treaty I had in my mind. I think that that is a municipal treaty, a treaty for the conduct of municipal affairs of the Samoan Government, not a treaty of commerce or of amity, or any other thing except for the internal government of Samoa. I think if that treaty had been ratified between Germany and the Samoan Government it would have been a clear violation of our treaty

Mr. DOLPH. Of course the word "municipal" is susceptible of various definitions. Every local law of a nation may be said to be a municipal law. I thought when the Senator first asked me concerning the treaty that he meant a treaty for the government by the consuls of the municipality of the district of Apia.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.
Mr. DOLPH. This appears to be a treaty which justifies what was stated by the Senator from Ohio yesterday; that is, that if it had been executed it would have secured substantially the entire control of the Samoan Government by the German Empire.

But I was proceeding to say that Article V provides:

A prison shall be erected for the custody of offenders in criminal cases in which German residents of Samoa are interested. Persons sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor shall be required to perform suitable work, such as can be made available for defraying the cost of the management of the institution. The German member of the Samoan Government shall be charged with the surveillance of the management of the prison.

Then Article VI.

The king, together with the German consul, shall appoint policemen, who shall perform the prison service and shall see that good order is maintained on German plantations. These policemen shall be subject to the control of the German member of the Samoan Government.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the treaty or convention of which he is now speaking, and a part of which he has read, is subsequent in date, being November 10, 1884, to the treaty or convention of September 2, 1879, between Samoa and Great Britain and the United States, which, however, was not ratified by the Senate; in fact, our Government never sent it to the Senate for ratification; and I concur with him, and I think it is a very important question, that it was the determination of the German Government, as evinced in this later transaction, to seek to supersede entirely the convention of September 2, 1879, and to get a very much firmer and stronger hold upon the local government of Samoa than it could have had under the former convention.

Mr. DOLPH. However, it was not until some time after the negotiation of the treaty of November 10, 1884, that the German Government attempted to withdraw from that municipal convention. That withdrawal was not had until 1887, after our present consul-general arrived there. That is to say, the three powers acted under that convention for the municipal government of the district of Apia from the time it was executed and took effect on the 2d of September, 1879, up to some time in the summer of 1887, notwithstanding the execution of the treaty of November 10, 1884.

Mr. MORGAN. I think I agree with the Senator from Oregon that the treaty of 1884, to which he has been referring, contains evidence that is absolutely convincing of the determination of Germany to acquire supreme jurisdiction and power in Samoa, and I agree that Germany would not have withdrawn from that treaty, would not have abandoned it, but for the pressure that was brought to bear, I suppose, by other powers interested.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand that the treaty of November 10, 1884, which was afterwards repudiated by the Samoan king, referred particularly to the municipality or district of Apia. It covered the entire islands wherever there were German residents, and that was, I think, the portion of the islands capable of cultivation-their plantaions were in different portions of the islands.

Mr. MORGAN. Of all the islands?

Mr. DOLPH. Of all the islands, yes; and the extensive provisions of this treaty, the powers therein conferred on the German Government, it appears to me, are entirely incompatible with the independence and autonomy of the native government—the Samoan Government—and are inconsistent with our treaty rights there.

As soon as the German fleet sailed away Malietoa repudiated the treaty, alleged that it had been signed under duress, and applied to the British Government for protection.

I will ask the Senate to indulge me in having read a letter dated Mulinuu, December 29, 1884. Mulinuu is a town in the district of Apia, and situated on the promontory of that name at the entrance of the bay on which Apia is situated. I will ask the Secretary to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Inclosure E 9.]

MULINUU, CAPITAL OF SAMOA, December 29, 1884.

MULINUI, CAPITAL OF SANDA, December 29, 1884.

YOUR MAJESTY: I write to inform your Majesty that I am deeply distressed on account of the troublesome acts done by subjects of your country in Samoa. I humbly beseech your Majesty to listen to my complaint.

The first matter of complaint of which I have to inform your Majesty is the agreement which was made on the 10th of November between the Government of Germany and the Government of Samoa.

The method in which it was brought about was very improper, for we did not desire to make it because we were not allowed to see the documents so that we could consult about it and consider it.

I wrote to the German consult to ask him to give me a copy of the agreement, in order that we should thoroughly understand its meaning. He replied that he refused to give me or my government a copy of the agreement until after we had accepted (signed) it.

I assented to the agreement and our names, Malietoa and Tupua, were signed to it on account of our intimidation by threats. I also inform your Majesty of our withdrawal from the agreement on account of its containing many impraeticable clauses.

I therefore beg your Majesty will not assent to that agreement.
I also appeal to your Majesty will not assent to that agreement.
I also appeal to your Majesty will not assent to that the toublesome acts of Mr. Weber, a subject of your country.

He is continually trying to cause divisions among my people, in order to bring about disturbances and war in Samoa. I have received much information respecting his working for the purpose of causing troubles to arise in Samoa again.

He is continually scheming and offering bribes to some Samoan chiefs to induce them to comply with his wishes and thus cause a rebellion in my country. I complain to your Majesty on account of this improper conduct of Mr. Weber, so that he may be compelled to desist from acts by which the blood of the people of my country may be shed.

I hope and pray that God will bless your Majesty and your Government.

I am, your Majesty,

MALIETOA, King of Samoa.

To His Imperial Majesty the EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

Mr. DOLPH. In January following the German consul-general made reprisal, as he called it, of the sovereignty of the king within the municipality of Apia, and raised the imperial flag there, and later the king was compelled to leave the capital. Upon Malietoa raising the Samoan flag, a detachment of marines was sent from a German vessel in the harbor, and it was pulled down. Simultaneously with this action Tamasese, the vice-king, under the agreement made on board the Lackawanna, on July 12, 1881, was induced by Mr. Weber, the head of the German trading firm at Apia, to rebel. The object was apparent, and no doubt was to secure control of the islands through the fiction of a native government.

Despite the assurance of the German minister of state and the agreement for a conference of the treaty powers afterwards made concerning Samoan affairs, the encouragement and active aid of the Tamasese party by Mr. Weber, the head of the German trading firm, and Dr. Stuebel, the German consul-general, continued and was open and unconcealed. Mr. Weber erected a house among them from which he distributed arms and ammunition in exchange for lands at ruinous prices to the Samoans, in spite of the remonstrance of Malietoa and the British and American consuls, and in violation of a law which had been passed by the active co-operation of the German consul, a law which had been passed with the assistance of the foreign advisers to the Samoan Government, the advisers appointed, one by each treaty power, who, as I have stated, participated with the legislative bodies in the enactment of certain laws. The rebels were constantly assured that the German fleet would return to put them in power and to drive out their enemies; that they would have German protection. In 1886 the German fleet did come, and everything that was done by it had a tendency to induce the Tamasese party thing that was done by it had a tendency to induce the lambases party to believe that the promises to them were about to be carried out.

The admiral of the fleet, instead of calling upon the king, sailed down to the rebel camp, went on shore and addressed Tamasese and his forces, telling them to be patient; that they would be protected; that the protection of Germany had been resolved upon; and everything indicated that Germany was then about to take possession of the islands and put Tamasese in power, and this was only frustrated by the action of our consul at Samoa, Mr. Greenebaum, who, at the request of Malietoa, hoisted the American flag at the seat of government over has the Samoan flag, and the fleet sailed away.

As was stated yesterday by the Senator from Ohio, this action of our consul was promptly repudiated by Mr. Bayard, and the English and German ministers and our ministers abroad were notified of that repudiation. At the same time the German Government was informed that the United States desired no separate protectorate, and it was suggested, if my recollection serves me correctly, that whatever was done there for the protection of foreign interests should be done by the three treaty powers.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that it was to be done as a Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that it was to be done as a joint protectorate at all, or a separate protectorate by either one of the powers, but that the conclusion they were to come to was that which is expressed positively in our treaty, and apparently, if not positively, in all the succeeding treaties between Germany, Great Britain, and Samoa, that the autonomy of that kingdom should be preserved, and that its commercial neutrality should also be preserved. I think Mr. Bayard has never at all committed this Government to the proposition that there was to be either a separate protectorate by one Government or a joint protectorate by all three. He did not believe that a protect-orate was entirely consistent with the recognized autonomy of that kingdom as a kingdom in the family of nations.

Mr. DOLPH. The dispatch of Mr. Bayard to Mr. Pendleton contained the following:

No separate protectorate by any nation desired. Suggest that German minister here be authorized to confer with British minister and me, and arrange that order be established. A competent and acceptable chief to be chosen by natives and upheld by three powers.

That comes pretty near a protectorate upheld by three powers.

Three new consuls to be appointed, and continued presence of a war vessel for two years provided for by three powers. Joint declaration to be made against annexation or protectorate by any of the three powers.

These being the words of Mr. Bayard, they will qualify anything I may have said previously in regard to the dispatch.

This proposition for a conference was acceded to by the British Government. It was when first presented taken under advisement by the German Government, but afterwards acceded to, and our Government was assured by the minister of state of Germany then and on numerous subsequent occasions that the status quo should be maintained in the islands. To have maintained the status quo would have been to have maintained the authority of the then King Malietoa.

Preliminary to the assembling of this conference and at the suggestion of the German Government commissioners were sent out by each of the three treaty powers, Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, to examine into the affairs of Samoa and to report. Our commissioner sent out by Mr. Bayard was a Mr. Bates, of Delaware, an able lawyer and an intelligent man, who made a very able and interesting report.

The conference assembled in the city of Washington, and was in session here in July, 1887. It had several sessions, and discussed this question, as will appear by the dispatch of Mr. Bayard to Mr. Pendleton, which was referred to yesterday by the Senator from Ohio. Propositions made by the German Government were objected to by this and by the British Government, and propositions emanating from our Government were objected to by the German Government, and the conference adjourned, as stated in Mr. Bayard's dispatch, from July until autumn of 1887, all the while under the assurance of the German Government that the status quo in the Samoan Islands should be preserved. In the spring of 1887 the present consul-general, Mr. Sewall, was appointed, and arrived in the islands on the 17th day of July.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator pardon me for asking him the authority for saying that the German Government agreed that the status quo should be preserved pending that conference?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not know that I stated it so broadly. Every official communication from the German Government from the time when the attention of that Government was first called to the matter and the conduct of Germany complained of by our Government and a conference requested contained the assurance that the status quo should be preserved. I do not say that there was any special agreement that during the conference it should be preserved, but that was necessarily

Mr. MORGAN. I have no doubt it was necessarily implied between the governments that while they were engaged in negotiating a new arrangement for the government of Samoa or for the protection of the people of Samoa or the non-residents who were in those islands, there should be no interference with the government and no attempt to remove one of the claimants from the exercise of his royal author-ity and supplant him with another. I was asking the Senator from Oregon merely for information, because while it has been stated several times in a positive way that there was an understanding between the two governments that there was to be no interruption of the status quo, I have not seen any official announcement of the fact, or at least I have not seen any agreement of Germany which seemed to recognize that that was an engagement between the United States and that

Mr. DOLPH. As I said before, the dispatches, reports, and other documents relating to this question are very voluminous, and I would not undertake to state positively that any particular fact is not shown by the correspondence. I will say that I do not remember to have seen it anywhere expressly declared in so many words that the status quo was to be maintained during this conference, but my statement, as agreed to by the Senator, I understand, is that it was necessarily implied.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will pardon me one moment more, I think it was of necessity implied in any such conference as was being held between these three great powers that there should be no interruption of the status quo pending that conference. But if that agreement was not reduced to writing, was not made a matter of positive understanding between the governments concerned, then it would probably be a discourtesy to our Government and not a breach of faith if the German Government pending the conference should have gone forward to declare war, for that is what it did, against Malietoa. That is the precise point I wanted to get at, whether we have some duty resting upon us to vindicate the rights and character of this Government for an act of discourtesy, or whether the duty comes out of a positive understanding between the two Governments that there should not be any such intervention in Samoa.

Mr. DOLPH. Our interests and our rights and our duty as a nation in regard to the Samoan Islands, in my judgment, rest upon broader foundations than any question arising out of the conference of the treaty powers, or our treaty with the Samoan Islands, or the treaty of other European Governments with them. As I proceed I think I shall develop to the Senator the grounds upon which I believe the United States Government should interest itself in Samoan affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. I expect I shall be entirely in agreement with the Senator on that.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not propose at this time to criticise to any extent the action of the German Government. It is in accordance with the policy of Europe, the policy of the acquisition of territory, the policy which has prevailed until almost all the islands of the Pacific Ocean have been partitioned out between European powers. I do not know that we can complain, unless we are going to apply a principle that lies deeper than the question of our mere treaty rights with Samoa, to prevent the acquisition of those islands by a European power.

But to continue with the statement, in the spring of 1887 a Mr. Brandeis, lately connected with the German consulate at Apia, and comnected with a trading firm there, a German citizen, was sent to Tamasese under pay and with the title of general, to drill his forces. He took charge of the rebel forces. He organized them. He countersigned the proclamations that were issued by Tamasese. He acted as judge and levied fines and arrested chiefs and deported them, and in fact controlled the government of Tamasese, if we may call it such. During all this time Malietoa, the king, was amply able to subdue the rebellion. He was ready to do so. He insisted on doing so, but was held back and induced not to do so by our consul-general and the consul-general of the British Government, in order to prevent bloodshed. Before Mr. Sewall reached there he received a telegram from the Secretary of State virtually instructing him to advise Malietoa to shed. Before Mr. Sewall reached there he received a telegram from the Secretary of State virtually instructing him to advise Malietoa to desist from attempting to subdue the rebellion, based upon what must have been understood by the consul-general and by Malietoa to be the fact that the three treaty powers would not allow the Samoan Government to pass under the control of the German Government, and would, during the pendency of the conference, maintain the status quo. Induced by our consul, Malietoa desisted upon the eve of an attempt to subdue the subdue, which he could have succeeded in doing at to subdue the rebellion, which he could have succeeded in doing at any time from the day when it was started unless prevented by the interference of the Germans.

In the mean time, after the conference in Washington had adjourned from July until the autumn, the German fleet again appeared at Apia, this time with the evident purpose of taking up the cause of Tama of sustaining him as king, and of securing the control of the islands. We were notified about this time by the German minister (I said yesterday six days before; I find now, after looking at my memorandum, that it was six days after the event) that Germany intended to declare a personal war against King Malietoa. Upon the arrival of the fleet there the German consul-general sent a demand to Malietoa to comply with certain conditions or war would be declared against him. There had been a fracas in Apia at the time of the birthday of the emperor. Some German citizens were celebrating the birthday in a saloon and had given beer to the natives. A drunken row followed. The nose of a German was broken, which fact he ascertained the next morning, but could not tell who had done it.

Mr. MORGAN. Was that in Apia?

Mr. DOLPH. It was in Apia.

Mr. MORGAN. Within the municipality?

Mr. DOLPH. Within the municipality, and that municipal government was still recognized. Some natives had been arrested and brought before the Samoan judge, but he discharged them for want of evidence, and they were then at large on a motion pending a new trial. The deand they were then at large on a motion pending a new trial. The demand of the German consul was that Malietoa should make an abject mand of the German consul was that Malietoa snould make an abject apology, using a native word which means "crawling on the belly;" that he should punish the Samoans charged with the offense of breaking the nose of the German, and that he should pay immediately to the injured man a thousand dollars, and pay $12,000 for fruit which it was alleged had been stolen from plantations during the previous four years.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator remember at what precise place the Government of Samoa, represented by Malietoa, resided at that time?

Mr. DOLPH. I think Malietoa was then at Apia. As the Senator knows, Apia is at the head of the bay. Mulinuu is at one point of the bay and there are native villages surrounding the bay. The native government was previously held, and I think generally held, at

Mr. MORGAN. But it was all within the municipality.
Mr. DOLPH. It was all within the municipality; the municipality embraced several native villages.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the question would naturally arise, I think, if this convention for the government of the municipal district of Apia was then in force or recognized as being in force, whether the authorities concerned in the administration of that system were not themselves the proper persons to apply a corrective, if necessary, for any breach of the recognized.

breach of the peace.

Mr. DOLPH. That is what I think. I think Malietoa might have Mr. DOLPH. That is what I think. I think manietoa might have well said in regard to the surrender or punishment of these persons that they were within the municipality and subject to the consular government of the municipality, and that he could not punish them. This demand was made on the 23d of August, 1887, and at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 24th of August he replied, saying in substance that he had not control of these men to punish them without trial; that he had not control of these men to pulsar them without trial; that the demand was a large one and he had not the means to comply with it, and asking time that he might consult with his chiefs and his government. Within half an hour after this reply was received war was declared against him, marines were landed, and his flag was

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator also whether in connection with that demand of a thousand dollars for the redress of these grievances growing out of this alleged riot the claim of the German people for trespasses upon the plantations, running back, I think, for four years, and estimated at $3,000 a year, was incorporated with that claim for a thousand dollars and both claims presented at the

Mr. DOLPH. That I understand to be the case. The total amount of money demanded was $13,000. It was all one demand.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any evidence that the Senator's eye has fallen upon to show that prior to this sudden demand for $13,000 there had been during those four years any notification to the Samoan Government that it would be held responsible for the trespasses of Samoans or private citizens upon the private property of the cocoa plantations on the islands?

Mr. DOLPH. I have no recollection of seeing any such demand. I have a strong impression that this demand was made, going back over four years, antedating the time when this Government had been assured that the status quo should be maintained, as a pretense for what was intended to follow, the deportation of Malietoa and the setting up of Tamasese as king.

As I have said, war was immediately declared against Malietoa.

The marines from the German ship landed and Tamasese was brought to the seat of government by a German ship and saluted. A meeting of chiefs was called by Tamasese and Brandeis. All hope of protection from the United States, all hope of any solution of the question by the conference having failed, Malietoa urged the chiefs to come in and see if they could not make some arrangement with the German admiral, and while the guns of the five German ships were trained upon the seat of government this meeting was held. The agreement which they were required to sign in the interest of Tamasese was held out to them by the consular clerk and they had no alternative. Brandeis made a speech to them which I will read:

Great are my thanks that the chiefs and Faipule of the whole of Samoa are assembled here this day. It is strictly forbidden that any discussion should take place relating to the question as to whether it is good or not that Tamasese is King of Samoa, both at this fono (gathering) or at any future fonos. I place for your signature the following:

We inform all people of all Samoa of what follows:

1. The Government of Samoa has been assumed by King Tuiaana Tamasese.

2. By order (command) of the king it was directed that a fono take place today composed of the Taimua and Faipule, and we have obeyed the summons. We have signed our names under this 15th September, 1887.

We, the Taimua and Faipule, chiefs and heads of families of Samoa.

Germany now claims that this proceeding was an election of Tamasese, who is recognized as king by that country, but has never been recognized by the United States, and I believe not by Great Britain.

Mr. FRYE. Let me ask the Senator if in the diplomatic correspondence between Prince Bismarck and Secretary Bayard this is not alluded to as having solved all doubts and been a strict compliance with the requirements of the United States as a free and fair election by the native amoans?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes; in subsequent correspondence or conversation with our minister in Germany, Prince Bismarck expressed himself as greatly pleased that the suggestion of Mr. Bayard of the election of a chief in Samoa had been anticipated by the election of Tamasese under the circumstances here described. He felicitated our minister on that Malietoa surrendered to prevent bloodshed and was deported, but his people took up his cause. War followed. Tamasese is supported his people took up his cause. War followed. Tamasese is supported by the Germans, and without their support could not withstand the Malietoa government an hour. The Malietoa party, under the lead of a new chief, Malietoa Mataafa, is reported to have recently defeated the Tamasese party and the Germans. In the struggle the lives of our citizens have been endangered, their property destroyed; they have been subjected to personal indignities by the German authorities at Apia.

But I will not dwell upon the recent events, many of which were referred to by the Senator from Ohio yesterday. I have not undertaken to cover all the ground or to give recent events in their chronological order. over all the ground or to give recent events in their chronological order. Our Government brought misfortune upon Malietoa and his government by its advice and attitude of protection. It should now, insisting as it does, and as does Great Britain, that Malietoa is the rightful king, and not recognizing the Tamasese government, insist on the restoration of the status quo in Samoa, and should not quietly acquiesce in the acquisition by Germany of such a control of the islands as will be entirely inconsistent with our treaty rights and injurious to our commerce. There should be a positive declaration of policy by the United States in regard to Samoa.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have him put into his speech right at the point where the surrender of Malietoa is described, just these few words that Malietoa said.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall be glad to have them inserted, and I ask the Senator to read them.

Mr. FRYE. Malietoa said:

To all Samoa :

On account of my great love to my country and my great affection to all Samoa this is the reason that I deliver up my body to the German Government. That Government may do as they wish to me. The reason of this is because I do not desire that again the blood of Samoa shall be spilt for me. But I do not know what is my offense which has caused their anger to me and my country. Tuamasaya, farewell; Manono and family, farewell; so also Salafal, Tutula, Aana, and Alua, farewell.

If we do not again see one another in this world, pray that we may be again together above. May you be blessed.

MALIETOA, King.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask the Senator from Maine if Prince Bis-marck does not attribute the authorship of that proclamation to some American citizen, and if he remembers his name?

Mr. FRYE. The German authorities attribute the authorship of everything which interferes with German aggressions in Apia or Samoa, to American citizens or the friends of and sympathizers with American citizens

Mr. MORGAN. This included?
Mr. FRYE. This included.
Mr. DOLPH. After these statements concerning the conduct of the German Government in Samoa since 1884, which appears to be in strik-ing contrast with the assurances of that Government to our minister and Secretary of State, and apparently discloses a settled purpose on the part of that Government to secure such a control of those islands as would be incompatible with our treaty rights and obligations with the Samoan Government and with the independence and autonomy of that samoan Government and with the independence and autonomy of that Government, I desire to put on record as part of my remarks the statement of the Secretary of State, contained in a dispatch to our minister at Berlin, which, though couched in diplomatic language and showing more moderation than the facts would seem to warrant, fully justifies me in what I have said concerning the apparent purposes of Germany and her disregard of her understanding with the United States. He me in what I have said concerning the apparent purposes of Germany and her disregard of her understanding with the United States. He says:

This statement of recent occurrences should suffice to exhibit the earnest efforts of this Government to effect a peaceable settlement of Samoan affairs, honorable to all concerned, and just and equitable not only as between the treaty powers, but also as between them and the natives; and, further, to show that if those efforts have, after acceptance, been suddenly disregarded and defeated, the fact is one for which this Government can not be regarded as in any degree responsible.

Being solicitous, however, still to accomplish in the direction indicated all that the altered situation in Samoa would admit of, I sent identical telegraphic instructions on the 11th of October last to yourself and the United States minister at London stating that the United States consul-general at Apia reported most distressing condition of affairs, which continued war would only make worse; that the consul had been instructed to observe strict neutrality, but this Government was anxious, pursuant to its treaty with Samoa, to urge a peaceful adjustment and considerate treatment of Samoans.

You were further instructed to propose to the governments to which you were respectively accredited the immediate election of a king and a vice-king as agreed on in conference, and the issuance by the treaty powers of identical instructions to their representatives in the islands to promote such an election, leaving other measures which had been discussed, but not agreed upon, to be hereafter arranged.

Two days later I received from you a report that it was not understood at Berlin that a new election had been agreed on in conference, but that a new election had actually taken place.

Subsequently, I was informed by the United States minister at London that he had submitted my proposal to the British Government, but had withdrawn it, before receiving a reply thereto from Lord Salisbury, upon a report from led me to conclude, is still upheld and controlled by those who brought it into existence.

In Samoa, on the contrary, the action of the German representatives, especially during the last three years, has been such as to raise grave doubts in regard to the future relations of the treaty powers respecting the islands, and these doubts have only been relieved by expected assurances from Berlin of the absence of any intention on the part of Germany to unsettle former understandings and take control of the native government and assume a protectorate. As an example of this may be cited the signing on the 10th of November, 1884, by Dr. Stuebel, then German consul-general at Apia, with Mr. Theo. Weber, whose connections in the islands have been above described, as witness, and by Malietoa as King of Samoa, of a treaty under which substantially the entire control of Samoan affairs was to be handed over to the Germans.

It has never been maintained, so far as I am aware, that the Samoan king's signature of this treaty was a voluntary act. On the contrary, I am informed that it was executed by him under duress; that it was read to him only once by an interpreter; that the German consular representative refused to give him a copy for consideration; and that on the day following the signature of the instrument Malletoa secretly renewed an urgent petition to the Government of Great Britain for annexation. Against this convention the British Government of Germany has not insisted upon its execution.

In January, 1885, less than three months after the incident above narrated, Dr. Strabel under the form of correct processes and the covernment of the processes of the processes tion.

In January, 1885, less than three months after the incident above narrated, Dr. Stuebel, under the form of reprisal for certain acts of the native government, among which was its refusal to execute the instrument of the 10th of the preceding November, seized or attached the sovereign rights of the king in the municipality of Apia, and raised the German flag on Mulinuu Point, the seat of the native government. Coincidently, the flag of the native faction hostile to the then existing government was displayed a flow miles down the coast, and the then existing government was displayed a flow miles down the coast, and then covered the severnment of Maileton to put himself at the head of the movement.

This action of the German consul was not sustained by his Government; but shead of the movement.

"If, M. I'Ambassadeur, this agreement had been confined to the establishment of a court, and of the procedure to be observed in civil and criminal cases, and the punishment of offenses in which German subjects are concerned, for which alone Article VII of the German treaty in 1879 provides, its provisions would not, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, have been open to criticism; but the creation of a state council, the appointment of a German officer of the Samoan Government, and the enrollment of a German police to protect the plantations of German subjects, appear to place Her Majesty's subjects at a disadvantage, and will prevent the Samoan Government from acting independently in matters which affect the whole community. The arrangement seems in fact to give to Germany alone much of the influence with which in 1880 it was proposed to invest an executive council, to be composed of one English, one Germany man, and one United States member. To this arrangement Her Majesty's Government declined to accede on the ground that it involved too great an interference with the government of the island(s) to allow of its being assumed by the representatives of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States conjointly.

"It will not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to accept a position of less influence and consideration than is given to Germany by the agreement under discussion."

It is not necessary further to discuss the plans of settlement proposed in the conference, as I am informed that the German Government, while declining the plan proposed by me, does not insist upon its own, and I am therefore not without hope that a satisfactory solution may yet be found.

I have already stated that when the concernence wassuspended in July last until the autumn it was done with the concurrence of all the members, and solely for the purpose of enabling the representatives of Germany and Great Britain to consult their respective Governments. No intimation was then given that the slatus quo would be changed, or that any acts of hostility against the Samoan Government, or King Malletoa personally, were in contemplation.

With this understanding, which had not changed from the moment the proposal for a conference was made and accepted, at the suggestion of the British and German ministers, I renewed, on the very eve of the formal opening of the conference, the instructions already given theretofore to the consul of the United States at Apia to use his influence to prevent violence between the native factions. The text of these instructions, which were telegraphic, and bore date the 20th of June last, was as follows:

"Treaty powers endeavoring to secure permanent native government for Samoa. Strongly advise natives to avoid resort to force, which would endanger Samoa's best interests."

That the Government of Her Britannic Majesty fully concurred in the importance of a careful maintenance of the status quo, and in the understa of king seemed to be "imperatively called for," and that Her Majesty's Government expressed "no opinion, favorably or adversely, to the election of Malietoa."

On the same subject the German minister said:

"King Malietoa having notoriously violated his treaty obligations towards Germany, and having even among the natives comparatively but few partisans, while a completely organized counter government has been formed under Tamasses, a new election of king will have to take place according to the customs of the country. This election is to be freely made by the chiefs and the people of Samoa."

It is unnecessary to cite other statements, equally pertinent, to show the apparently complete concurrence of view as to the peaceful and benevolent purpose of the conference.

It is not strange, therefore, that I was taken wholly by surprise when the German minister called at this Department on the 29th of August last, and left with me a memorandum stating that his Government proposed to independently protect its own interests and rights in Samoa and obtain the satisfaction and reparation deemed to be due to its national honor, and, in case Mailetoa was either not willing or not powerful enough to give the necessary satisfaction for the past and sufficient guaranties for the future, to declare war against him and refuse to recognize his government.

In its general features it appears to be far more objectionable than the plan of government proposed by the German minister at the conference in this city. For, although that plan was one of foreign control of the islands, yet it carried with it the guaranties of the Imperial Government. But the Government of Tamasese can be regarded as nothing cise than the government of the islands by the local German commercial and landed interests, through Herr Brandles, Tamasese's sole minister.

On the lat of November last, Baron von Zedtwitz, the German chargé d'affaires, called at this Department and made complaint that the American consul at Apia gave active expression to an anti-Ger

Apia, and the statement that the municipal institutions were not recognized by the United States.

Less than a month previously complaint had been made to me by the German chargé d'affaires that the consul of the United States, in his capacity as member of this municipal board, had claimed jurisdiction for that body in a suit not properly belonging to it, but to the German consul independently; and I telegraphed instructions to the American consul not to assume control in that case, the jurisdiction of the municipal court over it being questionable.

While it is true that the United States had not become formally a party to the municipality convention, with the advice and consent of the Senate, yet, although this Government was not bound by treaty obligation in the matter, it had always given the municipal organization the fullest practical support and recognition, as an existent local government; and the American consul, being clothed by the laws of the United States and our original treaty with Samoa with judicial powers, had discharged through that organization, from its commencement eight years ago, judicial functions for the common advantage of all the treaty power, and with their full assent and co-operation. And Americans, as well as the members of other foreign nationalities represented in Apla, had paid taxes to support the municipal government.

It is therefore difficult to understand why complaint against the American consul should have taken the form or been placed upon the grounds above stated.

At the present time the municipal government has been declared in abevance

At the present time the municipal government has been declared in abeyance by the German consul. It does not, however, appear to be disputed that the only reason avowed for the consul's action was the fact that the American consul, Mr. Sewall, was fifteen or twenty minutes late at a special meeting of the board, which was called for the hour of 10 o'clock in the morning instead of the customary hour in the afternoon, and that when the government was so declared to be in abeyance for the alleged refusal of Mr. Sewall to attend he was on his way to and already near the place of meeting. It is admitted that the British consul stated to His Imperial Majesty's consul his "impression" that Mr. Sewall was coming to the meeting, and I have reason to believe that Her Majesty's consul might authoritatively have stated from Mr. Sewall himself a positive assurance that he was coming.

Immediately upon the municipal government being so declared in abeyance by the German consul, the German wayl forcest took possession of Apia upon the German consul, the German wayl forcest took possession of Apia upon the German consul, the German wayl forcest took possession of Apia upon which the consultation of the municipality.

consul, and was taken on board of the Bismarck, the flag-ship of the German squadron.

It is not my purpose to comment upon the grounds of the recent German action in Samoa, as they have been above stated, although I regret that the powerful Government of Germany did not find it possible to take a more liberal view of the conditions of Samoan life and civilization, and the unfortunate situation of the native king, who, in regarding himself as the rightful ruler of the islands, could point, in confirmation of his title, to a long series of acknowledgments of his authority by all three treaty powers.

But it is impossible to ignore the fact that all the grounds for hostile action on the part of Germany above stated existed long prior to the meeting of the conference in this city, and some of them even anterior to its proposal, the acceptance of which was followed, as I was informed, by appropriate action to maintain the status quo in the islands. During all the sessions of the conference nothing was said to disturb this impression, nor was intimation given of any other course being contemplated when the conference was temporarily adjourned. The first intimation of belligerent intent on the part of German minister on the 29th of August last, five days after war was actually declared against him, and necessarily several weeks after it was determined upon; and my first notification that war had been declared and that Germany intended to depose Malietoa was also post factum, being given to me by the German minister on the 23d of September last, six days after the Samoan king was taken on board of the Bismarck.

It seems hardly necessary to explain the pacific character of the pending amendments, and still, inasmuch as our treaty rights in the harbor of Pago Pago are only coextensive with the existence of the treaty with the Samoan Government, I can not conceive why we should expend $100,000 or any sum there unless we are going to insist that these rights shall continue although a so-called autonomous government of the Samoan Islands set up and controlled by Germany should undertake to terminate that treaty.

One of the proposed amendments authorizes, and provides the means necessary for, the improvement of the harbor of Pago Pago, in which we have under existing treaty with the Samoan Government harbor privileges, and to which no one can raise any valid objection. The other purports to provide the Administration with the necessary means to protect our rights and interests and discharge our obligations under the treaty of 1878 between this Government and the Government of Samoa.

The questions which have arisen between the United States and Germany are questions which should be settled diplomatically. If Conmany are questions which should be settled diplomatically. If congress were to interfere and to give direction in the matter, something very different from these proposed amendments would be required. If I were asked what that would be, I would say a direction to the President to insist to the German Government upon a restoration of the status quo at the time in 1886 when the conference of the three treaty powers with Samoa was agreed upon by Germany, when our Government was assured that the status quo should be maintained; that Malietoa should be restored as the King of Samoa; and to notify the Germany. man Government that we would not permit the Samoan Islands to pass under the control of any foreign nation, but that their independence and autonomy must be maintained; or, at least, that any interference with it found necessary for the protection of foreign interests must be made the inite argument of the transfer or the protection of foreign interests must be made under the joint agreement of the treaty powers.

The commercial interests of the United States, as well as the dignity of the Government, demand that this should be done, and it would be entirely consistent with the declared policy of the Government for over sixty years.

On the 5th of January, 1888, in some remarks in the Senate on the subject of a naval station on the North Pacific coast, I called attention in a general way to the present and prospective commerce of the Pacific Ocean, and to the efforts being made by the British Government to control it, and of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company to secure the trans-continental trade of the Pacific coast and thus divert it from our own trans-continental railroad lines.

The Pacific coast States have an area of 800,000 square miles and a coast line of over 1,600 miles not including Puget Sound. Alaska contains 480,000 square miles, with a coast line of 25,000 miles, including indentations, and is 1,200 miles from north to south and 2,200 miles from east to west. The ocean current formed off the coasts of Japan and which strikes the Pacific coast at about 50° north latitude modifies the climate both in summer and winter to such an extent that the isothermal line passing through Northern Virginia after it crosses the Rocky Mountains bears north and strikes the Pacific Ocean 200 miles north of the northern boundary of Washington Territory.

With almost every variety of climate and productions, with a soil of great fertility, with extensive forests and valuable mines of the precious and useful metals, with extensive fisheries, and other great resources, the commerce of the coast, already great, will rapidly increase until it will equal that of the Atlantic coast. China, Japan, Australia, the Sandwich and the other islands of the Pacific are our commercial neighbors, and their valuable trade must eventually be largely carried on with the Pacific coast States. It is difficult now to conceive of the vast fleet of merchant vessels which will be required for the extensive commerce which will spring up in the near future when these islands are peopled by the Caucasian race, the soil cultivated, and their resources developed.

All their manufactures and many of their food products will be imported, while the native products will be exported in return. Other nations have seen the great possibilities of this commerce and are making great effects to account the little products of the commerce and are making great effects to account the little products of the commerce and are making great effects to account the little products of the commerce and are making great effects to account the little products will be exported in the little products will b nations have seen the great possibilities of this commerce and are making great efforts to secure it, while we stand idly by, if not indifferent, afraid to do what our own interests as a great commercial nation demand. Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada, at an expense to the Government of from $120,000,000 to $140,000,000, secured the construction of the Intercolonial Railroad connecting the maritime provinces of Canada with Montreal and Quebec, and of the Canadian Pacific Railroad connecting Montreal and Quebec, with Puret Sound

These railroads were built for political reasons, as the construction of neither was justified by the business which they could command. The Canadian Pacific is now competing at San Francisco, at Portland, and on Puget Sound and all along the coast for the trans-continental traffic of the Pacific coast, which should be carried on by our own trans-continental lines.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me there to ask him a

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I inquire whether it was not an express agreement with the Province of New Brunswick that the Canadian Pacific Railroad should be constructed as a condition of her becoming one of the states of the Dominion Government. I understand it was expressly provided that that road should be built as one of the conditions on her part to enter in the Dominion Government,

Mr. DOLPH. I am not entirely familiar with the facts, but I know that it was built, and the aid extended by Great Britain was extended for the purpose of securing the confederation of the Canadian provinces.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to say that in a personal conversation with the governor of New Brunswick some years ago he said to me that one of the conditions on which they would become a member of the Dominion Government was an agreement given that that road should be built. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I was so informed.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no doubt that was so, and that that was the inducement for British Columbia to enter into the convention for confederation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know how the agreement was made between the Province of New Brunswick and the Dominion Government, but the governor assured me that that was the condition, and that they should have a certain amount of representation in the Dominion Government, and they then consented to become a part of that

Mr. DOLPH. Not only that, but the Dominion Government and the Government of Great Britain are aiding by large subsidies the line of steam-ships which are to ply between the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railroad on Puget Sound with Australia, China, and Japan. More than that, government aid has been given to a British company which has projected and, I think, is already engaged in constructing a cable telegraph line from Vancouver, on Puget Sound, to the Sandwick Lender. wich Islands.

The numerous island groups of the Pacific have one by one passed under the control of European powers. Recently the remaining islands not already subject to foreign control, excepting the Sandwich Islands, the Samoan Islands, and perhaps one other group, were partitioned be-tween Germany and Great Britain, and now it seems evident that Germany is pursuing a plan to secure control of the Samoan Islands with the acquiescence of Great Britain. When that is accomplished Germany and Great Britain will be ready for fresh operations and further acquisitions of territory in the Hawaiian Islands, and we, feebly remonstrating, allow our treaty rights to be disregarded, the lives of our citizens to be jeopardized, their property destroyed, the Monroe doctrine to sink into innocuous desuetude.

The manner in which the islands of the Pacific have been partitioned out among the European powers is thus stated by Secretary Bayard in a dispatch to Mr. Pendleton of January 17, 1888, in reply to a communication of Prince Bismarck to the German minister at Washington, complaining of the anti-German attitude assumed by the American consul-general at Apia, Mr. Sewall:

Should the opinion which has been expressed as to the part taken by the United States in seeking to preserve the independence of the Samoan Islands seem in any degree extravagant, it will no longer appear to be so when what has taken place in the last three years in regard to other island groups in the Pacific is considered.

Prior to that period Spain was holding the Ladrone or Marianne and the Philippine Islands, and had also laid the basis of a claim of title to the Caroline Islands, although she did not maintain an active government there.

Between the years 1842 and 1847 France established a protectorate over the Marquesas, Society, and Paumota groups, and in 1853 occupied New Caledonia. In 1864 she formally assumed control of the Loyalty Islands, and in 1889 added Tahiti to the list of her colonies in the Pacific.

In addition to the continent of Australia, to which Great Britain holds a comparatively ancient title, that Government had also acquired the Fiji Islands and New Zealand, the sovereignty of the latter being ceded in 1840 and that of the former on the 10th of October, 1874.

Germany had not then entered upon her present active policy of colonization in the Pacific, although her subjects had carried on a considerable commerce there, and had established places of trade on various islands, including the Samoan.

Such was the condition of affairs at the beginning of the present decade, not there, and had established places of trade on various islands, including the Samoan.

Such was the condition of affairs at the beginning of the present decade, nos was there observable at that time any marked evidence of the desire for new territorial acquisitions; but, beginning in 1884, numerous island groups have, in rapid succession, passed in whole or in part under the control of various European powers, until almost the last vestige of native autonomy in the islands of the Pacific has been obliterated.

The year 1884 witnessed the occupation by Germany of the northern side of New Guinea, from Cape King William to Astrolabe Bay, the imperial flag being hoisted at twelve different points. Almost coincidently Great Britain occupied the south coast of the island, and in the months of November and December, in the same year, seized and occupied the Louisiade group, Woodlark Island, and Long and Rook Islands.

In the following year arose the dispute between Germany and Spain over the Carolines, which was terminated by the protocol signed at Rome on the 17th of December, 1885, under which Germany acknowledged the sovereignty of Spain over these islands and the Pelew group; and they have now passed finally under Spanish control.

But these events were merely the precursors of others, of which the seizure by France in 1886 of the New Hebrides was not the most significant. On the 6th of April of that year a joint declaration was made by Germany and Great Britain, which contemplated the absorption by those two powers of almost all the independent territory in that part of the Pacific Ocean called the West Pacific, lying between the fifteenth degree of north and the thirtieth degree of south latitude and between the one hundred and sixty-fifth degree of longitude west and the one hundred and thirtieth degree of longitude as of Greenwich, which had not already been occupied by some foreign power. Through that part of the Pacific included in those bounds of latitude and longitude as line of division was drawn to mark t annexation; and each joint declarant agreed not to make any acquisitions of territory, nor to establish protectorates, nor to oppose the operations of the other in the sphere of action respectively assigned to it.

Under this declaration and agreement, from which Samoa, Tonga, and Niné Island were excepted, and by the line of division drawn as above stated, New Ireland, New Britain, and the adjacent western half of the Solomon group passed under the dominion of Germany, and certain islands west of the line to Great Britain.

On the 1st of August, in the same year, the latter Government took possession of the Kermadee Islands, and by the imperial decree of the 13th of the ensuing month the Marshall, Brown, and Providence Islands and groups were occupied by Germany.

As the result of what has been above detailed, of the vast aggregate of territory in the Pacific Ocean, but a few island groups, containing a few thousand square miles, remain to-day as independent and autonomous.

Long anterior the United States had acquired, by discovery and occupation, the uninhabited island, or ocean reef, of Midway, as a possible coaling station.

In view of these facts, it is unnecessary to emphasize the importance attached by this Government to the maintenance of the rights to which the United States has become entitled in any of the few remaining regions now under independent and autonomous native governments in the Pacific Ocean.

Prince Bismarck has referred to this Government's treaty with Hawaii, of the 30th of January, 1875, which has lately been renewed, and which is said by him to give the United States commercial advantages in those islands superior to those possessed by any other foreign power. In respect to this it needs only to be observed that that treaty was one of special reciprocity which both the contracting parties were alone competent to make, and that the United States has at no time, since the convention was concluded, sought to use it to control the native government of the islands or to regulate their in

As I have said, there would be nothing inconsistent with our established policy, in the United States interfering to preserve the independence and autonomy of the Samoan Islands as against the encroachments of a European power, or even of assuming a protectorate over them, if necessary to secure peace, order, and the protection of our interests there. A protectorate assumed upon the invitation and with the consent of the native government for the purpose of preventing the forcible inter-ference of other nations would be a very different thing from intervention as practiced by European powers on the continent of Europe.

Pacific intervention which seeks the settlement of differences between nations, and if successful, results in a treaty, a congress, or international conference, is justifiable and may be commendable; but armed intervention by one or more nations with the internal affairs of another nation can not, in my judgment, be defended upon principles of right or justice. Among nations, as among individuals, equality is equity. Forcible intervention is inconsistent with the equality and the independence of nations. On the continent of Europe, whenever a pretext has been wanted for war with a weaker nation and the acquisition of its territory, it has been found in the doctrine of interven-

It has more than once served as the pretext for the spoliation of the weak by the strong. By the forcible intervention of the monarchies of Europe revolutions have been crushed, the progress of nations prevented, tottering thrones and kingly power sustained, the map of Europe changed, governments destroyed and their territory partitioned among neighboring nations, and what was created one day destroyed the next. The exercise of it is defined by no law, regulated by no precedents, and is governed only by the interests of the hour. The right denied at one time by a nation is asserted under precisely similar circumstances when self-interest demands it.

The claim and frequent everyies of this specialled right of intervent.

The claim and frequent exercise of this so-called right of interven-The claim and frequent exercise of this so-called right of intervention tends to keep Europe in a constant state of alarm and preparation for war and to make the great military and naval establishments maintained by the principal European powers necessary. Disguise it as we may, it is nothing but the old doctrine of the right of force. From an early period of our history it has been the settled policy of the Government to avoid entangling alliances with foreign nations and becoming involved in the controversies of foreign powers. We have not beheld unmoved instances of oppression and injustice, but our sympathies have found expression only in words of protest.

After the overthrow of the empire of the first Napoleon the rulers of Russia, Austria, France, and Prussia formed an alliance for mutual protection against revolutionary movements in their own states. a congress held by these powers in 1820, at which a representative of Great Britain was present, but not participating, it was agreed that the main purpose of the alliance should be to maintain the principle of the legitimacy of the existing dynasties, and that if these were threatened in any country in Europe the allied powers should preserve it by active and armed interference. In accordance with this agreement insurrecand armed interference. In accordance with this agreement insurrections in Piedmont and Naples were put down by the armies of Austria, and the revolution in Spain against Ferdinand VII by the French armies.

The Spanish colonies on this continent had revolted in 1810, had maintained their independence, and their independence had been recognized by the United States.

It was believed that the allied powers would extend their policy of intervention to this continent and would aid Spain in her attempt to through our minister, Mr. Rush, the co-operation of the United States in endeavoring to prevent the intervention of the allied powers with the affairs of the Spanish colonies on this continent.

The matter was the subject of long and careful consideration by President Monroe and his Cabinet, and resulted in the incorporation in President Monroe's annual message of 1823 of those famous passages which contain the declarations which have since been known as the Monroe doctrine, and which have since been reiterated by many of his

I will ask the Secretary to read the passages. I would have them printed in the RECORD without reading, except that I want to make some suggestions about them.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

It was stated at the commencement of the last session that a great effort was then making in Spain and Portugal to improve the condition of the people of those countries, and that it appeared to be conducted with extraordinary moderation. It need scarcely be remarked that the result has been, so far, very different from what was then anticipated. Of events in that quarter of the globe, with which we have so much intercourse and from which we derive our origin, we have always been anxious and interested spectators. The citizens of the United States cherish sentiments the most friendly in favor of the liberty and happiness of their fellow-men on that side of the Atlantic. In the wars of European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do.

It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuriesor make preparation for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and all impartial observers. The political system of the allied powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments. And to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure, and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole nation is devoted. We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered, and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and w

Mr. DOLPH. During the time I have been speaking I have received a telegram in regard to the importance of the Samoan Islands, which I have not had time to read, but which has been read by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FBYE] at my request, and contains nothing that can not go into the RECORD. I will ask now to have it read, and I will incorporate it in an appropriate place in my remarks.

The Secretary read as follows:

enator JOSEPH N. DOLPH:

NEW YORK, January 30, 1889.

Senator Joseph N. Dolph:

It is very important to the defense of the entire Pacific coast of the American continent against hostile naval attacks that the Samoan Islands should be controlled entirely by the United States. In case of war, Germany, tifu control of the Samoan Islands, would have an impregnable for the United States. Strategically the United States would have an impregnable for the United States. Strategically the United States would have to go to great expense in perpetually maintaining fleets and erecting coast defenses and in other ways, and the whole Pacific coast might be thrown into excitement and thus suffer greatly financially if the United States had difficulty with Germany and a German fleet should assemble at the Samoan Islands and simply make a demonstration against the Pacific coast, or watch the Pacific coast from the Samoan Islands. These islands are to a certain extent as important to the coast defenses of the Pacific as the West India Islands might be to the Atlantic coast.

The Samoan Islands are strategically of vast importance to the United States in controlling an interoceanic canal. The United States can not afford to let European military powers own every strategic position commanding the interoceanic canal. As to trade of the United States with Samoan Islands see in reply to Bismarck's assertion Appleton's Annual Encyclopedia for 1887, article Samoan Islands. Even commercially the Samoan Islands must soon be of far more importance owing to their geographic position than they can be to Germany. It would be a great calamity to the United States to permit Germany to fortify a single position in those islands. It would be sowing the seeds of much trouble to the United States in years to come.

JOHN C. HENDERSON.

108 West Fortieth Street, New York.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President— Mr. GRAY. Did the Senator give the author of that telegram?

Mr. DOLPH. Nothing except what appears. I stated that the teleram had been received while I was speaking, and I submitted it to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who read it for me while I was talk-ing and informed me that there was no reason why it should not go into the RECORD.

Mr. GRAY. What is the name?

Mr. DOLPH. John C. Henderson, of New York, and he gives his

Mr. GRAY. I am glad of that, Mr. DOLPH. The Monroe doctrine, as originally announced, was in substance that the United States would not submit to an extension subdue her colonies. At this juncture Mr. Canning, the minister of state of Great Britain, probably actuated in part by a desire to secure some public pledge on the part of the United States against the acquisition of any part of the Spanish possessions on this continent, sought dangerous to our peace and safety. There is a popular impression that the Monroe doctrine is intended to apply only to the acquisition of territory upon this continent by foreign powers.

But neither the declaration of President Monroe nor the subsequent action of this Government justifies such a construction. The word used is "hemisphere," which is broad enough to embrace all the islands of either ocean, the independence and autonomy of which are necessary to our safety and peace. This construction of the Monroe doctrine will be found to be justified by our diplomatic correspondence with other countries. It was declared more than sixty years ago by Mr. Clay in regard to Cuba and Porto Rico. It has been frequently since, in substance, declared by successive Secretaries of State when they have said we would not permit the conquest and occupation of the Sandwich

We would not permit the conquest and occupation of the Salatwich Islands by any one of the European powers.

Mr. GRAY. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. DOLPH. Allow me to finish this statement and I will yield.

The reasons for a similar declaration by our Government concerning the Samoan Islands are cogent.

The only difference between the case of the Samoan Islands and of the Hawaiian Islands is, in my judgment, the greater importance of the latter. The reasons for applying the Monroe doctrine are the same in both cases. With this view of the Monroe doctrine I hope that in any arrangement which may be made with European powers concerning Samoan affairs, the United States will in no manner become a party to the arrangement between Great Britain and Germany for the partition between them of the islands of the Pacific, or be too free to enter into stipulations concerning our future course in regard to the Pacific islands which have not yet passed under the control of the European powers, which may be in the way of such action by the United States concerning islands located near our territory as may be found necessary to secure our peace and safety.

I will now listen to what the Senator from Delaware wishes to say.

Mr. GRAY. I merely intended to inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether he seriously contended that the setting up of a half-civilized monarch and anointing with oil a half-clothed and half-civilized native of Samoa—that the setting up of such a man as king was in his opinion an assertion of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. DOLPH. In answer to the question of the Senator from Delaware I say no. I am not asking that the United States shall do that. I do not understand that the United States has proposed to do that. That is what has been done by Germany. That is interference, forcible interference with the internal affairs of the Samoan Islands by a foreign power. It is that which was declared against by President Monroe, and I say that the Monroe doctrine should be asserted in regard to the Samoan Islands as they come within the terms of that doctrine as it was originally announced and as it has been since construed by our Gov-

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.
Mr. BLAIR. I have been informed to that effect, and I wish to know whether it is correct, that these people are Presbyterian savages. I have understood that they were Presbyterians, the whole of them, and that they were adherents to the Christian religion and to some extent educated, but so far as the formalities and observances and realities of the Christian religion are concerned they were Presbyterians and quite as exemplary as the average of the people of the United States.

should like to inquire how that is.

Mr. DOLPH. I stated in the opening of my remarks that they are all nominally converted to Christianity, and it has been stated by our consul-general that in every house in Samoa, morning and evening, the incense of Christian worship arises. But I do not understand that they are all Presbyterians. I think the Presbyterian and some other denominations have missions there, and even the Church of England, as I understand.

The following quotations from the messages of the Presidents of the United States and official correspondence of our Secretaries of State will show how this question of the acquisition of territory by European powers in proximity to our shores has been regarded.

President Tyler, in his annual message of December, 1842, Mr. Webster being Secretary of State, said, concerning the Sandwich Islands:

ster being Secretary of State, said, concerning the Sandwich Islands:

Just emerging from a state of barbarism, the government of the islands is as yet feeble, but its dispositions appear to be just and pacific, and itseems anxious to improve the condition of its people by the introduction of religious and moral institutions, means of education, and the arts of civilized life. It can not but be in conformity with the wishes of the Government and the people of the United States, that the community thus existing, in the midst of a vast expanse of ocean, should be respected, and all its rights strictly and conscientiously regarded. And this must also be the true interest of all other commercial states.

Far remote from the dominions of European powers, its growth and prosperity, as an independent state, may yet be in a high degree useful to all whose trade is extended to those regions; while its nearer approach to this continent and the intercourse which American vessels have with it—such vessels constituting five-sixths of all which annually visit it—could not but create dissatisfaction on the part of the United States at any attempt by another power, should such an attempt be threatened or feared, to take possession of the islands, colonize them, and subvert the native government. Considering, therefore, that the United States possess so very large a share of the intercourse with those islands, it is deemed not unfit to make the declaration that their Government seeks, nevertheless, no exclusive control over the Hawaiian Government, but is content with its independent existence, and auxiously wishes for its security and prosperity. Its forbearance in this respect, under the circumstances of the very large intercourse of their citizens with the islands, would justify this Government, should events hereafter arise to require it, in making a decided remonstrance against the adoption of an opposite policy by any other power.

President Taylor, in his message of December 4, 1849, said:

The position of the Sandwich Islands with reference to the territory of the United States on the Pacific, the success of our persevering and benevolent citizens who have repaired to that remote quarter in Christianizing the natives and inducing them to adopt a system of government and laws suited to their capacity and wants, and the use made by our numerous whale-ships of the harbors of the islands as places of resort for obtaining refreshment and repairs, all combine to render their destiny peculiarly interesting to us.

It is our duty to encourage the authorities of these islands in their efforts to improve and elevate the moral and political condition of the inhabitants; and we should make reasonable allowances for the difficulties inseparable from this task. We desire that the islands may maintain their independence, and that other nations should concur with us in this sentiment.

We could in no event be indifferent to their passing under the dominion of any other power.

other power.

The principal commercial states have in this a common interest, and it is to be hoped that no one of them will attempt to interpose obstacles to the entire independence of the islands.

President Johnson, in his message of December 9, 1868, said:

It is known and felt by the Hawaiian Government and people that their government and institutions are feeble and precarious; that the United States, being so near a neighbor, would be unwilling to see the islands pass under foreign

I now ask the Secretary to read the portion which I have marked from a dispatch of Mr. Clay, when Secretary of State, to Mr. Brown, envoy extraordinary of the United States to France, dated Washington, October 25, 1825.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. Clay to Mr. Brown.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, October 25, 1825.

Department of State, Washington, October 25, 1825.

Sir: During the last summer a large French fleet visited the American seas and the coast of the United States. Its object naturally gave rise to much speculation. Neither here nor through you at Paris was the Government of the United States made acquainted with the views of that of France in sending out so considerable an armament. The President conceives it due to the friendly relations which happily subsist between the two nations, and to the frankness by which he wishes all their intercourse to be characterized, that the purpose of any similar movement hereafter, made in a season of peace, should be communicated to this Government.

You will therefore inform the French Government of his expectation that such a communication will in future be accordingly made. The reasonableness of it in a time of peace, of which France shall enjoy the blessings, must be quite apparent. The United States having at the present period constantly to maintain in the Gulf of Mexico and on the coasts of Cuba and Porto Rico a naval force on a service beneficial to all commercial nations, it would appear to be quite reasonable that if the commanders of any American squadron charged with the duty of suppressing piracy should meet with those of a French squadron, the respective objects of both should be known to each.

Another consideration to which you will advert, in a friendly manner, is the present condition of the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico. The views of the Exaceutive of the United States in regard to them have been already disclosed to France by you on the occasion of inviting its co-operation to bring about peace between Spain and her former colonies, in a spirit of great frankness. It was stated to the French Government that the United States could not see with indifference those islands passing from Spain to any other European power, and that for ourselves no change was desired in their present political and commercial condition nor in the possession which Spain has of t

Mr. DOLPH. It will thus be seen that at that early day, in 1825, Mr. Clay, speaking for our Government as Secretary of State, announced that this Government would not permit any European power to secure the centrol of the islands of Cuba or Porto Rico. So the Monroe doctrine is not confined to the continent of America.

Secretary Blaine, in a dispatch of November 19, 1881, to the American minister, said:

But if negotiations such as you describe are really in progress-

Negotiations to induce the Hawaiian Government to withdraw from the reciprocity treaty with us—you will ask for an interview with the secretary for foreign affairs and make the following representation of the views of the United States:

The Government of the United States has with unvarying consistency manifested respect for the Hawaiian Kingdom and an earnest desire for the welfare of its people.

The Government of the United States has always avowed, and now repeats, that under no circumstances will it permit the transfer of the territory or sovereignty of these islands to any of the great European powers. It is needless to restate the reasons upon which that determination rests. It is too obvious for argument that the possession of these islands by a great maritime power would not only be a dangerous diminution of the just and necessary influence of the United States in the waters of the Pacific, but in case of international difficulty it would be a positive threat to interests too large and important to be lightly risked.

** **

And again in a dispatch of December 1, 1882, he said:

The United States was one of the first among the great nations of the world to take active interest in upbuilding Hawatian independence and the creation of political life for its people. It has consistently endeavored, and with success, to enlarge the material prosperity of Hawati. On such an independent basis it proposes to be equally unremitting in its efforts hereafter to maintain and develop the advantages which accrued to Hawati, and draw closer the ties which imperatively unite her to the great body of the American commonwealth. In this line of action the United States does its simple duty both to Hawati and tiself, and it can not permit such obvious neglect of national interest as would be involved by silent acquiescence in any movement looking to a lessening of those amenities and the substitution of alien and hostile interests. It firmly believes the position of the Hawaiian Islands, as a key to the dominion of the American Pacific, demands neutrality, to which end it will earnestly co-operate with the native government, and if through any cause the maintenance of such position, neutrality, should be found by Hawaii impracticable, this Government would then unhesitatingly meet the altered situation by seeking avowedly an American solution of the grave issues presented.

I also submit and will have printed as part of my remarks an extract from the report of Mr. Secretary Fish, accompanying President Grant's message to the Senate July 14, 1870, which is quite as emphatic on this subject.

Mr. GRAY.

Mr. GRAY. On what page is that? Mr. DOLPH. It is found on pages 307 and 308 of correspondence in relation to the proposed interoceanic canal. It is a reprint of Senate Executive Document 112, Forty-sixth Congress.

relation to the proposed interoceanic canal. It is a reprint of Senate Executive Document 112, Forty-sixth Congress.

It was at the period of the congress of Aix-la-Chapelle and of Laybach, when the "Holy Alliance" was combined to arrest all political changes in Europe in the sense of liberty, when they were intervening in Southern Europe for the re-establishment of absolutism, and when they were meditating interference to check the progress of free government in America, that Mr. Monroe, in his annual message of December, 1823, declared that the United States would consider any attempt to extend the European system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. "With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power," he said, "we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence, and maintained it, and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling, in any other manner, their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly feeling toward the United States."

This declaration resolved the solution of the immediate question of the independence of the Spanish-American colonies, and is supposed to have exercised some influence upon the course of the British cabinet in regard to the absolutist schemes in Europe as well as in America.

It has also exercised a permanent influence on this continent. It was at once invoked in consequence of the supposed peril of Cuba on the side of Europe; it was applied to a similar danger threatening Yucatan; it was embodied in the treaty of the United States and Great Britain as to Central America; it produced the successful opposition of the United States to the attempt of Great Britain to exercise dominion in Nicaragua under the cover of the Mosquito Indians; and it operated in like manner to prevent the establishment o self-control in the determination of their number condition and other powers."

This policy is not a policy of aggression; but it opposes the creation of European dominion on American soil, or its transfer to other European powers, and it looks hopefully to the time when, by the voluntary departure of European Governments from this continent and the adjacent islands, American that the adjacent islands, American.

wholly American.

It does not contemplate forcible intervention in any legitimate contest; but it protests against permitting such a contest to result in the increase of European power or influence; and it ever impels this Government, as in the late contest between the South American Republics and Spain, to interpose its good offices to secure an honorable peace.

I also submit to be incorporated in my remarks an extract from a dispatch of Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State, dated July 12, 1887, on this subject of the Hawaiian Islands:

Subject of the Hawaiian Islands:

Whilst we abstain from interference with the domestic affairs of Hawaii, in accordance with the polley and practice of this Government, yet obstruction to the channels of legitimate commerce under existing treaty must not be allowed, and American citizens in Hawaii must be protected in their persons and property by the representatives of their country's law and power, and no internal discord must be suffered to impair them. Your own aid and counsel, as well as the assistance of the officers of our Government vessels, if found nocessary, will therefore be promptly afforded to promote the reign of law and respect for orderly government in Hawaii.

As is well known, no intent is cherished or policy entertained by the United States which is otherwise than friendly to the autonomical control and independence of Hawaii, and no other member of the family of nations has so great and immediate an interest in the welfare and prosperity of Hawaii on such a basis as this Republic.

Mr. President, I have already occupied more time than I intended, for which I beg the pardon of the Senate. The extracts which I have read I think will show that what I have claimed in regard to the application of the Monroe doctrine to those islands of either ocean which are so near our shores as to require, in order to preserve the peace and safety of this nation, an autonomous and independent government, is justified by the highest authority.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.
Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether he knows of any reason existing, either in the difference between treaties or from some other cause, why the same American doctrine or the same American policy should not be extended in regard to the Samoan Islands as has been in regard to the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. DOLPH. I stated during my remarks that the reasons for the extension of the Monroe doctrine to the Samoan Islands are the same in principle and character as those which exist for extending that doctrine to the Sandwich Islands. There can be no distinction made between them. The only question that can arise is whether our commercial and other interests in the Samoan Islands are great enough to require us to assert the same doctrine in regard to those islands that we have maintained in regard to the Sandwich Islands.

The Samoan Islands bear the same relation to Lower California and the coast of Central America and the Isthmian canal-if one should ever be constructed-and to American rights there, that the Sandwich Islands do to the North Pacific coast. They are about 2,000 miles distant from the Sandwich Islands. The Sandwich Islands are about 2,000 miles distant from San Francisco, and they lie a little west and south of the Sandwich Islands. They are a greater distance from the coast of the continent by reason of the fact that our southern coast does not extend so far west as the northern portion.

Mr. EUSTIS. What I want to get at particularly is that there is no difference in regard to treaty rights.

Mr. DOLPH. No. We were the first power that entered into a treaty with the Samoan Islands, and that treaty is still existing. co-operated with the German Government, and some of the acts of our consuls which were unauthorized were advised by the German consul there. Up to the time when it became apparent that Germany had determined to secure control of these islands, and not being able to hoist with impunity her flag and take possession by conquest, she attempted by means of a treaty—the treaty of November 10, 1884—to secure control; and subsequently, the treaty having been repudiated, renewed the attempt by means of the fiction of a native government, induced the vice-king to rebel, and supported him in his rebellion, and afterwards declared him king of the islands—I say that up to that time our rights were regarded, and even unauthorized acts of our consul appeared to be taken with the assent of the German Government.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, as preface to what I have to say I will read two of the amendments proposed to the bill by the Committee on Appropriations:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States, existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands, $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President, this appropriation to be immediately available.

For the survey, improvement, and occupation of the bay and harbor of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, Samoa, and for the construction of the necessary wharves and buildings for such occupation, and for a coaling station therein, under the direction of the President, $100,000, this appropriation to be immediately available.

I suppose we shall hardly have discussion as to the last of these two clauses, as it would seem, from all the facts which have been developed, that it was not only the interest, but the duty of the United States Government to avail itself of the privileges secured by the treaty with the Government of the Samoan Islands to establish a coaling station, etc., at the place designated.

I call attention to the first paragraph of this amendment, which seems to have met both the approval of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the approval of the Committee on Appropriations, for the purpose of pointing out the feebleness, if I may use that word, of the provision proposed to enable the President of the United States to secure respect for American interests in the Samoan Islands.

Preliminarily to this I propose to read some extracts from documents, not extensively, but to a sufficient extent to see exactly as nearly as we can what the attitude of the Government of the United States is towards these islands and that people, and what reason there is, if any, why the Government of the United States should interpose for the execution of its obligations and for the protection of its rights there. I will first read two or three articles of the treaty of 1878 between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands. The second article of that treaty provides:

ART. II. Naval vessels of the United States shall have the privilege of entering and using the port of Pago Pago and establishing therein and on the shores thereof a station for coal and other naval supplies for their naval and commercial marine, and the Samoan Government will hereafter neither exercise nor authorize any jurisdiction within said port adverse to such rights of the United States or restrictive thereof. The same vessels shall also have the privilege of entering other ports of the Samoan Islands. The citizens of the United States shall likewise have free liberty to enter the same ports with their ships and cargoes of whatsoever kind and to sell the same to any of the inhabitants of those islands, whether natives or foreigners, or to barter them for the products of the islands. All such traffic in whatever articles of trade or barter shall be free, except that the trade in fire-arms and munitions of war in the islands shall be subject to regulations by that government.

The fifth article of the treaty-which perhaps had better be read-

ART. V. If, unhapply, any differences should have arisen, or shall hereafter arise, between the Samoan Government and any other government in amity with the United States, the Government of the latter will employ its good offices for the purpose of adjusting those differences upon a satisfactory and solid foun-

The sixth article of the treaty provides:

ART. VI. The Government of Samoa agrees to allow to the Government and citizens of the United States free and equal participation in any privileges that may have been or may hereafter be granted to the government, citizens, or subjects of any other nation.

I wish to read now an extract from the annual message of President Hayes of 1880, sent to Congress shortly after the making of the treaty referred to, in which he says:

In Samoa, the government of King Malistoa, under the support and recognition of the consular representatives of the United States, Great Britain, and Germany, seems to have given peace and tranquillity to the islands. While it does not appear desirable to adopt as a whole the scheme of tripartite local government which has been proposed, the common interests of the three great treaty powers require harmony in their relations to the native frame of government, and this may be best secured by a simple diplomatic agreement between them. It would be wel lif the consular jurisdiction of our representative at Apia were increased in extent and importance so as to guard American interests in the surrounding and outlying islands of Oceanica.

And by an act of Congress that consular jurisdiction was increased. I will also read an extract from a message of President Hayes in 1880. He says:

The United States, the same as Germany and Great Britain, does not desire The United States, the same as Germany and Great Britain, does not desire the triumph of any particular party, but the restoration of peace and order; and this Government further desires that peace and order be restored by the establishment of a firm, stable, independent native government that will command the respect and support of natives and foreigners. There is nothing in any of the instructions of the Department to our consul at Apia to warrant any one party on the islands more than another to believe that this Government was favorable to their cause; and the Department would regret to have such an impression newail pression prevail.

I read this to show that the purpose of our Government was not to usurp power or to make conquests there, but to preserve the autonomy and rights of that people, while securing and preserving the rights of American citizens and the Government of the United States. I will read an extract from a communication by Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, now a member of the Senate, to Mr. von Thielmann, of June 15, 1877:

A naval station having in 1872 been established in the harbor of the Bay of Pango Pango, under an agreement with the great chief of the bay, and the attention of the Government drawn by highly respectable commercial persons to the importance of the growing trade and commerce of the United States with the islands in the South Pacific Ocean, and to the opportunities of increasing our commercial relations in that quarter of the globe, it was determined, as the Samoan or Navigator Islands lay in the track of such trade, and were reputed to abound in good harbors and to be very fertile and their inhabitants friendly towards this Government, to send a special agent thither, for the purpose of making a thorough examination and report in regard to all the points on which it was desirable that this Government should be informed.

In pursuance to that suggestion the treaty from which I have read was Passing to a much later date, at this point I desire to read an extract from the letter of Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State, to Mr. Pendleton, our minister at Berlin, of September 7, 1885:

In reply I have the honor to inform you that we have no treaty relations with the Gilbert and Marshall Islands, or any knowledge of the intention of Germany with respect thereto, except the reports which reach us, with more or less authenticity, that Great Britain and Germany have agreed upon lines of division in the Pacific Ocean by which determinate areas will be open to the exclusive settlement and control of the respective Governments. The case is different in Samoa, with which country we have established treaty relations. The German Government has repeatedly disclaimed any intention to interfere with these treaty relations in any way.

I will not go through an examination of the correspondence with relation to this Samoan affair. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has gone very fully through that, with a very lucid explanation of what has occurred there, and that has been supplemented by the able statements of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. It is sufficient for the purpose which I have in view to state that if we can rely upon the truthfulness of our consular agents and naval officers, Germany, while professing not to intend to disregard her treaty relations and stipulations and understandings with the United States, is assuming the absolute control of the government of Samoa.

I need not call attention again to the documents that have been heretofore referred to, which show that what is denominated the rebellion of Tamasese was brought about by the management and in-trigues of the German officers. I need not refer again to the docu-ments before us to show that but for German interference Malietoa, the true king there, would have put down that rebellion and have re stored order upon those islands. I need not refer to the documents to show that the German officers went into the camps of Tamasese and encouraged him in his revolt, and that they forbade Malietoa to make war upon him. I need not refer to the documents to show that they have substantially set up a German government there in the face of all that has occurred between that country and Great Britain, and that country and Germany, and that country and the United States. I do not pause here to call attention to other facts which illustrate the policy and purposes of Germany; but in view of those which I have stated it is clear that the neutrality of the island has been violated by Germany unquestionably; that it is alleged the rights of American citizens have been interfered with, the American flag insulted, and the office of our consul there in performing the duties of his position in behalf of this Government was also interfered with.

I do not choose to delay to look to these documents only to call attention to what appears in the published documents on this subjecct and to call attention to the message of the President of the United States transmitted to Congress on the 15th day of this month, from which I will read one or two extracts. The President says:

Acting within the restraints which our Constitution and laws have placed upon executive power, I have insisted that the autonomy and independence of Samoa should be scrupulously preserved according to the treaties made with Samoa by the powers named and their agreement and understanding with each other. I have protested against every act apparently tending in an opposite direction, and during the existence of internal disturbance one or more vessels of war have been kept in Samoan waters to protect American citizens and prop-important commerce between Australia and the United States, have found expression in the correspondence and documents which have thus been fully communicated to the Congress, and the subject in its present stage is submitted to the wider discretion conferred by the Constitution upon the legislative branch of the Government.

It seems the President understands that he has exhausted the authority with which he is clothed in extending the good offices of this Government for the purpose of preserving the autonomy of the Samoans, securing of treaty stipulations as to them and preserving the rights of American citizens; and he feels that he must now ask Congress what further steps shall be taken under the power which the Constitution confers upon Congress for the protection of these rights.

In response to this we have the proposition to appropriate $500,000, and to make that sum immediately available, to enable the President to execute the obligations and for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Samoan Islands. What authority is here indicated, or what power is here given that the President has not already, and has not already endeavored to exercise? What obligations are referred to? What can the President understand by this language? surely can not mean that we will give the semblance of vigor to the action of the Government without advising the President what our purpose is, only to advise the world that we have given him $500,000, with no power to use it beyond what he already has.

This amendment says:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States

Are those obligations to the people of Samoa to protect their autonomy and preserve their right of self-government? If they are, is it not necessary that we should say so by this act to the President? Are those obligations to protect the rights of American citizens and their property and their persons? If so, is it not appropriate we should say so by this act to the President so that he may know what we mean by the appropriation of this money?

In the telegram from Mr. Bayard to Mr. Hager of January 11, 1889, Send by steamer leaving to-morrow following to William Blacklock, consul, Samoa, and advise me by telegraph if duly sent.

This is the telegram to our consul, Mr. Blacklock:

Your telegram sent by Hawley from New Zealand received. Proper measures have been adopted for protection of American interests in Samoa and to preserve Samoan independence. Admiral Kimberly, with frigate Trenton, starts at once. You will consult freely with him.

It is apparent that one of the things which the executive department of the Government thinks should be protected is the independence of Samoa; but the amendment making this appropriation makes no reference to the protection of the independence of Samoa, as contemplated by the treaties between that country and the United States, that country try and Germany, and that country and Great Britain. In a dispatch by Mr. Bayard to Count Arco dated the 12th of this month among other things he says:

The instructions given to officials of this Government at Samoa have never deviated from those made public, and which were well known to Germany and Great Britain, and in effect were scrupulously to maintain neutrality in Samoan affairs and confine their action to good offices in the maintenance of peace and order in those regions and securing protection for American citizens and their interests under treaty stipulations and the comity of civilized nations.

Further on Mr. Bayard says:

I received also with expressed satisfaction your assurance of the intentions of your government to maintain and carefully respect the treaty rights of this Government under all circumstances, and this, as I stated to you, necessarily included respect for the existence of Samoan autonomy and independence, which is the basis of the three treaties made with the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, the first-named being earliest in date.

If the Secretary of State is right in stating this, and I think no one can doubt it, why is it that we shall not authorize by this appropriation the President to execute the policy thus indicated of securing respect for the existence of Samoan autonomy and independence, which the Secretary of State says was the basis of the three treaties made between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain with that country?

The only remark I have to make upon this is that while the German minister manifests a purpose to carry out the understanding between the United States and Great Britain and Samoa the German consul and the German commanders of their ships of war are paying no respect whatever to such an understanding, but are steadily taking steps to secure the absolute control of Samoa by Germany, having fomented a rebellion against the real king and declared war against him because he sought to vindicate his authority as the sovereign of that country; and Germany has made war on the natives. No one can read some of the pitiable appeals made by the king of that country without feeling that however much we may be influenced by matters of interest and of policy to acquire territory and possessions, some of the feelings of common honesty and of Christian civilization ought to have warmed the hearts to which such appeals were made.

In the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney, to Admiral Kimberly, of January 11, among other things, this is stated:

Further on the President says:

The United States Government is willing to co-operate in restoring order in Samoa on the basis of the full preservation of American treaty rights and Samoan autonomy, as recognized and agreed to by Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, and has so informed the German Government.

Further on Secretary Whitney says to Admiral Kimberly, the officer to whom this communication is addressed:

Protest against the subjugation and displacement of native government of Samoa by Germany as in violation of positive agreement and understanding between treaty powers, but inform the representatives of the German and British Governments of your readiness to co-operate in causing all treaty rights to be respected and in restoring peace and order on the basis of a recognition of Samoan rights to independence.

So, preceding the preparation of these amendments, we have the position of the Government of the United States clearly and distinctly stated by the President, by the Secretary of State, and by the Secretary of the Navy, in their official communications. It seems to me that the appropriation of money and the action of Congress ought to respond to this condition of things, and not simply to appropriate the money and leave the power and authority of the Government exactly where they are now, which the President feels is insufficient to enable him to deal with the particular circumstances of this case.

him to deal with the particular circumstances of this case.

In looking at this subject we can not fail to see that the consular officers of the United States, the naval officers of the United States, with whom the naval officers of Germany refused to correspond, with reference to the condition of those people, and the American citizens who are there must feel humiliated and humbled by the condition in which they are placed. I take it that no American critizen can take up this correspondence and go through it without a feeling of humiliation, in view of what is presented as the clear rights of the American people and Government, to see them brutally overridden and trodden down by subalterns of Germany while their minister professes friendship and a desire to preserve proper relations with the Government of the United States on this subject. It is strong language to use, Mr. President, but I take it that no one can examine these papers and not feel that the language I have used is justified.

Reference is made here to the fact that Great Britain and Germany had parceled out the islands of the South Pacific between themselves. Well, as between themselves they may make any arrangement they choose to make and we can not complain, but they can make no such arrangement that will bind the United States or any other power with reference to those islands. The Secretary of State distinctly informs us in his letter to Mr. Pendleton that, whatever may have been determined upon between them as to the other islands and groups of islands in the Southern Pacific, that arrangement did not apply to the Samoan Islands, with whom we have our proper treaty relations and with whom the United States was the first great civilized power to make a treaty. In looking at this question it is very appropriate that those who look

In looking at this question it is very appropriate that those who look to the welfare of this country, present and future, should not only endeavor to secure respect for the flag of the United States, respect for the Government of the United States, respect for the citizens of the United States, but we should also look to what our future interests and policy may be upon the subject. Great efforts are now being made to pierce the Isthmus of Central America with ship-canals—three or four hundred millions of dollars expended on one and active preparations being made to construct another—a thing which the civilized governments of Europe and America have been seeking to do for the last two or three hundred years. That the skill and the resources of modern civilization will accomplish that great purpose in the near future I have no doubt, and when accomplished it will have a more important effect upon the commerce of the world than did the construction of the Suez Canal. It would turn the transportation between Western Europe and Asia by our doors through the canals of the Isthmus. It would bring the people of the islands of the Pacific into closer relations with both the people of the United States and the governments of Europe.

Our relations to them commercially and geographically make it to our interest that the control of the islands of the Pacific should not be absolutely absorbed by the powers of Europe to the exclusion of the interests of the American Government. Hence no American citizen can but feel pride in the repeated declarations made by our Government that we can not permit the Hawaiian Islands to pass into the possession of any of the great powers of Europe. While we do not claim to take possession of them ourselves, we can not permit them to come into the possession of the governments of Europe. The very reason that applies to those, inasmuch as the Samoan Islands lie upon the track of commerce to New South Wales, the islands of the Pacific, and to India, passing through these proposed canals, and from the Pacific coast to Australia, makes it equally important to us that the valuable harbors and coaling stations which may be established in Samoa shall not pass under the control of any European power independently of our rights and interests there.

Mr. President, the purpose which I had was not a general discussion of this question, but it was to call attention to the fact that the provision put in this bill is too feeble to answer the purposes. It is too feeble to vindicate the honor of the American Government and the rights of the American people and the interest of the Samoan Islands. I was sorry to hear the distinguished Senator from Ohio yesterday, in stating what he would propose to do, limit his statement to the fact that this Government would extend its good offices to the people of Samoa—good offices to a people already conquered and subjugated by Germany. What are the good offices for? Our Government has already been extending its good offices through its executive department and endeavoring to protect the autonomy, the independence, the rights of the Samoan people against the aggressions of Germany, and has failed.

We propose now to appropriate $500,000 to enable the Government to extend its good offices to the Samoan Islands. If we mean anything let us signify it by our action. I am not much of a diplomat; that is, I am not much for saying things that are not meant and for meaning things that are not said. That, I believe, is generally considered a part of diplomacy. It seems to me that we should determine whether we have rights in Samoa, whether our citizens have rights in Samoa, and whether those rights have been violated, both the rights of our own citizens and of the citizens of Samoa; and if we believe they have been violated we should assert those rights as it becomes a great and powerful nation to assert them. We should not seem to apologize for the fact that we have assumed relations to Samoa.

When the Senator from Ohio said yesterday that he hardly fully agreed with the response made by the Secretary of State to the communication of Prince Bismarck, I most heartily agree with him. If we had in Congress Bismarck's will, Bismarck's firmness, this trouble would be very quickly settled, and that without war; but if we hesitate, if we vacillate, if we show we have rights and have not the manhood to vindicate them, we are certain to lose what rights we have, and any interest we may have in Samoa, and with it we must see our own consular representatives and commanders of our ships humiliated, the American Government dishonored, and her people humiliated by a sacrifice of what we announce to be our rights.

I do not want to see this country engaged in war with Germany or with any other government. I trust it will never be my misfortune to witness again the calamities of war; but, sir, there is something worse than the calamities of war, and that is the sacrifice of the honor of a great nation. The sacrifice of the rights of its citizens, the humiliation of its officers in the face of an arrogant power, is worse than war; and I would not submit to it. I would give the President power to insist on our rights under the treaty stipulations and correspondence between these governments, and the power to assert our rights in such a way that there could be no mistake about what his meaning and his powers are.

When we do this we may expect to maintain our rights. If we do this we may secure the restoration of the status quo of Samoa, as suggested by the Senator from Oregon. We may secure the autonomy and the independence of Samoa; we may secure the rights of American citizens; and in securing them I would be careful to do nothing that would interfere with the rights of the German Government, or the English Government, or any other, or of their citizens. I simply mean that I would insist upon the rights of the Government of the United States and of citizens of the United States being protected according to the treaty stipulations and the understandings between these governments, and I trust that we shall have the consent of the Senate to amendment of this provision for this purpose. If I were to suggest an amendment briefly, I would say:

For the execution of the obligations and the protection of the interests of the United States existing under the treaty between the United States and the Government of the Samoan Islands.

There I would insert:

And for the protection of the rights of American citizens residing in said islands, and to preserve their neutrality and independence, $500,000, etc.

When we do that we have done something. We have said something to arm the President with the means of carrying out our purpose. If we do not put some such declaration in the bill, we leave the President when we have passed the act exactly where he is now, in which position he regards himself as powerless to vindicate the rights of American citizens or to discharge the duties of the American Government to the people and Government of Samoa.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I do not like executive sessions, but for the accomplishment of a great purpose, I move that the doors of the Senate be now closed and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and ten minutes in executive session the doors were reopened.

VENEZUELAN CLAIMS CONVENTION.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered. That the order of the 22d instant to print the message of the President of the United States in regard to the exchange of ratifications of the claims convention of December 5, 1885, between the United States and Venezuela, and to the suspension by Venezuela of the monthly quotas of indebtedness under the convention of April 25, 1866, with accompanying papers, be rescinded.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 31, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 30, 1889.

NAVY ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

George Brinton Wilson, a resident of Maine, to be assistant surgeon in the Navy.

Charles Francis Stokes, a resident of New York, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 30, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand the regular order.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation, in addition to the permanent appropriation, for the expense of the customs service for the fiscal year 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RENT OF WASHINGTON CITY POST-OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General in relation to the claim of the owners of the premises occupied by the Washington city post-office, on account of the occupancy by the Government since July 1, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BLACK BOB BAND OF SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of lands allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6105) donating two 6-pound brass cannon to the Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments to this bill are brief, and I ask unanimous consent to concur in them.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order has been demanded. Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think my friend who demanded the regular order will not object to the request, as it will take but a very few min-

Mr. WEAVER. If it takes no time I will not object. The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Illi-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My request is to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments had better be read.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in. Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 12443) granting to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the White Earth Indian reservation in the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COAST-SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. RICHARDSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, with the usual necessary progress sketches and illustrations showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1888, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for distribution by said Superintendent.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT LA CROSSE, WIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3734) to authorize the construction of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis.; which was referred to the Committee on Com-

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I would ask to have that retained on the Speaker's table for the present.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 683 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to report back the bill H. R. 1860, to move non-concurrence in the Senate amendment, and agree to the con-

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] asks leave to report the bill back, to non-concur in the Senate amendment, and to agree to the conference requested. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered, and the Chair will announce during the day the conferees on the part of the House.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 10614) organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes. The SPEAKER announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 65, noes 12.

Mr. FINLEY. No quorum.
Mr. SPRINGER. If the point of no quorum is insisted upon, which will simply secure the delay which the opponents of the bill desire, I shall be compelled to demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmativeyeas 134, nays 53, not voting 134; as follows:

Mr. BIGGS. I am paired with Mr. Morrow. If he did not vote, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Hall when my name was called, but my colleague can vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the special order. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. There was an amendment pending, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to add by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Payson] the following amendment to section 7:

"It is expressly provided that the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war to make homes on the public lands under the existing homestead laws shall not in any degree be impaired by the passage of this bill, and the right of all such honorably discharged Union soldiers or sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all land which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Who offers that amendment and where does it come

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] offered it when the committee was last in session, to come in after section 7.

Mr. ROGERS. Have we passed over the bill to that point? The CHAIRMAN. We have. The committee in considering the bill had reached section 7, and this amendment was pending.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope that the amendment will be read again. Mr. SPRINGER. I was going to call attention to the fact that under the special order there is to be a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment in the House

Mr. PAYSON. That does not preclude an opportunity to vote for it in committee.

it in committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; but in view of the fact that it is to go to the House it is in order that it should be adopted now pro forma, and that the test vote be taken by a yea-and-nay vote in the House, but not to interfere with the question being debated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. SPRINGER], that his proposition to agree to this amendment pro forma, with the understanding that we are to have a yea-and-nay vote upon it in the House will be satisfactory, provided that upon the consideration of his amendment in the House a very brief time may be given to explain its

Mr. SPRINGER. You can have that time now, in the committee.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I know; but why take up the time in the committee if the vote here is to be merely pro forma? We do not care to occupy more than thirty minutes, and that will be the only debate we shall ask for in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was going to suggest that we pass this amendment over now informally and consider those amendments that will not provoke any discussion, and then, when we have gone through the bill and disposed of those, we can return to the amendments that will provoke discussion and divide the time so that all the propositions that will excite discussion may have an equal opportunity.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to ask a question for informa-

The Chair will state the proposition. gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] asks unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over informally, to be returned to hereafter when the committee shall have acted upon such amendments as will not provoke discussion. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to get the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Territories for a moment. If the Committee of the Whole will unanimously agree that this amendment shall come up at least thirty minutes before the previous question is ordered, and that we can be heard upon the amendment, we will consent to his proposition, at least so far as I am concerned.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Territories that those who are in favor of the amendment want thirty minutes, and of course it would be well to agree upon more time than that, because they ought to be answered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that at 3 o'clock we begin the discussion upon this amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to that.
Mr. PERKINS. The time to be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the amendment.

and the opponents of the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question.

Mr. HOOKER. Before the Chair puts the question I want to make one suggestion. There are other amendments that will be proposed in Committee of the Whole, and we want time to discuss them. I have amendments myself which I want to offer. Particularly I want to offer an amendment striking out the thirteenth section of the bill, and I want time to discuss it, either in the committee or in the House, and I can not sit by silent and hear an agreement made with reference to the division of time upon other propositions which do not include what I consider to be the very gravamen of the bill before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to request the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] to state his proposition, so that it could be submitted to the committee.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Territories for a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. If I can hear the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I can hear the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WARNER. If I can have the attention of the committee—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will suspend until order is restored. The Chair will entertain no proposition until to give every gentleman an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a suggestion. The friends of this bill have prepared certain amendments which I apprehend will provoke no discussion, and it might save time if they should be submitted and adopted formally, and that, I apprehend, would leave abundance of time to accommodate my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] in the discussion of these other amendments.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope that will be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the amendments to be proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], with the consent of the Committee on Territories, will occupy but a few minutes, and will remove certain objections which have been made to the bill.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I must object to anything but proceeding in the regular order with this bill. We may spend all day in trying to make this arrangement.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will let us have as much time as possible to debate propositions about which there is a difference of opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has demanded the regular order.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, we are about to consider House bill 10614. On a former occasion when a motion was made on suspension day the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] offered a substitute for this bill. I desire to inquire now whether it is his purpose to bring forward that substitute to-day, or whether it is the purpose of the advo-cates of this bill to go on with the consideration of this bill without taking up the substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. The friends of the bill desire to ask the committee to adopt certain amendments which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] will offer, and when those amendments are adopted

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That does not answer my question.
Mr. WARNER. The only bill we can take up is the bill named in the order, which is the bill No. 10614, not the substitute.
Mr. BAKER, of New York. The question is whether my friend proposes to offer his bill as a substitute.

Mr. WARNER. I will say to the gentleman, no. I propose if I can get the opportunity to offer the amendments which were made to this substitute as amendments to the pending bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to the seventh section of the bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it now be in order to submit the amendment which I have just indicated my purpose to offer, and to have it regarded as a pending amendment to be considered in the Committee of the Whole? I hope there will be ho objection to this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the thirteenth section of the bill; and I wish to offer it now, that it may be considered as pending before the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment to strike out the thirteenth section of the bill, and that it be now considered as pending.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope there will be no objection to that mild prop-

Mr. SPRINGER. The friends of this bill desire to make amendments to that section before the motion is made to strike it out.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not think the section is susceptible of amendment; but there will be nothing to prevent your offering amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to object for the present to the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; then you will have objection through-

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to have it understood that I have no objection to the amendment being considered right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] has called for the regular order. The regular order is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lainois [Mr. Payson], which the Clerk

Mr. SPRINGER. One moment. [Cries of "Regular order!"] withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Several members renewed the objection.

Mr. HOOKER. Do I understand that my amendment is considered as pending?

Mr. PAYSON and others called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] demands the regular order, which is the amendment offered by him to the seventh section of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON obtained the floor.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to ask a question for informa-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYSON. I raise the question of order whether I am not entitled to the floor and whether I can be taken from the floor by a "parliamentary inquiry." Mr. BAKER, of New York. I submit that I am entitled to have my question answered. It is whether it will be in order in this connection to offer an additional substitute to come in at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No substitute is now in order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.
The amendment of Mr. PAYSON was again read.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was last under consideration before the Committee of the Whole I then said everything that I desired to say in its support. I should not consume any time now but for the fact that several gentlemen sitting about me here have stated this morning that it is represented to them by friends of the bill in its present position that the right of the honorably discharged Union soldier to make entry upon the public lands is fully protected in this bill. Gentlemen have stated that to me within the last ten or fifteen minutes. I venture the assertion that no gentleman can stand here in the presence of the committee and make that assertion. Either it is known to be untrue or gentlemen have proceeded under a misunderstanding. To correct any such impression I desire to state briefly but accurately what the law is with reference to this state of the case and what this bill proposes.

First, under the homestead law as it stands to-day an honorably discharged Union soldier has the right to make homestead entry on the public land, and at the end of the term of five years, less the term he shall have been in the service, or the entire term of his enlistment if he is discharged by reason of wounds received in the service—at the end of such limited period he receives title to land upon which he has made his home without cost to himself, except the fees of the local land office, provided he must live at least one year on the public land. That is the law as it stands to-day—without cost to him, except the fees to be paid at the local land office where he may have his home.

This bill provides he shall pay $1.25 per acre, as anybody else shall pay, and to that provision I am opposed. I insist, sir, as I have always insisted, that the homestead provision ought to be extended to the entire body of the public lands. I insist as a matter of national policy, as a matter of general national legislation, there ought not to be an acre of agricultural land upon which a landless citizen of the United States should be prohibited from making a homestead under existing law. But that provision has been voted down in this committee, and for the still greater reason of the duty the Government owes to the Union soldier, the obligation which rests on this Govern-ment not to impair the rights he now has, the public land ought to be preserved, and can not be preserved except by the adoption of some such amendment as that I have proposed to this bill.

The argument made against it, Mr. Chairman, in the prior days of this Congress when this was considered has been the argument of economy. It has been insisted by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Springer] that this land is going to cost the Government something, no one pretends to say how much, but it is assumed not exceeding $1.25 per acre. The title of the Indians to this land outside of the Public Land Strip embraced in this bill is of a shadowy character. one attempts to venture the assertion as to how much or how little it will take to extinguish it, but it is insisted against the claim of the Union soldier to make homestead entry on this land it may cost the Treasury a few cents more or less per acre, and therefore the Union soldier, like everybody else, should be compelled to pay for that land.

If I have made myself understood in reference to this, it is all I desire. I do not care to indulge in any flight of rhetoric as to the duty the Government owes to the Union soldier. Every representative of the people understands that as well as I do, and how any one can stand here and say he is prepared to give his vote against the amendment to this bill, which provides only the rights of the Union soldier as now under existing law shall not be impaired, passes my comprehension.

I would be glad to hear from some of the Union soldiers on both sides of the House, or from those not in the Union Army, as to how they feel in regard to this matter. Here the hammer fell.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Grand Army of the Republic I rise to oppose the amendment. Gentlemen who support this amendment must excuse me when I say their action in the past and in the present seems to show they are more anxious to defeat the passage of this bill than to grant a special benefit to a few Grand Army soldiers.

These gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, have had many good opportunities during the past eight or ten years to establish precedents for this amendment in this House, but have never even attempted to do so.

There is no precedent for this legislation, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Payson] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] are the men who are to blame, if there be any blame, on account of there being no precedent for the present amendment. These gentlemen have exercised a general, I might say a particular, supervision over all the legislation concerning the sale and disposal of the public and Indian lands for many years in this House. Many bills have passed this House during that time for the disposal sale and cattle and the public and Indian lands for many years in this House. this House during that time for the disposal, sale, and settlement of land obtained from the Indian, and they have never offered or attempted to pass such a measure for the benefit of the soldier.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry there—or rather an interruption, because I suppose he desires to be accurate?

curate?

Certainly I wish to be correct.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to remark that I speak for myself as well as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when I say that under our direction there passed in this House in three different Congresses a provision which restricted the entry of public land to the homestead feature of the law, and that alone. Three different Congresses under our direction that bill has passed this body. Mr. PERKINS. That applies only to public land. Mr. PAYSON. It applies to all public lands.

Mr. SYMES. Yes, but not to Indian lands—not to lands which are not public lands and not owned by the United States.

Why has this long-pent-up love for the Grand Army soldiers so sud-denly come to the surface, like the outbursting of a fountain from the earth?

Mr. PAYSON. Because this is the first time the attack has been made.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, we will look at a part of the record these gentlemen have made on this question and see why it is.

Many bills have passed this House during the last ten years where such an amendment would have been more appropriate than here and no such measure was offered.

PAYSON'S SOLDIER AMENDMENT.

In 1879 an agreement was made with the confederate bands of Ute Indians for the sale of their very large reservation in Colorado and their removal to their present reservation in Utah.

June 15, 1880, this agreement was ratified by Congress with some modifications. Section 3, page 20, 21 Statutes, provides that the land shall only be disposed of by cash entry, under the homestead law.

The money was to be paid into the Treasury as a trust fund for the Indians, after certain deductions were made for money advanced to them and expenses and payment for outrages committed, agreed upon in the treaty.

This large and valuable tract of country in Western Colorado has been settled up remarkably fast since that time. Why did not the distinguished gentlemen from Illinois and Indiana, who have always had such an overwhelming love for the Grand Army soldier, avail themselves of this opportunity to allow the Grand Army soldiers, many of whom are now settlers upon that land, to acquire their title under the homestead laws without the payment of $1.25 per acre, as provided in the gentleman's amendment to the Oklahoma bill?

If any gentleman had offered such an amendment to that bill they would no doubt have answered it by saying that the money did not belong to the United States, the land did not belong to the United States, and the United States could not give the land or the proceeds of it to the soldiers because it belonged to the Indians. So it is with the Cherokee Strip and other Indian lands in Oklahoma and the proceeds of the sales of it. The Government negotiates with the Indians as provided in this bill to allow the land to be settled upon and included in the territory. It proposes to require the settlers to pay the Indians $1.25 per acre for their equitable rights in that land. The United States has no right to give this land to avoid for our to give the second of the control o no right to give this land to ex-soldiers or to give the proceeds of it to ex-soldiers, because it belongs to the Cherokees and other Indians, How can these dear friends of the Indians who have been filibustering against this bill, as they say, to protect their rights consent to illegally taking these lands from the Indians, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, and give it to the ex-soldiers

The gentlemen from Indiana and Illinois were both members of this House at the time, and were no doubt then, as they have been ever since, noted for their special supervision of all acts affecting the public lands, and, as now shown, also specially noted for their love for the Grand Army soldiers. Why did they not offer the same amendment to the bill opening the Ute reservation to settlement?

The act of July 28, 1882, 23 Statutes, page 178, supplementary to the foregoing, declares that it shall be public domain only to be disposed of by cash entry for $1.25 per acre.

Twenty-third Statutes, 177, provides for the sale of the lands of the Kickapoos, or, more correctly speaking, it provides for opening them to settlement and requires the settlers to pay the Indians for the lands they settle upon, as does the act opening the Ute reservation.

The gentlemen from Indiana and Illinois were members of the House when this act passed, and the records do not show that any amendment was offered giving Grand Army soldiers the right to acquire title without paying $1.25 to the Indians or requiring the United States to pay $1.25 to the Indians for the soldiers, which would be the only practicable way of enforcing the gentleman's amendment.

April 30, 1888, an act passed this Congress to divide the Sioux reservation in Dakota and to open to settlement a portion thereof. It provides that settlers upon lands shall acquire title only under the homestead laws, except such homesteads can not be commuted under section 2301, Revised Statutes, and each settler must pay 50 cents per acre to the United States to be used as a trust fund for the Indians

Section 21 of the act provides that the rights of the soldiers, under sections 2304 and 2305, Revised Statutes, shall not be abridged, except as to the payment of 50 cents per acre. This is the same as the Oklahoma bill. The soldiers have to pay $1.25 per acre because the land belongs to the Indians and not to the United States.

Why did not the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Indiana move an amendment to this bill exempting soldiers from the pay ment of 50 cents per acre, and provide either that the Indians should not receive pay for the land settled upon by soldiers or that the United States should pay the money for the soldiers?

March 8, 1888, a bill passed this House for the relief of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, and the act passed at this session of Congress opening to settlement certain pine and agricultural lands in the Chipewa Indian reservation.

Section 6 of this act provides that settlers may locate the land in accordance with the homestead laws, except that they shall pay $1.25 per acre in five equal annual installments, and shall receive their patents at the end of five years.

at the end of five years.

All the money received for this land is to be paid into the Treasury as a trust fund for the Chippewa Indians.

Quite a debate arose on the conference report regarding the details of this bill, as to the sale of pine lands, etc. The gentleman from Illinois vigorously opposed the adoption of the conference report because he thought the pine lands were being sold too cheap.

Why did he not think of the rights of the poor homestead soldiers at that time? Why did he not propose an amendment at least which that time? Why did he not propose an amendment at least which would make that act as liberal as the Oklahoma bill by giving the soldiers a rebate of the time they served in the Army, even if he did not attempt to provide that they should not pay $1.25 an acre for the land, as he is attempting to do by this amendment?

The amendment in its present form could not be executed and would be void for want of any provision to give it force. It simply attempts to apply the soldier homestead law to lands which the United States Government does not propose to buy, pay for, or acquire the title to. The bill only provides for negotiating with the Indians for the settlement on this land and for including it within Okla oma, and it provides that the settlers shall pay the Indians $1.25 per acre for it. Unless other provisions are added to the bill authorizing agreements to be made with the Indians which should exclude the payment of $1.25 per acre for such lands as might be settled upon by ex-soldiers, or a provision made that the United States should pay into the Indian trust fund $1.25 per acre for all lands settled upon by soldiers, this amendment will have no force.

Section 25 of the act of April 30, 1888, for opening portions of the Sioux reservation to settlement expressly requires the United States to pay the Indians 50 cents per acre for the land included in the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections reserved from settlement for school purposes

That is, the United States provides for reserving the school sections from settlement, and to do that it pays into the trust fund for the Indians the amount per acre which the treaty provides the Indians shall receive for their land.

This amendment will be void and answer only demagogue purposes unless it provides the United States shall pay $1.25 per acre into the Indian trust fund, or the Indians should agree to receive nothing for that portion of the land settled upon by ex-soldiers.

I will not say I speak for the Grand Army soldiers, although I served with them over four years, and most of the first year of the war I carried a musket in the ranks. But of late years the ex-soldiers seem to have found so much more ardent and loving friends in the persons of gentlemen who did not appreciate their sacrifices until long after the war that I forbear to presume to speak as a comrade in their behalf.

I will say that these comrades are not beggars. All they ask is justice to all their comrades and special privileges to none. They do not ask that a few hundred at most of their comrades shall receive a special grant of 200 acres of land in Oklahoma and a half million of their comrades receive nothing. They do not ask the Government to give a few hundred of the most healthy and strong of their comrades, who may be able to emigrate to Oklahoma, a gratuity of $200 to $500, while nothing is given to thousands of suffering invalids and the dependent-pension bill remains unpassed.

Mr. Chairman, such unjust and discriminating legislation may be proposed for demagogue purposes, and may catch the ear of the unthinking, but it will not deceive our Grand Army comrades. Mr. Chairman, while I do not assume to speak for the Grand Army soldiers, I do speak as one of their friends. They are the only class of men on the earfh that I feel under special and lasting obligations to. It was through their partial and persistent recommendations from the field that I was promoted to higher command than I expected.

At that time I was a captain, and the gentleman from Missouri, the Grand Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, was also a captain and an acting assistant adjutant-general.

The Forty-fourth Wisconsin Infantry was organized; I was commissioned its colonel and the gentleman from Missouri was commissioned its major. Impartial justice would have made him the colonel and I the major, for he was a better soldier than I.

He has been as good and true a friend of the Grand Army soldiers since the war as lives. And opposing this amendment, offered not in the real interest of the soldiers, but to defeat this bill, can not and will not deceive any one.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell. Mr. SYMES asked and obtained leave to occupy further time, and resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. GROSVENOR withholds his remarks for revision. [See Ap-

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I should like very much to hear the gentleman for ten minutes because I always enjoy listening to him, but it seems to me that good faith on the part of the friends of this bill requires that those of us who have amendments to offer should have an opportunity to present them. I have two amendments which provoke no antagonism on the part of the committee having the bill in charge, and I desire an opportunity to introduce those amendments and have them voted upon. If we can come to an understanding that those of us who have amendments to offer to this bill shall have an opportunity, I have no objection; otherwise I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the request of the

Mr. LANHAM. I do not object at present, but I want to see whether we can not arrive at an understanding.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not object, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Kansas proceeding for ten minutes, but, inasmuch as there is so little time remaining, I insist that hereafter five minutes shall be the be recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, can we not come to an understanding now as to the length of the debate upon this amendment?

Mr. PAYSON. I think it had better run and let gentlemen have an opportunity to say what they have to say.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before the House has ingeniousness, but is absolutely lacking in ingenuousness. The amendment is one which proposes to take from the Government Treasury about $20,000,000, apparently in the interest of the ex-soldiers of the country. I say "apparently," and I speak advisedly. You need only to look at those who propose this amendment and those who are ardently supporting it to ascertain what is the motive that actuated its presensupporting it to ascertain what is the motive that actuated its presentation and that now actuates its support. The proposition has been introduced by a member of this House who has from the beginning opposed this bill. It has been supported upon this floor by those who from the beginning of this Oklahoma legislation have opposed every step toward making it a law. Is it not somewhat remarkable that the advocates of this proposition are the men who have placed every obstacle in the way of the passage of this Oklahoma bill and of the opening up of this Territory

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption for a moment?

Mr. PAYSON. Well, I insist that the gentleman ought to be accurate

Mr. PETERS. I am accurate.

Mr. PAYSON. On the contrary, I have never interposed a single obstacle in the way of consideration of this measure, and that it is being considered to day is owing to the fact that I consented.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is understood that this does not come out of my time; I have not yielded.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman ought to be accurate.

Mr. PETERS. I will appeal to the RECORD to show that during the first session of this Congress, whenever the motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill the point of no quorum" was made by the very parties who are now advocating this amendment.

Does the gentleman mean me?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. PETERS. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman ought to be accurate.

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman will have to take the RECORD and my language together to understand what I mean.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman is utterly mistaken.
Mr. PETERS. I simply state that the RECORD will disclose the fact that the men who have opposed the Oklahoma bill and who have been always ready to call a quorum, and thereby to prevent legislation upon this subject, are the very men who are now ardently supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. And now I appeal to all who were ex-soldiers and I ask them what benefit would it be to the soldiers of the country to place this amendment upon this bill if by placing it there you defeat the opening up of that Territory to the soldiers as well as to all the other citizens of this country?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Why should it defeat it?
Mr. PETERS. Why defeat it? You know, and every man knows who is conversant with the legislation in this House and in the Senate, and with the veto messages that have come from the Executive Mansion, that with this provision on the Oklahoma bill it would

Mr. PETERS. That is why I say that no man who favors this amendment is a friend to the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Do you want to bribe the President to sign the bill? Mr. PETERS. I do not want to say a word about the motives of the President or about what he would do, but I say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY] that he knows that this bill with this amendment upon it would never become a law.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Does the gentleman from Kansas know that it would become a law without this amendment?

Mr. PETERS. He knows that it is more likely to become a law without this provision.

Several MEMBERS. Tell us why.

Mr. PETERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say-

Mr. CONGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir, for a question.
Mr. CONGER. Would the gentleman oppose any pension legislation because he feared that it would be vetoed at the other end of the avenue?

Mr. PETERS. I would not oppose any legislation because I believed it would be vetoed; but I would oppose an amendment to a pension bill which I believed would accomplish something for the soldier, if that amendment had a tendency to defeat the passage of the pension bill itself. I am one of those ardent friends of the soldier in this House who believe in taking for the soldier what I can get; and that is what I want to do here.

Several members rose.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. I want to say in this connection that it would be an injustice to the Union soldier to put this amendment upon the bill. There is nothing besoldier to put this amendment upon the bill. There is nothing between my district and this Territory but a geographical, imaginary line. On one side of that line are the soldiers who fought for four years during the war, who went into that country and took up claims, paying $1.25 an acre for them, who have improved them and made them "bloom and blossom as the rose," and who stand there ready and willing to perform their duty as citizens to this Government. This bill proposes to place side by side with them a soldier who shall not be required to pay one dollar for the very same kind of land that this brother soldier has obtained in the manner I have just stated. The soldiers of this country do not ask of this Congress to be placed on any plane which is not absolutely equal. The soldiers of this country do not ask that they shall have any advantage over their comrades who stood shoulder to shoulder with them.

I oppose this amendment, first, because it is absolutely unjust to these soldiers to have located upon the Indian lands adjoining this Territory; that it discriminates against them; that it places them in such a posi-tion that they and their comrades can not meet upon an equality around the Grand Army camp-fire.

I say further, speaking for a constituency of soldiers, that I have had but one letter and not a single resolution from either a soldier or a Grand Army post in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from The soldiers of my district understand that this amendment has been proposed, not in the interest of the soldier, but for the purpose of keeping all soldiers out of the Indian Territory, for the purpose of defeating this bill, for the purpose of placing it in such position that it can not become a law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from Kansas be kind enough to explain how the adoption of this amendment will keep the soldiers out of the Oklahoma Territory?

Mr. PETERS. I have explained that already by saying that it will tend to defeat the bill.

Several MEMBERS. Why? Mr. PETERS. It will at least jeopardize the passage of the bill. And that is the secret power behind all this opposition to the Oklahoma bill; that is the secret power which forces forward the supporters of the amendment. They believe it will defeat the bill; and when the soldiers of the United States understand, as they do in my district, that this proposition is brought forward by the enemies of the bill, that it is brought forward for the purpose of defeating the opening of that Terlitory, there is not a soldier throughout the length and breadth of this land who will stand up and support the measure proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JACKSON. Are there are any members here who are the friends of this bill who will not vote for it if the amendment is put

Mr. PETERS. I do not know any one opponent now who will vote mever stand the shadow of a chance of becoming a law during this Congress. There is no use in denying or in ignoring that fact.

A Member. Why?

Mr. PETERS. It do not know any one opponent now who will vote against the stress of the soldiers has been vetoed at the other end of the avenue, and every man who has followed the course of legislation in this Congress.

Mr. PETERS. It do not know any one opponent now who will vote against the bill if the amendment is put in, but I know there are men on this floor who will vote against the bill if the amendment is put in, but I know there are men on this floor who will vote against the bill if the amendment is put in, but I know there are men on this floor who will vote against the bill if the amendment is put in, but I know there are men on this floor who will vote against the bill if the amendment be inserted.

Mr. JACKSON. I again ask whether any member who is a friend of this bill will vote against it if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. PETERS. I do not know any one opponent now who will vote against the bill if this amendment be inserted.

Mr. JACKSON. I again ask whether any member who is a friend of this bill will vote against it if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. PETERS. I do not know any one opponent now who will vote against the bill if this amendment be inserted.

Mr. JACKSON. I again ask whether any member who is a friend of this bill will vote against it if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. PETERS. I do not know any one opponent now who will vote against the bill if this amendment be inserted.

Mr. JACKSON. I again ask whether any member who is a friend of this bill will vote against it if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. PETERS. I do not know any one opponent now who will vote against the bill if this amendment be inserted.

floor who will vote against the bill if this provision be inserted; that it jeopardizes the passage of the bill and jeopardizes the opening of this Territory. It is strange to me that members can not see that they are acting against the interest of the soldier and working in the interest of the cattle syndicates in advocating such a proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any man on the floor of this House is authorized to speak for the Grand Army or to speak as a Grand Army man. I have seen no resolution of that organization appointing any man as a representative on this floor for that purpose. I am a member of that organization myself; and I will offset my declaration against that of the gentleman from Colorado, and they may weigh against each other. Whatever I have received as an expression from the soldiers of my district on this subject is in favor of the Payson amendment and against the Oklahoma bill if that amendment be not adopted.

Now, I would inquire of gentlemen who are in favor of the Oklahoma bill as it stands before this House what there is in that measure as it is proposed here which makes the proceeds of it so sacred that they can not be given to the soldiers of this nation as other lands are proposed to be given by the general land laws? Certainly there is not such good conscience and equity in the manner in which we propose to acquire this land that it should be taken out of the public domain or be accorded any higher standing than any other portion of the public

Gentlemen say that this money is to be held in trust for the purpose of paying the Indians for the land. Well, I wonder whether it is not true that all the public lands we have ever bought have been bought from somebody and a price of some kind paid. Then, why should this land, because we are buying it from the Indians, be of any more value or be of any higher or more sacred character than any other piece of land we have ever acquired?

Now, I feel this land is not coming to us under such auspices that we can look our consciences fair in the face and say we are not violatwe can look our consciences fair in the face and say we are not violating treaty obligations in getting it, and the only way I can excuse my conscience by voting for the bill, if I can do so at all, is by putting in some palliative like this to enable me to do so. And then I say the reason I can vote for it is because I believe the time is coming when the people from whom we propose to take this land must go out of existence as tribes, their tribal relations must be taken away from them, and it is a step in the development of that people, which may or may not result in their advantage; but whatever results may come of this for them when we come to dispose of what we get under that arrangement, it seems to me we ought to follow the rule of conscience and equity heretofore applied in the disposal of the public land.

And gentlemen, it seems to me, are standing in the light of their

And gentlemen, it seems to me, are standing in the light of their own consciences when they call in question the motives of the men who support this amendment. I feel there is no public land which should be exempt from the burden, if it is a burden, which is placed on them in favor of the Union soldiers.

on them in favor of the Union soldiers.

But they say that this is but a small patch. Look at it. It is proposed by this bill to erect a Territorial government over something like 23,000,000 acres of land in the end. They are about to begin with the strip called "No Man's Land," where there are three or three and a half millions of acres. But the bill proposes, as soon as the assent of the tribes can be obtained, to erect a Territorial government over the whole land sought to be acquired in this way. In other words, there are about 20,000,000 acres to be disposed of. You have about 900,000 of these old soldiers left living, and by the time, we get the con-000 of these old soldiers left living, and by the time we get the consent of the Indian tribes we may expect that number will be greatly reduced. Then here is an opportunity to help to bear the burdens put upon these men by their services in the cause of this Union, an opportunity to give them a chance to catch up in the race of life, and when it is presented I say give it to them, and it is wrong to withhold it from them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed I will ask by unanimous consent of the committee to be allowed to proceed for ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I trust it may be safe for me to oppose this amendment. I was a soldier in the late war, but happened to belong to that unfortunate class which can not enter into that sanctum sanctorum, the Loyal Legion.

If the House will indulge me I will try to show that the amendment now offered is in direct contravention of what has been the policy and practice of the House for the last dozen or more years. I will show further that the adoption of the amendment will be a matter of gross further that the adoption of the amendment will be a matter of gross injustice to the great body of the rank and file who served in the late war. Prior to 1862—the date of the passage of the homestead law—we had acquired in various ways, and at nominal figures, a large body of public lands, a part by conquest from Mexico, a part by the so-called Louisiana purchase from France, and a part by the transfer from Virginia of that great territory northwest of the Ohio River. The remnants of this conquest, this purchase, and this cession constituted the great unsold body of our public land—acquired, if the area be taken into account, at a mere nominal price. And as to this great ocean of land we adopted the homestead policy.

Now, what was that homestead policy? In what respect did the rights of the Union soldier as to that ocean of land differ from the rights of the rest of our people? Out of this body of lands we gave a homestead of 160 acres free to every one, citizen and soldier alike, without money and without price, except the mere land-office fees. only preference, the only advantage the soldier got over other entry-men, over the citizens, was this, that the period of his army service should be credited up against the five years' residence and settlement required before final proof and entry could be made; provided, however, that he should in all cases reside at least a year on the land be-fore making final proof and entry under the law. To illustrate, a fore making final proof and entry under the law. To illustrate, a civilian would have to reside five years on the land before final proof and entry, while a soldier who had served three years in the war could make final proof and entry after a two years' residence upon the land. That was the only distinction. To speak mathematically, all get the land without money, but on a probationary period of residence and settlement. With the civilian this period is five years; with the soldier, five years less his term of service in the war.

We have within recent years been opening up for settlement many Indian reservations and thus adding largely to our public lands. We have adopted the policy as to these reservations of extinguishing the Indian title at a fair price to be paid the Indians by the settlers who obtained the lands. Provision has been made in every instance in recent years that I can remember but one—that of the big reservation in Northern Montana—that the settlers who obtained these lands, either under the homestead or pre-emption law, be they civilians or soldiers, must in every instance pay for the land the price that is paid the Indians, so as to save the United States Government from any expense and outlay in the premises; for it is conceived that it is no longer necessary nor good policy for the Government to buy land for the mere purpose of giving it away,

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman does not mean that. Mr. NELSON. I do mean that; I mean exactly that.

Mr. PAYSON. Is that the case as regards the Blackfoot reservation? Mr. NELSON. No; that is the one exception I have referred to. There has been that one exception to the rule. This House during the last Congress passed a bill opening the Great Sioux reservation in Dakota, involving a matter of over 11,000,000 acres of land, and in that case everybody, both civilians and soldiers, stood upon the same foot-They were all to pay their 50 cents an acre, but the soldier was to get the benefit or credit for his term of service in the Army, just as now under the general law. And so, with the single exception of the Blackfoot reservation in Montana, every Indian reservation which has been opened for settlement since I have been a member of this House has been opened under that same invariable rule and practice, that whatever we paid to the Indians we have required the settlers to pay for the land; but we always in all cases gave to the soldiers the same right that they have under the existing homestead law to obtain credit for their term of service in the Army.

Mr. WEAVER. And this bill does that?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, that is duly provided for in this bill. The distinction that I have called your attention to between the policy adopted as to our ancient and general mass of public lands and these recent Indian acquisitions is duly recognized and preserved in this bill. I ask you to turn to section 4 of the bill and examine it. A part of the proposed Oklahoma is what is known as the Public Land Strip—some of that vast ocean of land of which I have been telling you. As to that Public Land Strip, soldiers and civilians alike get it free, as under the general law. This is the language of section 4:

SEC. 4. That the section of country lying between the States of Kansas, Colorado, and Texas, known as the Public Land Strip, is hereby declared to bese part of the public domain of the United States, and shall be open to settlement under the operation of the homestead laws only; but the provisions of section numbered 2301 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any entry of any of said lands except as otherwise provided in this act: Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land in each township shall be reserved for school purposes.

school purpos

But with reference to the remainder of Oklahoma-that which we propose to buy from the Indians at $1.25 per acre-for that soldiers and civilians alike must pay just what we pay the Indians for it; but the soldier is to have credit for his Army service to the same extent and exactly as under the general homestead law.

The proposition, mathematically, may be put something like this: The Public Land Strip, like the great body of our public lands, is free to all, civilian and soldier alike, but the soldier is credited on the residence term, his term of service in the Army, but as to the lands we propose to buy from the Indians at $1.25 per acre, we require the settlers, whether soldiers or civilians, to pay $1.25 per acre, just the amount that we pay the Indians, but we say to the soldier that he shall obtain credit as in other cases for his term of service in the Army, thus relatively giving him just the same preference in one case as the

It is manifest, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that when you consider the propositions relatively by comparing the status of the soldier and civilian as to each class of land the soldier gets precisely the same advantage and preference over the civilian in the one case as the other under this bill.

Mr. McKINLEY. Under this bill? Mr. NELSON. Under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have no pride of opinion in regard to this matter. I aim only to state the law and facts truly as I understand them. Oklahoma includes two classes of lands. One part is what is known as the Public Land Strip, which is now and has long been owned by the Government. As to that we propose to leave the general homestead law operative for soldiers and civilians alike; but there is another portion of the land which we propose to buy from the Indians at $1.25 an As to this price we propose that the soldiers and citizens alike shall save the Government harmless and free from outlay, but the soldier shall receive due credit for his army service.

That is the plan that has been followed and carried out . this House, as I have said, with regard to every Indian reservation opened in recent years, except the Blackfoot reservation, and as to that we got the land for 25 cents an acre and paid for it only simply the amount we had been in the habit of paying these Indians in the way of subsistence; so that really we got the land for a mere song. And the most of that is of the arid lands of which we have heard so much lately, which need irrigation, a character of land to which you can not apply the same principle as in this case.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Peters] was asked the question why in his judgment this amendment would tend to jeopardize the bill or defeat its passage. The gentleman did not answer the question, but I will undertake to do so. The reason is, that the day is gone by and past, I think, in this country for buying lands at $1.25 an acre and giving them away. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois involves this: That we are to buy six or seven millions of acres of land at $1.25 an acre and give it away to certain Union soldiers who may be able to avail themselves of our generosity. Now, much has been said about the injury to the soldier which will result from the non-adoption of the amendment. But there is another important fact to be remembered, Mr. Chairman. But few of the soldiers can get there before all this land will be taken up. Somebody has got to pay the Indians for these lands. All those who do not go, who can not get them, must these lands. All those who do not go, who can not get them, must help to pay for them.

Again, what does this proposition involve? A soldier who can go there and take up a quarter-section of land, if this amendment is adopted, without paying anything for it, gets a bounty of $200. A quarter-section of this land at the price specified to be paid the Indians will be $200. By this amendment you are simply saying to a few soldiers, "We will give to such of you as may be able to rush down into the Territory of Oklahoma as soon as this bill passes a quarter-section of land for which we pay $200 a bounty to you of $200 while the of land for which we pay $200, a bounty to you of $200, while the thousands of other Union soldiers, all those who can not get onto these lands, and they are a host, get no such bounty at all."

Common justice and fairness require that if you give a $200 land bounty to a few soldiers you ought to give it to all.

I am willing to do as much for the soldier as anybody else; I was only a poor private soldier myself; but when it comes to giving him $200 worth of land, be fair and just and give it to every soldier, and not only to the few who can rush down here into Oklahoma.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill because the cattle-men are opposed to it. I ask to have read an extract from the last report of the Secretary of the Interior. It illustrates to what use this land is now put. It needs no explanation, and I think it is the milk in the cocoanut of some of the opposition to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

This tract, embracing as now existing 6,024,239 acres of land, has been heretofore leased by the Cherokee Nation to a corporation known as the "Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association," at an annual rental of $100,000 a year. This lease expired with the end of October, 1888, and steps have been taken by the Cherokee Nation looking to its renewal or the making of some new lease with other parties. In view of the pendency in Congress of a bill to embrace this region with Oklahoma and other tracts in a new Territory, and in view of certain at least undeniable rights of the United States in reference to it, and of previous action by the Department, it was deemed advisable that notice should be served upon the principal chief of the nation and all parties who might negotiate any such agreement that if any such should be made it would be without the authority or consent of this Government thereto, and will be subject to cancellation, and any use or occupation by any lessee to termination, by the Department whenever such action should be regarded proper by the President or the Department, and would be subject to any legislation whatever, general or special, which Congress may enact affecting that portion of the Cherokee country or the occupancy of any Indian lands for any purpose whatever, whether for grazing, pasturage, or otherwise. Such notice was accordingly given by a letter to the principal chief, and by instructions to the Indian agent, to advise, in proper manner, all parties who might attempt to negotiate any such lease.

It should be, however, clearly understood, and so the principal chief was subsequently informed, that by this notice no determination is made or assumed in reference to what may be the rights of the Government as distinguished from the rights of the Cherokee Nation in this strip; the only purpose of the notice being to proteet fully the rights of the United States, whatever they may eventually be decided to be.

Mr. NELSON. Now, here are over 6,000,000 acres of land

Mr. NELSON. Now, here are over 6,000,000 acres of land that have been leased to this cattle company for the bagatelle of $100,000, or 13 cents per acre per year. These poor settlers, that you hear so much damned and cursed—called Boomers and what not—wonder why they can not go into Oklahoma and open farms as well as these cattle-men. Why should these lands be sacred to these settlers and not to the cattle kings?

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. NELSON. I have a computation here that I desire to present, and I hope that I may have the time allowed me to do it in.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the time of the gentle-nan will be extended one minute.

Mr. NELSON. The computation I have made shows that these 6,024,239 acres of land would make 37,652 farms of 160 acres each, and, counting five souls to each family, it would afford homes to a popula-tion of 188,260 people. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how many cat-tle there are to-day on this tract of land belonging to this company; but I trust we can get people there instead of cattle. [Laughter and

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman explain what this has to do with the amendment?

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman had listened he would have heard my explanation long ago.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask unanimous consent to limit debate on this amendment to twenty minutes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then after ten minutes I will move that the committee rise to close debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, on a former occasion in this House I offered an amendment to the pending bill something in the nature of the one now pending, yet more liberal to the soldier than this. At that time there was developed in the discussion of the amendment a spirit on the part of certain members to the effect that whoever nent a spirit on the part of certain members to the effect that whoever supported that amendment was unfriendly the Oklahoma bill.

Now, I desire to enter my solemn protest against an assumption like that, which, in my judgment, is unwarranted. I may be permitted further to say that I am not as friendly to this measure as I was at the beginning. Here is a Territory sought to be organized with a view to statehood, and people in pursuance of that are invited from all sections of the country to occupy it. Here is a proposition simply to apply on of the country to occupy it. Here is a proposition simply to apply existing homestead laws to the ex-Union soldiers of the country. Under ordinary circumstances there is not a man on this floor, in view of the land policy of this Government, that would say that this amendment is wrong; and yet under the peculiar circumstances surrounding this measure, we find men who ordinarily are warm and enthusiastic friends of the soldier inveighing against this amendment as one not to be tolerated, for the reason that it will put the bill in jeopardy.

I undertake to say, speaking for myself, that if this bill is such an one that it can not bear a virtuous and meritorious amendment, such as has been proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, it ought to be defeated; and it was this that first set me to thinking. I can not for myself see a substantial reason why this amendment should not prevail, or any possible ground for valid objection to it if the measure is what it purports to be on its face. Why, we are told that it would meet with defeat at the other end of the avenue. Is that to be the measure of gentlemen for any legislation in reference to the soldier-what will be approved at the other end of the avenue? If it is, that would be a poor way of meeting the pledges that have been made to the ex-soldiers of the Union. For my part, I think this idea that the Government is a mere trustee is a mere clever dodge.

I observe that the advocates of this bill unwittingly speak of it as a purchase or extinguishment of the Indian title by the Government, that the Government acquires the title from the Indians, and it is entirely competent it seems for the Government to apply the existing homestead law as to Union soldiers within that Territory. The fact that this has not been the policy of the Government with reference to Indian lands heretofore is neither here nor there so far as this measure is concerned; for it is never too late to do good, and it is never too late to perfect legislation that will inure to the benefit of the men who enabled the flag of this Government to fly unspotted in the sky.

Why, the fact that this has not been done before is one of the very reasons why it ought to be done now. The discrimination that gentlemen refer to between this and former legislation and that will inhere and be involved in this measure if it prevails is nothing more nor here and be involved in this measure if it prevails is nothing more nor less in degree than the discrimination that already exists in reference to the pension laws and their execution in this country. And replying to the charge that this amendment is not in good faith, but offered simply to eath the soldier's ear, I desire to say that no man can rightfully say in reference to me that I have been working what they contemptuously call "the soldier dodge." I do not belong to the Grand Army of the Republic, yet I feel that it is but an act of simple justice to the soldiers and to their families that they should be allowed this privilege in this Tarritors. privilege in this Territory.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to ask unanimous consent to offer two amendments, and that they may be considered as pending.

Mr. PAYSON. I object. I have no objection to limiting debate, but I do not want this complicated with any number of amendments.

Mr. LANHAM. I simply ask that they be introduced now, and be considered as pending.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not object to that. Mr. BAKER, of New York. I make the same request as to an amendment which I propose to offer.

Mr. LANHAM. Let mine get in first.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. All right,

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize some gentleman who is opposed to the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly in opposition to the amendment. The zeal manifested by some gentlemen upon the floor of this House in the interest of the ex-soldiers of the Union is somewhat remarkable when considered in connection with the history of this proposed legislation. Those who are opposed to this amendment are not opposed to it because they are inimical to the interests of the ex-Union soldiers, but because they are in favor of the passage of this bill and in favor of legislation that will open this great Territory to settlement to Union soldiers and to the other citizens of the country alike. We are not opposing this amendment, as I have said, because we are unfriendly to the ex-Union soldiers, but because we because we are unimently to the ex-Union soldiers, but because we fear that if this bill should be so amended that by its provisions it will take from the Treasury $16,000,000 to be paid to the Indians for these lands, and then give them away as a gratuity to the ex-soldiers, we thereby defeat the proposed legislation, as in our judgment such a measure would not secure the necessary executive approval nor the indorsement of a majority of this House.

Let us look briefly at this proposition in connection with the history of the legislation of Congress upon like subjects. As suggested by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], we passed in the last Congress what is known as the Sioux bill, a bill providing for the purchase of one-half of that great reservation in Dakota and for the allotment of the remaining lands to the Indians. If the provisions of the bill had been accepted by the Sioux Indians it would have opened to white settlement 11,000,000 acres of land. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Payson] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] sat silent in their seats and did not offer or suggest such an amendment as they advocate to-day. Nor have any of the advocates of this amendment at any time upon the floor of this House advocated a like proposition when we were proposing legislation that would extinguish Indian titles and open Indian lands to settlement. Hence, we wonder at this new-born zeal.

These gentlemen seem to forget the distinction between public lands and Indian lands. When my own State was admitted into the Union almost one-half of it was Indian reservations occupied at the time by Indians and owned by them. Since that time almost all of the Indian titles have been extinguished, but not a foot of those lands has been opened to settlement under the homestead law. The people who have gone upon those lands have been required to pay for them, and the money paid by them has gone into the Treasury of the United States and has been used to satisfy the Indians for the title or rights possessed by them. That has been the history of the legislation of Congress almost from the first act passed touching Indian lands, and we who oppose this amendment stand here to insist that Congress shall be consistent and that this important legislation shall not be strangled by false pretenses. If I had the time I could mention a number of measures pertaining to Indian lands that have been passed since the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Payson] have occupied seats upon this floor, yet never did they offer an amendment such as they are now advocating. Ilive upon a great strip of land, 50 miles wide and 300 miles long, that belonged to the Osage Indians when Kansas was admitted into the Union, The Indian title was extinguished by treaties in 1867 and 1868, and all that great body of land, almost 10,000,000 corces, was settled upon and paid for under receiving of large generations of These gentlemen seem to forget the distinction between public lands and Indian lands. When my own State was admitted into the Union of land, almost 10,000,000 acres, was settled upon and paid for under provisions of law substantially like those that we are now considering in this bill, but not a foot of those lands was given to the ex-soldiers as a gratuity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman speaks of the extinguishment of the Indian title to lands in Kansas. Did the Government buy that title as provided in this bill, or did it administer upon the lands as trustee for the benefit of the Indians who held the legal title to the lands until they were sold to actual settlers?

Mr. PERKINS. The Government conducted negotiations with the Indians, just as is proposed in this bill, and extinguished the Indian title, and under the treaty the lands were opened to white settlement, and the Indians were paid for the land.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did the Government buy the lands?

Mr. PERKINS. It bought them, just as it is proposed by this bill to buy these lands.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is mistaken.
Mr. PERKINS. I am not mistaken. I know the history of these different transactions, and during my brief service in this House I have had the honor to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs more than a dozen bills of this character for the extinguishment of Indian titles, and, with but one exception, they have never provided that any part of the lands should be given to soldiers as a gratuity. This amendment proposes to make a distinction which the general land law does

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] advocates the proposition that the public lands of the country shall be opened to settlement under the homestead law, opened to all alike. The general land laws do not discriminate in favor of soldiers, as the gentleman is now proposing that this bill shall do. Under the general land laws ex-Union soldiers and citizens alike are permitted to acquire homes upon the public lands if they but comply with the provisions of the homestead law, and the only advantage that is given to the ex-Union soldier is the advantage in the period of time he is required to live upon his land before he can acquire a title from the Government of the United States, and under the provisions of this bill the same advantage is carefully guarded and preserved to him. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is accepted, a distinction is made between the ex-Union soldiers and the other citizens of the United States not found in the general land laws, and one that threatens with peril this important bill that more than five hundred thousand people, ex-Union soldiers and citizens alike, have petitioned us to pass.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, there is in my opinion danger that the House may overlook the real motives which underlie this bill and that the scope and purpose of it may not be understood. I want, therefore, to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the underlying motives of this measure.

It is not contended, Mr. Chairman, that we are short of public lands, for the public record shows that we have 250,000,000 acres of surveyed lands to-day, and that of unsurveyed land we have over 550,000,000 acres which are susceptible of survey and open to settlement under the homestead and pre-emption laws. But the purpose of this bill is to organize a Territory in the Indian Territory, where to-day there is not lawfully a single white man, and to import into that Territory a complete outfit of officials-to organize a Territory in disregard, as I have contended, of existing treaty rights and stipulations.

It is proposed under one section of the bill to provide for the appointment of a commission. I have contended and I desire most earnestly to impress upon this House that it is our duty as legislators, dealing with great questions which involve the welfare of millions of people, as well as the rights of fifty, sixty, or seventy thousand of civilized Indians possessing this great Territory of 40,000,000 acres under solemn treaty with the Government of the United States—that it is our duty to deal with these people with due regard for their rights. It is proposed here to create a Territorial government over them in direct violation of the treaty rights and stipulations under which they hold; because we have covenanted as a nation that there shall be thrown around them no form of Territorial or State government without their consent previously had and obtained. And it is a breach of faith for us to legislate as is proposed in the bill now before the House. I have therefore prepared, Mr. Chairman, and propose at the proper time to offer, an amendment to cover this very point. It will provide-

That the Territorial government hereby established shall not extend to or exercise any jurisdiction over any part of said Territory of Oklahoma except what is known as the Public Land Strip until the President shall issue his proclamation as provided in section 6 of this act; and in no event shall any part or portion of the Indian Territory be embraced or included in any State or Territorial organization except in accordance with the terms and conditions of existing treaties.

I ask, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, can there be any objection to a covenant in this act providing that good faith shall be kept with the five civilized tribes? It has been contended that the kept with the five civilized tribes? It has been contended that the proposed amendment now pending is in the interest of justice to the soldiers of the late war. I believe it may be. I think that with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] the bill is less objectionable. But I am bound to say, in justice and honor, that with that amendment the bill even then ought not to receive the favor of this House and ought not to receive Executive approval; and I believe that unless the President has greatly changed his views as expressed in his first annual message to Congress he will never favor a proposition like that contained in the pending bill, for the reason that it ignores, overrides, and breaks down all the obliga-tions under which we rest to these five civilized tribes. More than that, it is directly contrary to the recommendation contained in his first annual message, in which he advised just exactly what has been proposed by a bill now pending, introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman]—the creation of a commission to bring for-Indiana [Mr. Holman]—the creation of a commission to bring forward this whole subject, to discuss it, to treat with these people in regard to their rights.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BAKER, of New York. I thought I had ten minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentlemen is limited to five

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Then I ask that I may have three or four minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER], a member of the Committee on Territories, asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. At the end of the gentleman's additional five min-utes I shall ask that this amendment be agreed to pro forma and that we pass to other parts of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from New York for five minutes? The Chair hears none.

The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. SYMES. I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] speaks advisedly as to the President's policy in regard to this question. Mr. BAKER, of New York. I always speak advisedly as to the policy of the present Administration.

Mr. SYMES. I supposed so.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I yield to my friend from Oregon [Mr.

HERMANN], who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. HERMANN. For the purpose of information, I desire to put to the gentleman this inquiry: In the event that the Indians should fail or refuse to relinquish their title to these lands described in the bill, what will then be the area of the Territory which will come under this Territorial government proper?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. If there shall be no extinguishment of the rights of the Indians to these lands, this bill will apply simply to the Public Land Strip. 130 miles long by 30 miles wide. That is all. the Public Land Strip, 130 miles long by 30 miles wide. That is all. This whole proposition, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, is wrong end

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will pardon me a single ques-on. Is there any pretense of title on the part of the Indians to that portion of this Territory which was bought by the Government from the Chickasaws and Choctaws, and ceded to the Government uncondition-

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I understand and be-lieve, as it is asserted, that they have rights in these lands in the Indian Certainly they have rights, and if, as alleged, they have not such rights that can be established under the substitute which my colleague from Georgia [Mr. BAENES] on the Committee on the Territories has already introduced and will urge on the House.

It is not my desire, Mr. Chairman, to stand in the way of opening these lands to settlement in a proper manner. When they are opened it should be done as becomes the people of this great Republic.

I think my friend from Kansas [Mr. Peters] has impugned the motives of gentlemen who have taken ground upon the floor in opposition to this amendment. I agree that the able-bodied soldiers of the Union Army ask no odds of anybody. The Government has not and never can do equal and exact justice to all the soldiers who served in the war against the rebellion.

Mr. PETERS. Does not this ask them to lean over to discrimi-

Mr. BAKER, of New York. No; but we would be satisfied if the Government could stand up erect in favor of justice to all of them.

[Applause.]

The point urged with great force on Congress at the present time is not a new one. It has been discussed over and over again. It has been before Congress in various forms for more than twelve years. The honorable gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed] was one of the committee which reported adversely to the proposition contained in a similar bill eight or ten years ago.

Twelve years ago. Mr. Chairman, a report was made, a copy of which I hold in my hand, made in the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, which I will ask to have incorporated in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
Mr. BAKER, of New York. That report was made by Mr. Wilshire, at that time a Representative from the State of Arkansas, and is as folat that time a Representative from the State of Arkansas, and is as follows:

The subcommittee to which was referred the bill for establishing a government for the Territory of Oklahoma, having carefully considered the same, present the accompanying substitute therefor, and thereupon report as follows:

What is known as the Indian Territory, which the bill herewith reported proposes to erect into a province, is all that region of country lying between the State of Kansas on the north and that of Texas on the south, and the States of Missouri and Arkansas on the east and the State of Texas and the Territory of New Mexico on the west; in extent about equal to the State of Georgia, and chiefly between 34° and 37° north latitude and 94° 30° and 100° west longitude; a land in part of forest, in larger part of prairie, of vast mineral wealth and great fertility of soil, intersected by five rivers, and capable of becoming a great and prosperous State.

The eastern part of this country, somewhat more than half of the whole, is owned and occupied chiefly by dependent civilized nations, the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws. A small portion of the north-eastern part is owned and occupied by the Quapaws, Senecas, Shawnees, and other fragments of decayed tribes. West of the Choctaws and Chickasaws are settled lands of the uncivilized tribes, the Peneteghka band of the nation known to us as Comanches, the Ta-wai-hash or Wichitas, the Cadohadachos or Caddos, the Toncawes, Ciawis, Kishais, Huecos, Ta-wa-ka-ros; and the western part of the Territory is the hunting-ground of the Comanches and Cai-a-was, The Wa-sa-chis or Osages have also been settled in the Cherokee country. There are also among the other tribes small bands of the Sha-wa-nos, the O-po-nagh-ke or Delawares, and the Shack-a-po, known to us as Kickapoos, and several wild tribes, besides these named, range and hunt through the tree-less regions between the Upper Arkansas and Red River.

The Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws

ier.

The men of these five tribes are agriculturists, having comfortable homes and farms and largely engaged in raising cattle. The Cherokees, Choctaws, and Chickasaws have written constitutions of government. Laws printed in their own and the English language. Legislatures each composed of an upper and lower house, and county, circuit, and supreme courts of justice. The Creeks and Seminoles have departed less from their ancient forms of government, but they are well and wisely governed by law-makers and elective chiefs.

The most striking characteristics of these peoples are truthfulness, strict fidelity to their promises, and singular honesty. They never betray a trust or break a promise. They have never, in even the slightest matter, violated a treaty; it needs no oath to make it sure that their testimony shall be true; and they have not yet learned how to cheat their creditors by fraudulent devices.

and they have not yet learned how to cheat their creditors by fraudulent devices.

By the report of the board of Indian commissioners for 1872, and the tables of comparative statistics therein given, it was shown that in population, number of acres cultivated, products, wealth, valuation, and school statistics, the Indian Territory was equal to any of the organized Territories of the United States, and far ahead of most of them. It had a smaller area than any other, and a larger population than any excepting Utah and New Mexico. It had more acres of land under cultivation than Washington, over one-third more than Utah, and more than wice as many as Colorado or Montana; and the number of bushels of wheat, corn, and other farm products raised in the Indian Territory was more than six times greater than was raised in either Utah, New Mexico, or Colorado.

It is sufficient for the purposes of this report to append the following tabular statement, from the report of the same commissioners, which is much less favorable to the civilized tribes than one for 1875 would be, because they are still slowly recovering from the exhaustion and impoverishment consequent upon four years of war.

These tables, corrected only as to numbers of the tribes and with the addition of the colored population, show, as the board of commissioners stated, that "the partially civilized tribes, numbering about 50,000 (55,000) have, in proportion to population, more schools, and with a larger average attendance, more churches, church members, and ministers, and expend far more of their own money for education than the people of any Territory of the United States, and the number of schools and academies is much smaller now than before the war.

In 1825, President Monroe, in his message to Congress, urged the acquisition from the native tribes of "a sufficient tract of country west of the State of Missouri and the Territory of Arkansas, in order to establish permanent settlements in that quarter of tribes which were proposed to be removed "from the country east of the Mississippi; and the Secretary of War, in his report of that year, recommended that "the strongest and most solemn assurances" should be given "that the country given them should be theirs as a permanent home for themselves and their posterity, without being disturbed by the encroachments of our citizens."

President Jackson, in his message of December, 1829, recommended the removal of the Choctaws and other Indians to the country west of the river Mississippi, and said: "As a means of effecting this end, I suggest for your consideration the propriety of setting apart an ample district, west of the Mississippi, and without the limits of any State or Territory now formed, to be guarantied to the Indian tribes as long as they shall occupy it, each tribe having a distinct control over the portion designed for its use. There they may be secured in governments of their own choice, subject to no other control from the United States than such as may be necessary to preserve peace on the frontier and be-tween the different tribes," States than such as may be necessary to preserve peace on the frontier and beforem the different tribes."

On the 20th of May, 1839, an act of Congress was accordingly passed, providing for an exchange of lands with the Indians residing in any of the States or Territories, and their removal west of the Mississippi. This act provided that "in the making of any such exchange or exchanges, it is hall and may be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribes or nation with which the exchange is made, that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them, their heirs or successors, the country so exchanged with them; and, if they prefer it, the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same: *Provided always*, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same."

Under and by virtue of this act of Congress, treaties with the Cherokees, them west of the Mississippi, and patents in due form were signed by the President and given to each. The Seminoles hold under the Creeks; and the Chickassavs purchased a joint interest with the Chockaws.

The United States solemnly covenanted with these nations that no Territory or State should ever have a right to pass laws for their government; and that no part of the land; granted them should ever be embraced in any Territory or State should ever have a right to pass laws for their government; and that no part of the land; granted them should ever be embraced in any Territory or State; but in the year 1866 they consented, by treaty, to the convening annually of a council of delegates from each nation and tribs and the surface of the catablishment of a court or courts of the United States therein; and that the superintendent of Indian affairs should be the executive of the Territory, with the citile of governor, with only such powers as would properly belong to an executive officer charged with the execution of the laws which the council should be authorized to enact.

Of thi

Ilmits.

But by the treaties the local judiciaries of the nations can not be interfered with; nor can the legislative power that may be created enact any law inconsistent with treaty stipulations, "or legislate upon matters pertaining to the legislative, judicial, or other organizations, laws or customs of the several tribes or nations," except as provided for by the treaties.

It is the part of a wise statesman to respect the prejudices even of intelligent communities, which ought to have none. The idea most cherished by each of these nations is its nationality. It is chiefly their unconquerable aversion to surrender this which stands most in the way of their acceptance of a Territorial government. It is, in effect, not a prejudice, but a just pride of race and blood, more potent with them than any other incentive to action; a pride which they have a just right to cherish, and of which who can truly say that it is not praise-worthy?

a just right to therish, and or worthly?

This just pride, this high and noble sentiment, is respected by the bill which we submit, and its provisions in no degree diminish or affect the nationality of the civilized tribes, and, respecting even their prejudices against the word "Territory," which seems to them to contain a menace, and against incorporation whereunto they deem themselves guarantied by treaties, we propose to call the political organism contemplated by the bill, as the Romans called Gaul and Britain province.

miory," which seems to them to contain a menace, and against incorporation whereunto they deem themselves guarantied by treaties, we propose to call the political organism contemplated by the bill, as the Romans called Gaul and Britain, province.

The United States have, by acts of Congress, undertaken to give to certain raliway corporations large grants of the lands belonging in fee-simple to these nations, contingent upon the extinguishment of their title. They fear that if they are made a Territory, they will be held to have become extinct as nations within the meaning of treaties and patents, and that thereupon these grants will be held to take effect.

It is due to simple honesty and good faith that they should have ample guaranties against apprehended danger. Nor are their apprehensions wholly unfounded when so little is thought of their fee-simple title that the Secretary of the Interior can, with a stroke of the pen, grant to a railroad corporation, whose road runs across their whole country from north to south, a strip of land a hundred feet in width on each side of the road, under simple grants by treaty of the right of way, to inure upon the making of due compensation; for which right of way no compensation has ever been made or even offered.

The treaties and patents convey the lands in fee-simple to the individuals of each nation, their heirs and successors, or descendants. The lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws are forever secured and guarantied "to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaws are forever secured and guarantied "to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaws tribes, their heirs and successors, to be held in common." So that each member of either tribe, then or afterward in being, should have an equal undivided interest in the whole.

The provision that the land should revert to the United States if the Indians should become extinct or abandon the same, is simply the declaration of a right of escheat. The Supreme Court, in Holden es. Joy, declared that it "enterfained strong doubts wh

The United States have, at the best, only a possibility of a reverter; and that possibility is not the subject of a grant. Moreover, it is very doubtful whether a state or nation can, in anticipation of such a contingency, grant a right of escheat that may arise in the future, and it is absolutely certain that the United States can not create the contingency, to their own profit, by extinguishing the nationality of the Indians. In Holden vs. Joy the Supreme Court said that the sale in trust by the Cherokees to the United States did not constitute such an abandonment as was contemplated by the condition in the patent.

And, as to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the treaty of 1866 provides that they may subscribe to the stock of each road running through their country, at a price to be agreed on between them and the company, alternate sections of the unoccupied lands for a space of 6 miles on each side of the road, for which the company should be entitled to patents; and these provisions are totally inconsistent with the improvident conditional grant of lands in which the United States had nothing to grant, contained in the acts of Congress on which the railway companies rely.

As the lands of these nations belong in fee-simple in common to the individuals of each, the mere extinction of their nationality could not work a reverter. There will be necessary for that, the extinction of the very last individuals of each nation respectively. If the supposed right, which is a mere possibility of reverter, lessened the quantity of the fee, and made the estate granted inferior to a fee, it would be idle to talk of the division of the lands in severalty and sale of portions by individuals to those desiring to settle in the country.

Finally, by the treaties of 1886, when the Indians consent to the survey and granted interior to a fee, it would be idle to talk of the division of the lands in severality and sale of portions by individuals to those desiring to settle in the country.

Finally, by the treaties of 1886, when the Indians consent to the survey and partition in severality of their lands, each is to hold in fee-simple absolute, and any right of reverter to the United States will cease as of the date of the treaty; so that it was not in the power of the United States after making the treaty to grant to others the possibility of a reverter.

It is very clear that the contingent grants to the railroad companies were calculated to produce very mischievous effects upon the minds of the Indians, insecure as they had been made to feel themselves in the possession of rights guarantied by treaties, especially since the decision of the Supreme Court that the internal-revenue laws are in force in their country by virtue of a clause in an act of Congress, in direct violation of the treaty of 1885 with the Cherokees.

The committee think that the contingent grant in question was utterly indefensible, without consideration, gravely injurious to the Indians, a perpetual menace, a worthless pretense of a grant in reality, which can only be made of value and substantial by the most shameless ill-faith, and that it ought to be repealed, as also all laws or provisions of law should be which annul or violate provisions of treaties securing rights to the tribes with which they have been made; and they have therefore, by the bills submitted, relinquished all right and possibility of reverter, and repealed such provisions of law contrary to treaties.

By a provision of law for which it is impossible to offer excuse or apology, the

These nations are bodies politic and corporate, with whom we treat, bargain, and contract, to whom we sell, from whom we buy, whom we can owe, and to whom we can make the most stolemn promises and become bound by the most stringent obligations. But if we become their debtors, in what solemn manner soever, we tell them that they shall not come into our own court to ask for justice and pay ment of the debt. This is very unworthy of a just or great nation, and it has subjected us, and justly so, to the humiliast of the court of these nations, these terrible words: "It is not a good nor a wise government which denies to the humblest human creature whom it governs all remedy to enforce his rights; for when it denies the remedy it annuls the right for rather paralyzes it, for no human power can annul a right, if even God can), and so does that which is unjust, dishonorable, and dishonest. " It is not agone to a wise government which denies to the humblest human creature whom it governs all remedy to their subjects. owe us nothing; all the balances on the ledger are against us. Thrust out into the wilderness when it was worthless to us, they have civilized themselves and made themselves fit to be our fellow-citizens. We shall be just to ourselves only by being just to them. We therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying bill as a substitute for House bill No. 1923.

The facts contained in that report should be brought to the knowledge of the members of this House before voting on this proposition. I believe we should approach this subject as honest men. I do not mean to impugn the honesty or integrity of any man who comes here and supports this amendment, but we should be deliberate in dealing with vested rights of these Indians under treaty stipulations. We should not treat the rights of these civilized Indians with less respect than any other rights vested by treaty stipulations.

Let us not forget, Mr. Chairman, that we have 250,000,000 and more acres of surveyed land outside of the Indian Territory, outside of Alaska, outside of other unsurveyed lands which amount to over 500,-000,000 acres.

Here the hammer fell. ]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the amendment be agreed to pro forma.
Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to offer an amendment if amendments are now in order.

Mr. PETERS. We have an amendment to section 7, and I would like to know whether that should not come in before any other.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are now being offered by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, no; let us proceed in the regular order.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to offer an amendment at this

Mr. LANHAM. I ask to offer an amendment as an amendment to come in line 9, section 13, so as to strike out the word "immediately" and insert "within a reasonable time;" also, after the word "county," in line 3, section 16, to insert "nor shall said Greer County be subject to the jurisdiction of the Territory of Oklahoma."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there consent to adoping this amendment?

Mr. REED. I object.
Mr. LANHAM. I ask, then, the amendment be considered as pending.

Mr. REED. I object to it, at any rate. You want another confession of judgment.

Mr. LANHAM. No; it is not a confession of jud

Mr. PETERS. I offer the following amendment.

No; it is not a confession of judgment,

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 7 by striking out the word "and" where it first occurs in line 19, and insert after line 20 the following: "And to break up and plow not less than 40 acres filed upon."

Mr. LANHAM. Unless my amendment is received I must object.
The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is moved to the section under consideration, and is in order.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the section be read as it will be amended if the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. FINDLEY. This is not in accordance with the arrangement made the other day.

Mr. PETERS. The amendment is moved to the pending section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause to be read the section as it will be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the President may, at such time as he may deem it necessary, direct land offices to be opened in the Territory of Oklahoma not to exceed four in number, and may nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the usual officers to conduct the business of said land offices; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall, when directed by the President, cause the various portions of said lands to be properly surveyed and subdivided where the same has not already been done. It is hereby made the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to carefully examine each claim taken under the provisions of this act before issuing a patent to the claimant; the entryman shall be required to make full proofs, and unless it shall appear that the claim was taken in good faith and that there has been full performance of all the terms and requirements under this act he shall refuse a patent and declare all prior proceedings before had in such case to be null and void. All persons settling on lands under the provisions of this act shall be required to select the same in square form as near as may be, and to break up and plow not less than 40 acres filed upon, and to maintain a continuous personal residence of three years on the land, and to improve and cultivate the same for that period in the manner required by the homestead laws before obtaining title thereto, etc.

Mr. PETERS. This amendment requires that 40 acres of the case of the continuous personal residence of the case of the case of the case of the case of the continuous personal residence of the case o

Mr. PETERS. This amendment requires that 40 acres of the 160 acres shall be broken up and cultivated before title can be acquired. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is clearly in order. The amendment of Mr. PETERS was adopted.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I now offer this amendment, to come in at the end of section 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at end of section 7:

"Provided further, That the Territorial government hereby established shall not extend to or exercise any jurisdiction over any part of said Territory of Oklahoma except as to what is known as the Public Land Strip until the President shall issue his proclamation as provided in section 6 of this act. And in no event shall any part or portion of the Indian Territory be embraced or included in any State or Territorial organization except in accordance with the terms and conditions of existing treaties."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I think there can be no objection to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has an amendment to come in at the proper place, practically to the same effect or the same in substance.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Then let this come in. This is a proper place for it. Mr. SPRINGER. It has no reference whatever to this part; and I hope it will be withdrawn for the present.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I did not propose the amendment for the purpose of withdrawing it.

the purpose of withdrawing it.

Mr. WARNER. Permit me to say to the gentleman from New York that this amendment does not properly belong to this section. An amendment was adopted to section 6, I think on the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, by inserting in line 6 of that section the words "as agreed to be," and then by striking out, after the word "ceded," the words "to the United States by the said tribe of Indians by" and adding "according to the provisions of;" so that it will read:

SEC. 6. That whenever the Cherokee tribe of Indians shall signify their assent to the provisions of this section, in legal manner, to the commission provided for in this act, and the President has issued his proclamation fixing the time as herein provided, the unoccupied portion of the lands west of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude, as agreed to be ceded according to the provisions of the treaty concluded July 19, 1856, etc.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I do not think that covers the point of the present amendment. The amendment that I now offer ought to be incorporated here in section 7.

Mr. WARNER. It certainly is improper as an amendment to section and the amendment suggested by the gentleman to section 6 has already been incorporated in the bill as printed.
 Mr. BAKER, of New York. I think the amendment made to sec-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. KERR. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman from

New York it virtually defeats the objects of the bill except with reference to the Public Land Strip.

Mr. PETERS. That is exactly the effect of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. And that is what is intended.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Oh, not at all. I want to perfect the

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Oh, not at all. I want to perfect the bill. It is a very important matter.

Mr. KERR. That virtually kills the bill; and I think it was gone over in the very full discussion had upon the bill last summer in committee with regard to these same lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is pending.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The suggestion that my friend now makes would amount to an argument that the very object of the bill was to override existing treaties. I have simply provided in this amendment that it shall not be construed to override or abrogate any existing treaty, and that it shall not apply to the lands of the five civilized tribes until it may be so applied lawfully.

Mr. WEAVER. The bill does that now.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Then why does my friend say that this

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Then why does my friend say that this would kill the bill if it be adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 7:

"That no provision of this act shall be construed to authorize the extinguishment of the Indian title to any lands in said Indian Territory which by virtue of any existing law would inure to the benefit of any railroad corporation or the title to which would vest in any such corporation on the extinguishment of the Indian title thereto or on the same beings part of the public lands of the United States; but all such lands shall be held by said Indians as tribes or in severalty, or shall be held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the Indians interested therein in pursuance with such agreement with such tribes in said Territory as shall be entered into consistent with this provision and in conformity with the several provisions of this act; but said lands shall not become a part of the public lands of the United States or inure to the benefit of or vest in any such railroad corporation or any assignee or mortgagee thereof. Any act done by any officer or agent of the United States or treaty, contract, or agreement entered into by any such officer or agent with any Indian tribe, in conflict with the foregoing provision, or which shall validate or give effect to any grant of land in said Indian Territory made to any railroad corporation, or shall tend to validate or give effect to any such land, shall be null and void, and this provision shall be construed as controlling any provision of this act that may be in conflict therewith."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the adoption of the amendment.
Mr. SPRINGER. I have examined this amendment carefully and have no objection to its insertion in the bill. I think it ought to be adopted. Mr. McRAE. I have a further amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. McKAE. I have a further amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Let us dispose of this amendment first.

Mr. REED. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what would be the effect of the adoption of his amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect will be, I think, that certain grants of land in the Indian Territory, three in number, which have heretofore been made by Congress to railroad corporations on certain conditions will not vest in those corporations if this bill shall become a law.
Otherwise if this bill becomes a law it seems that the title to these Otherwise, if this bill becomes a law, it seems that the title to these lands may vest in the respective railroad corporations, and it is claimed

Mr. RYAN. You do not mean to concede that title would pass to the railroad company?

Mr. REED. That must be the reason for the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it necessary at this time to express an opinion on that point. I say for the present simply this, that that claim is asserted and this amendment has been prepared and submitted to a number of good lawyers, who have carefully examined it, and have suggested some of its provisions with a view to avoiding such a result. And it is the opinion of those who have examined the subject that the effect of this provision will prevent, if this bill becomes a law, the title of any of this land vesting in either of the three railroad corporations, for under this amendment the lands would not become lands of the United States, and the Government is under no obligation to acquire title to these lands for the benefit of these corporations.

Mr. REED. What effect is it going to have? Does it keep them out of the rights they have there? In whose hands is it going to leave the land?

Mr. HOLMAN. Either in the hands of the tribes as tribes or in severalty by the Indians or in the United States in trust for them; the United States being simply a trustee without an interest in the land, a naked trust.

Mr. REED. How much land does this cover?

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the general provisions of this bill the title might pass to the railroad corporations, but under the amendment it would be otherwise, for the corporations are not entitled to the land in any event, without it having vested in the United States and become "lands of the United States."

Mr. RYAN. I want to say to my friend I do not think it ought to be conceded that this land would, in the absence of such provision, pass to the railroad company.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not making that concession. It is not necessary that I should for the purpose of this argument. But the claim that the title would or might vest in these corporations to the extent of several million acres of the most valuable of these lands justifies the amendment, and indeed demands it.

Mr. REED. I think there ought to be a way out of the difficulty, and I want to call the attention of the House to the matter. I live so far off that I have not much interest in it, but it is a matter that I think may be of considerable importance to the future settlers of Oklahoma. If there is anything that is a curse to the people in a growing country it is complicated and disputed land titles. You want to go no further than Iowa to convince yourselves of the fact whenever you remember the name of Des Moines Valley. If we are going to transfer a large tract of land in this new Territory with bad title, disputed title, doubtful title, we are inflicting upon those inhabitants a wrong compared with which the possession of land by the railway company is nothing, even in the mind of the most prejudiced anti-railroad man. It would be a very great curse to the future inhabitants of that country.

Now, the only excuse or reason for such an amendment must be from Information the gentleman from Indiana has, that the railroad company is either entitled to these lands, and that it will get them under the law as it now exists, or a suspicion to that effect, at least.

Now, if that be true that the railroad company will have a right, upon which I am not expressing an opinion, as I have no information on that point, will not the effect of this amendment be to put on this land settlers in this disputed condition of affairs? Settlers will go there and it will result in wretchedness to hundreds and hundreds of families, and the Territory should be settled in such a manner that it may be utilized for the benefit of all the people.

Now, if the railroad company have rights, of course they ought not to be taken away from them; but upon that point I have very little care and very little interest, but upon settling a large portion of this Territory with disputed title, as a citizen of the United States, looking to the future interests of future citizens of the United States, I do feel an interest, and sincerely hope no such complication will be allowed to be put on the bill by the committee which has investigated this subject, and unless they are entirely sure that it is a good amendment that they oppose it.
Mr. MCRAE. I desire

I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas to allow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to be

The Clerk read as follows:

That all lands and rights granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by an act approved July 27, 1866, for the construction of a branch road from the point at which the line of said road strikes the Canadian River, easterly to a point in the western boundary line of Arkansas, at or near the town of Van Buren, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited for the failure of said company to perform the conditions of said grant.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order against the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that it is not germane to the proposition before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that he can not offer this as as a substitute for an amend-Under the rule an amendment can be offered to an amend-

The Chair wants to hear again the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. That this can not be offered as a substitute.

Mr. NELSON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to suggest one matter to the gentleman from Indiana by way of a question without taking the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say he desired to submit a point of order.

Mr. NELSON. The point of order was submitted awhile ago by the gentleman from Indiana and ruled out.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has no point of order to submit, the Chair will be compelled to recognize the gentleman from Ar-

Mr. McRAE. I am strongly in favor of opening the Indian country to settlement and as far as possible and as soon as possible breaking up the tribal relations of the Indians. If I could have my own way I would pass an enabling act for the whole of the Territory, including the five civilized tribes; make them citizens, and, subject to proper restrictions, give them the right to dispose of their patented lands to actual settlers. I believe this the best way to deal with the Indian question as far as these tribes are concerned; but there appears no chance for any such legislation now, and so I am for this bill as the next best thing. The bill is by no means what I would like to see it, even in the details, but I shall vote for it unless it is loaded down with objectionable amendments, like the one proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. I am opposed to that, and hardly think I can support the bill if it is adopted. If I had time I would like to discuss the bill and particularly this amendment, but within the five minutes allowed me I shall not more than have time to discuss the amendment that I have proposed to the section under considera-

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the railroad companies took any lands in the Indian Territory, the grants referred to, because the Government had nothing there to grant, and besides attempted to make no such grants. The Interior Department has all the time held that the roads took nothing in this Indian country. No company except the Atlantic and Pacific ever claimed any such rights, and it not until ten years after the grant had been made and when none of the conditions were performed on its part. This is the only land-grant railroad where the line of definite location runs through the Oklahoma lands. The main line of this road has been forfeited by the act passed by the last Congress on the 6th of July, 1886. This forfeiture can be found on page 123 of 24 Statutes at Large. It ought to have covered the branch as well as the main line, but as the whole of the branch was to be in the Territory, and the majority of the Committee on Public Lands was so well satisfied that no lands would pass to it for the construction through the Indian country, I suppose it was thought unnecessary. At that time I proposed a substitute that would have covered both the main line and branch, but it was not adopted.

It appears to me about all that is necessary for us to do now is to for-feit the rights and lands, if any were granted to the company for this branch. No part of this road was ever built through the lands embraced in the proposed Territory of Oklahoma. The main line was constructed as far as Red Fork at the time of the passage of the forfeiture act. Nothing has ever been done on the branch at all. It is entirely unearned and ought to be forfeited at once. My amendment will accomplish that and nothing more.

Mr. WEAVER. And that is the only part that has not been for-

Mr. McRAE. That is the only part that has not already been forfeited, and we clearly have the right to forfeit it, because no work has been done on it and the time fixed for its completion expired ten years

The map in front of me will show the lines of the land-grant roads through the Territory as well as the boundary of the proposed Terri-It can clearly be seen that Red Fork, the terminus of the eastern division, the only part in the Indian country, is in the Cherokee Nation, more than 100 miles from the eastern line of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] expresses some alarm about the grant to the Kansas and Neosho Company, to which the Missouri, Kansas and Texas succeeded.

There is no ground for such fears whatever. This road was built within the time fixed in the granting act, but a glance at the map before us will show that it does not run within 50 miles of the Oklahoma country. See the line [pointing to the map]. It enters the Cherokee Nation at the northeast corner and runs through it and south to Denison, Tex., at no point nearer the proposed Territory than 50 miles. It will be time enough to adopt such precautionary measures when there is presented a proposition to extinguish the title of the five civilized tribes. The statements of the gentleman to-day and on the 21st instant, as printed, have led many members to believe that this road was across the proposed new Territory. If the amendment will accomplish what it proposes, I have no objection. The motive of the gentleman is good, and I hope the suggestion will not be hurtful in future:

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But my friend will admit that it is a part of the Indian Territory?

Mr. McRAE. It runs through a part of the territory of the five civilized tribes, but this land will no more be affected by the pending bill than will the Indian lands in Dakota and Montana

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But it is a part of the Indian Territory.
Mr. McRAE. Certainly it is a part of the Indian Territory, but no part of Oklahoma. My friend must understand that the bill does not propose to take in all of the Indian Territory by a good deal.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Oh, certainly I do. Mr. McRAE. I fear, Mr. Chairman, that amendments like the one proposed, and supported by such speeches as that of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], will not only suggest such a claim to the railroads, but may aid them in maintaining it. If the roads have vested rights we can not interfere with them. To some extent I share in the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Maine that the legislation as proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the suggestion to these railroad companies that they have rights here may do harm instead of good to those who may acquire the title after the Indian title is extinguished, if ever, in the future. The bill provides for the repeal of these laws. The grants themselves provide that they may be repealed, altered, or amended. The lands have been forfeited except as to this branch, and when we declare that forfeited we have done all that we can do to retrieve the error committed when the grants were originally made.

Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.] Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am extremely anxious to be correctly informed on the point now under discussion, because I desire to vote intelligently upon it when the opportunity is offered. I am frank to say I fail to apprehend the true point in discussion. I rise simply to put an interrogatory in order to clear aside the ambiguity which to put an interrogatory in order to clear aside the ambiguity which evidently surrounds the question, and to see if I can get at the milk in the cocoanut without fooling with the shell. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, if it has been adjudicated upon at all, and I think indirectly it has, it is a settled question that where any land-grant railroad has completed its line of road either before or after the expiration of the time limited in the grant, and the Government has not taken any proceedings prior to such completion to declare the grant for any proceedings prior to such completion to declare the grant for-feited, the Government can not now legally raise this question of forfeiture, not having raised it until after the road was constructed, and that the road is entitled to its grant. I believe, sir, that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States have virtually determined this, and certainly the decision of Mr. Justice Field in the Oregon case last October clearly points in this direction.

Mr. HOLMAN ros

Mr. SCOTT. I do not propose to be interrupted by the gentleman. Perhaps I may be carrying this construction too far when I say the Supreme Court of the United States has so decided. If we take the decision of Mr. Justice Field in the Oregon case last October, it did point in this direction if it did not judicially determine it. Whether the land covered by this amendment is the land of the United States or whether it is land belonging to the Indian reservation can not possi-bly affect this question here as it now presents itself to this House. If the United States has no title to this land through which this branch road is proposed to be extended, then it necessarily follows the United States could not convey to that road any title or right to this land without violating the obligations of this Government so far as the Indian reservation is concerned.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Reserving all that.
Mr. SCOTT. Why not give them the land? That is another question entirely.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of forfeiting every acre of land which has been granted to any railroad company where there is the slightest chance of our putting it back into the public domain, in conformity to the law as we understand it to-day. I do not believe the best interests of the settlers or the interests of the country are to be promoted should we deliberately in this body pursue the policy of declaring forfeit-ures when we know the land can not be recovered, thereby forcing litigation and lawsuits between the settlers and the land-grant railroads by which titles to these lands will be questioned for a long series of years, and which will unquestionably be determined in favor of the railroads in the end.

I ask now whether the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] propose to forfeit lands upon a branch line of road which has been constructed, or whether they propose to declare a forfeiture on a land grant to a branch road which has not been constructed?

Mr. HOLMAN. On condition.

I therefore understand that this branch railroad is not constructed to-day, and the amendment proposes to declare the land grant forfeited, and in this, sir, I am heartily in accord and shall vote for the amendment. But if the branch road had been constructed, and the Government's title to the land covered by the grant was undisputed whether the road was constructed before or after the time specified in the grant, I should vote against the amendment; and I believe, sir, that this House will eventually determine, or at least I hope they will, that where a land-grant railroad has completed its line of road, either before or after the expiration of the time limited in the grant, and the Government has taken no action to forfeit the land prior to the construction of the road, even though the time had expired provided in the grant, that the title of the road to the land grant, although constructed after the time specified, is a good title. And I come to this conclusion, as I have stated, simply from the fact that I so understand the courts have construed the law in land-grant cases.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, it seems that there is a great deal of confusion in the minds of some gentlemen on the question involved in this amendment. Now, the M., K. and T. R. R., as it is called—the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road—runs north and south through the lands of the five civilized tribes, but it does not touch at any part the Territory proposed to be organized by this bill at all. Hence it has nothing whatever to do with the bill, and that is the only road built there through the Indian Territory except one that has no grant at all.

Then the Atlantic and Pacific road, running east and west, has been built to Vinita, or perhaps some 4 or 5 miles further west, which does not come within 40 miles of the proposed Territory of Oklahoma at all. They had the right of way through the Territory, but they never constructed the road, and that franchise was abrogated and the grant annulled by act of Congress in 1886.

The gentleman from Indiana has said that this road mortgaged its lands and franchises. I think I can show the gentleman that he is mistaken in that. I hold in my hand the report of the Senate committee made to the Forty-sixth Congress, and refer to a speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] in which he copies an extract from the report and embodies it in his speech, wherein I find this

The Atlantic and Pacific road has been constructed only some 35 miles from the Missouri line to Vinita, in the Territory, and has mortgaged the lands con-ditionally granted for that distance.

That is all the mortgage covered—the 35 miles. Mr. HOOKER. No, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Let me ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. WEAVER. That shows the mortgage was but for the 35 miles.
Mr. HOLMAN. Oh! the mortgage covered it all over.
Mr. WEAVER. Not at all; here is the report.

Mr. HOOKER. I have the mortgage here, and will show it to the gentleman. It shows that it does cover the entire line.

Mr. WEAVER. Well, the gentleman can also be a simple of the state of do not yield now.

My information is that derived from the official report made by the committee organized by the Senate of the United States, and that is their report to the Senate. They say that they mortgaged the lands only conterminous with the constructed portions of the road.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. WEAVER. Certainly.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It is generally the case in these landgrant roads that you can take up indemnity lands away ahead of construction. Was not that the case here, and is it not true that that was

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; not 40 miles beyond the terminus of the road and a land grant that has been forfeited by act of Congress, a grant that was conditional, an act the conditions of which were not complied with, and it was repealed.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa if he understands that no mortgage has been given on the line of the Atlantic and Pacific road on that part running through the Indian Territory?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me correct him.

Mr. WEAVER. Well, do not take it out of my time.

Mr. WEAVER. Well, do not take it out of my time.
Mr. PAYSON. But the gentleman certainly does not want to lead the committee into an error.

Mr. WEAVER. No; but you can correct it in your own time. Mr. PAYSON. In the report made by the chairman of the Public Lands Committee in regard to that road in the Forty-eighth Congress the fact is recited in reference to the incumbrances on the 1st of March, 1882, that a mortgage was executed for $25,000 a mile on the entire line between the west line of the State of Missouri and the town of Albuquerque, in New Mexico, and here is the description of the mortgage, for I hold in my hand an abstract of the papers.

Mr. WEAVER. That was subsequent to this report, and the land grant itself has been forfeited. Does the gentleman claim that Congress has no power to forfeit a land grant where the granting act itself provides that Congress may alter, amend, or repeal?

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly not.

Mr. WEAVER. And in this case where the road has never been built, where there was no compliance with the grant, does the gentleman complain that there is a scrap of title in the railroad company existing because of the original grant?

Mr. PAYSON. I agree that the grant may be forfeited, but I am correcting the gentleman as to the amount of the incumbrances on the franchise of the company.

Mr. WEAVER. But the road can no more encumber the land without title to it than I could. They never built the road; they had no Mr. WEAVER. Certainly.

Mr. McRAE. I wish to suggest that the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company never, for ten years after its mortgage was executed, claimed it had any right to the lands in the Indian Territory at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. And they never had. Mr. McRAE. And when they did make the claim, Commissioner Williamson, who afterwards became the attorney of the company, decided that they had no grant, and the Interior Department since that time has sustained that same opinion over and over again. The chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands who made the report from which the gentleman from Illinois read, in the Forty-ninth Congress, himself stated that the company had no grant.

Mr. WEAVER. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, while Mr. WEAVER. Moreover, are charman, I want to say that, while it is clear from the law and from the fact that there is no shadow of title to that land in the railroad company and can not be, I am willing and anxious that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana shall be adopted, so that by no possibility can the railroads in that manner acquire an acre of that land.

Mr. Springer and Mr. Baker, of New York, rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from

New York

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I think there is some misunderstanding, Mr. Chairman, as to the situation of this matter of the railroad's grant. In the first place, on the 27th of July, 1866—if gentlemen of the committee will give me their attention—before the act of Congresgranting a charter to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and also to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, a right of way through the Indian Territory was granted to those roads, provids ing in their charters that if at any time the Indian Territory should become a Territory of the United States, or in case the lands of that Territory shall become public lands of the United States, or the Indian title to said lands should be extinguished by the tribes owning the same abandoning them, or becoming extinct, that in such case said railroad companies would become entitled to alternate sections of lands on each side of their lines of road in that Territory in a strip 40 miles wide, measuring 20 miles each way from the track.

Subsequently, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, these roads, or one of them, mortgaged the line and the land acquired under these charters, and a large number of the bonds are held in Europe, as my friend from Mississippi, in his able argument on this bill, has stated.

Mr. HOOKER. Fourteen millions of them are held in Amsterdam. Mr. BAKER, of New York. Fourteen millions of them are held in

None of them on this land in the Territory.

Mr. PETERS. None of them on this land in the Territory.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. BAKER, of New York. I can not yield. I want to have this understood fairly and squarely, that under section 14 of the act it is proposed to repeal these land grants. Now, that is to say, Mr. Chairman, that the courts are going to be loaded down with litigation involving great issues between the parties concerned. Is it not inevitable that if the title to these lands is to be determined by a suit in the courts a great wrong will be done to these people who acquired title to these land grants? The result is inevitable. Of course the equities of the holders of these bonds, who are innocent owners for value, must be and will be protected by all the courts.
Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?
Mr. BAKER, of New York. Very well.
Mr. HEARD. I want to ask the gentleman, what will these Amster-

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Very well.
Mr. HEARD. I want to ask the gentleman, what will these Amsterdam bonds rest upon?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. They will rest upon the land of these railroad companies and upon these land grants. That is expressly stated in the mortgage

Mr. HEARD. Let me ask you further-

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I have not time to yield.

Mr. HEARD. I will give you time.
Mr. BAKER, of New York. Have you got it to give?
Mr. HEARD. I will get it to give.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I understand the gentleman these bonds about which they are so apprehensive are supposed to be issued upon the franchises and upon conditional rights which these roads are thereafter to acquire. Now, Mr. Chairman, before the condition under which these lands were to be given to the roads had obtained Congress forfeited these grants. Now, on what will the bonds rest?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Now, I want to say to my friend from Missouri that it may be a question where the bonds will rest. I have no doubt that these people invested their money in these bonds with the understanding that the good faith of the Government would be maintained, that they would be protected in their legal rights, and their vested rights not be disturbed by any unfriendly legislation. object, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, to the Congress of the United States being a party to a transaction through which a great wrong shall be done to any of the creditors of this company or any of these railway corporations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend permit me to say that both of these questions rest upon this provision, and that it does no injustice of that kind, for the agreement of the Government was that this land should not become the land of the corporation unless title vested in the United States?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Now, that vesting of title in the United States is at most a question of a brief time. If this act should pass and we create a Territory, of course these railroads will succeed to it, and they will have a right to title. But I want to call attention to the peculiar wording of section 14. It goes on to say, in providing for the repealing of these land grants:

And all or any rights to said lands are hereby forfeited to the United States, and no railroad company now organized, or hereafter to be organized, shall ever acquire any lands to aid in the construction of its road, or in consequence of any railroad already constructed, either from the United States, or from any Indian tribe, or from any Territorial government, within the limits of the Territory organized by this act.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas says that this act does not affect any territory within 200 miles of these railroads, but that this land acquired by future treaty or by future legislation will be affected; and that under the provisions of the law they intend to make them part of the railroad lands. I think it is a very serious question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been debated at great length, and I think the committee have substantially agreed as to what shall be done. I hope, therefore, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] as an additional part of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be accepted by the gentleman from Indiana and will be agreed to. have but an hour remaining, and I hope that we shall save some time for other discussion.

The amendment of Mr. McRae to the amendment of Mr. Holman

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN as amended was agreed to. Mr. McRAE. I ask to have the two amendments separated. Mr. HOLMAN. They belong together.

The Clerk proceeded to read section 8.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, before we pass from this section I want it distinctly understood that we shall have a vote upon the proposed substitute, which I understand is to be considered as pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to divide the time now so as to have vote upon that and the gentleman's amendment, and devote the rest

The CHAIRMAN. There is so much confusion the Chair is unable to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that amendments not objected to be now read and agreed to, and that the remainder of the time be given to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] to offer their two important amendments, so as to have a fair division of time.

Mr. PAYSON. How can we tell what amendments are objected

Mr. BUCHANAN. I demand the regular order. Mr. SPRINGER. I simply propose this, in the interest of giving very body a fair opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We do not know what amendments are objected to and what are not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, as the Chair understands it. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that amendments to which no objection is made be now submitted. By that the Chair understands that when an amendment is read and some one objects to it that amendment is not to be considered in order.

Mr. LANHAM. Does that mean amendments that are not objected to by the Committee on Territories?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments that are not objected to by one gentleman on the floor. The Chair was about to state fully the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois as the Chair understands it. is that amendments to which there is no objection be now submitted, and that they be considered as agreed to, and that then the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] be permitted to submit his amendment to strike out section 13 of the bill—

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to offer an amendment. Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. If that consent shall be given, will it not preclude the considering of an amendment if a single objection be interposed, and then if the time shall have arrived at which the previous question

The CHAIRMAN. It will preclude the submission of an amend ment if one objection is made; unless, after the amendments to which there is no objection are disposed of, the bill is continued to be read-

Mr. PAYSON. I object to the arrangement.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is intended for the purpose of reaching a vote as soon as possible.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; but if a single objection is made to an amendment the amendment will be postponed until these other sections have been amended and discussed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], and other gentlemen in the mean time will be warming their toes waiting to have their amendments reached. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 8. That the procedure in applications, entries, contests, and adjudications under this act shall be in the form and manner prescribed under the homestead laws of the United States, and the general principles and provisions of the homestead laws, except as modified by the provisions of this act, shall be applicable to all entries made hereunder, and no patent shall be issued to any person who is not a citizen of the United States at the time he makes final proof and payment. Final proof and payment, except in cases of contest, shall be made within three months after the expiration of three years from the date of entry, and in default thereof, or in default of the payment of any installment of the purchase-money when due, the entry shall be liable to cancellation, and the money paid thereon shall be forfeited to the United States. Lands entered under the provisions of this act shall be liable to taxation after the first installment of the purchase-money shall have been paid; but the same shall not be subject to any judgment or lien obtained upon indebtedness contracted or obligation incurred prior to the issue of patents therefor, nor shall such lands be sold or contracted to be sold, leased or contracted to be leased, conveyed, mortgaged, or in any manner encumbered prior to final proof or payment and the record thereof made in the office of the register and receiver of the district where the land is located; and any sale, lease, conveyance, or mortgage made, executed, or contracted for prior to such final proof, payment, and record shall be absolutely null and void: and all assignments, transfers, and mortgages of unpatented land entries shall be at the risk of the assignees, transferrees, and mortgages, who shall have no recourse against the United States for any failure of claimant's title before issue of patent: Provided, That the provisions of section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Homesteads," shall not be modified or changed by anything in thi

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proviso as it would stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the provisions of section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Homesteads," shall apply to the provisions of this act.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In lines 15, 16, and 17, strike out the words "be liable to taxation after the first installment of the purchase-money shall have been paid; but the same shall; "so that the provision will read: "Lands entered under the provisions of this act shall not be subject to any judgment or lien obtained upon indebtedness contracted," etc.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object. These lands ought to be taxed.
Mr. McRAE. We certainly ought not to tax the lands of the United States. It is not done under the homestead law, and it will complicate the titles by permitting people to acquire tax titles prior to the patents that may finally be issued for these lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 8 add the following:

"No entry shall be allowed of any homestead under this act except to actual settlers thereon; and no preferred right of entry shall be given to any person by reason of claim of occupancy prior to the application to enter the land, except in cases of actual occupancy and continued residence upon the land to the date of the application to enter. And no right of an alleged settler as such shall attach to any land in the Territory until the date of his actual bona fide and continuous residence upon the tract he proposes to enter; and his declaratory statement shall contain a true and full statement of the date and facts of residence on the land and last place of residence prior thereto, and detailed description of improvements, all verified by the oath of the applicant and at least one credible witness, made before the register or receiver of the proper land office as to all facts except that proof of the applicant's place of residence may be made before any officer authorized by law to administer oaths; but the use of such affidavit in the Territory shall, in case of false swearing thereto, subject the party to the same penalty as though sworn to before the register or receiver of the proper office."

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that amendment. Let it be agreed to.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 9. That whenever any portion of the lands opened to settlement by the provisions of this act shall be occupied for town-site purposes, and the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that they are occupied in good faith and are necessary for such purposes, the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to cause patents to be issued therefor, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to any legally organized company occupying and entitled to the same, upon the payment in cash of $20 per acre for the lands so occupied. The money so received for each town site, except such amount as may be required to be paid to the Indian tribes, as provided in sections 5 and 6 of this act, shall be held by the Secretary of the Interior as a separate school fund for the benefit of the people of such town, and shall be expended under his direction for the erection of school buildings and the support of schools therein: Provided, That town sites actually occupied on the Public Land Strip at the date of the approval of this act by not less than one hundred bona fide inhabitants, said sites to embrace the amount of land provided by law: Provided further, That all patents issued for town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma shall contain reservations for parks and other public purposes, embracing in the aggregate not less than 10 nor more than 20 acres; but no deduction shall be allowed on this account in the amount to be paid for said town sites as provided in this section; and patents for such reservations shall be issued to the towns respectively when organized as municipalities.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask that this amendment be regarded as agreed to pro forma, with the understanding that a yea-and-nay vote be taken upon it in the House.

Mr. PAYSON. If there is any substantial objection to this amendment, I would like to have the question debated now. If my colleague will say that he thinks the amendment ought to be adopted—

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not say that.
Mr. PAYSON. Then let us debate it, and have a vote upon it in regular form.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], who have substantial amendments to propose, be allowed now to offer them and to be heard in their support, I agree that this amendment be considered as adopted pro forma, and that the yeas and nays be taken upon it in the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I would like to have the Committee of the Whole understand the difference between this amendment and the section for which it is proposed as a substitute. I do not desire, if I can prevent it, that a vote be taken blindly upon what I regard as one of the most important propositions connected with this bill. The gentleman from Illinois knows whether this is satisfactory to the friends of the bill or I am violating no confidence when I say it has been so stated

Mr. WEAVER. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I do not care what may be put in there in regard to town

Mr. PERKINS. Does not this amendment reserve from actual settlement a strip of land 200 miles long and 1 mile wide through that Territory? Mr. PAYSON.

Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. PAYSON] be considered as agreed to pro forma, and that a vote be taken upon it in the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I would rather have a vote on it now. Mr. SPRINGER. You can have the yeas and nays on it in the House. My object is to enable the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] to submit their propositions and have them voted upon.

Mr. LANHAM. I also have a substantial amendment to submit. Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Lan-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] object to the arrangement proposed with reference to his amendment?

Mr. PAYSON. No, I do not. Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that amendments to which there is no objection be now submitted and adopted, so that the remainder of the time may be given to the gentlemen whom I have mentioned

Mr. HOOKER. In answer to the request of the gentleman from Illinois I beg to state that that gentleman is well aware of the fact that only one-half hour of the original time remains. It is impossible that the gentleman from Georgia, Judge BARNES, can present his substi-tute for the entire measure in that time, or that I can present the radical objections I have to the whole proposition, as well as the reason for moving to strike out the thirteenth section. I hope, therefore, the hour will be extended to 5 o'clock for taking the vote, so that we may have sufficient time to discuss the matter as it should be discussed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the gentleman that if he has not time when the hour of 4 o'clock comes, I will myself ask for a reasonable extension of the time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; I move to strike out the last word, for I am well satisfied that if I wait until we reach the consideration of the thirteenth section of the bill, to which the amendment applies, in all probability I will be denied the privilege of saying anything in opposition to the general features of the bill or in favor of the amend-

Mr. Chairman, my opposition to the bill is not based upon its terms as embodied either in one section or in another, nor upon its phraseology, nor upon the question as to whether the railroads are to be the grabbers of the lands of the Indians or not, or whether what you call the "settlers" are to be the grabbers. My objection is fundamental to the measure itself. I believe that you are endeavoring to take possession of lands and create over them a Territory of the United States the title to which is not in you and to which you have no right.

I assert, and I am willing to take a jury of twelve good and true men and try it as a lawyer before them—I assert that to the Cherokee Outlet the Cherokee Nation has a title undisputed by anybody, recognized by the current authorities, and which title stretches through half a century of your history, while this bill, if it becomes a law, proposes to take from them that which you yourself have conveyed by the most solemn forms of conveyances which the Government of the United States can give, namely, the patent of the Government. You have made that patent in accordance with the series of treaties which stretches back almost for a century, sir, and to pass this law would not only be petty larceny but grand larceny, for it proposes to steal an empire in area under the forms of law.

It proposes to take from the Indians that to which the Government of the United States has no more right than it has to the lands belonging to the gentleman from Indiana or the gentleman from Missouri, and if I do not demonstrate that to the satisfaction of every fair and honorable minded man who sits in this committee, then I shall be willing to see this bill pass, for such I take to be the true attitude of the

It proposes to take these lands and make a Territory of the United States over them, and there is not one rood of the lands so taken except the Public Land Strip which belongs to the United States or to which the United States has one particle of title. I confine myself, however, sir, in the discussion of this question to that portion of the land which is known as the Cherokee Outlet, and I propose to demonstrate that these Indians have a title to these lands recognized by every adjudication of the courts from the earliest decisions down to the latest one by Judge Parker, in that Territory; and the first fact in evidence to which I desire to point your attention is the patent of the Government of the United States, which was made ment.

under the Presidency of Mr. Van Buren, and provides, among other things, as follows:

things, as follows:

Therefore, in execution of the agreements and stipulations contained in the said several treaties, the United States have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Cherokee Nation the two tracts of land so surveyed and hereinbefore described, containing in the whole 18,374,-135.14 acres, to have and to hold the same, together with all the rights, privileges, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, to the said Cherokee Nation forever; subject, however, to the right of the United States to permit other tribes of red men to get sait on the sait plain, on the western prairie referred to in the second article of the treaty of the 28th of December, 1835, which salt plain has been ascertained to be within the limits prescribed for the outlet agreed to be granted by said article, and subject, also, to all the other rights reserved to the United States in and by the articles hereinbefore recited, to the extent and in the manner in which the said rights are so reserved, and subject also to the conditions provided by the act of Congress of the 28th of May, 1830, and which condition is that the lands hereby granted shall revert to the United States if the said Cherokees become extinct or abandon the same.

Intestimony whereof, I, Martin Van Buren, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, the 31st day of December, in the year of our Lord, 1838, and of the Independence of the United States the sixty-third.

H. M. GARLAND, Recorder of the General Land Office.

There is the patent, absolute and complete, vesting title, and subject only to the right of the United States to use the salt lakes that were found to exist in this proposed Territory of Oklahoma, and with the further reservation, which has been adjudicated in the courts, that if the lands shall be abandoned by the Indians or the title extinguished the said title shall revert to the Government of the United States. This is the only reservation against their absolute right to this property.

I will not weary the committee by reading the recital embodied in the patent, but content myself by saying that it embraces both the Cherokee Outlet and the lands upon which they now live.

If, Mr. Chairman, you have thus divested the United States of title and invested that title in the Indians, where then do you get your right to make a Territory of these lands for the United States? Sir, every single particle of the lands ceded for the settlement of friendly tribes has been conveyed by the Cherokees; and when you passed the law authorizing the settlement of these friendly Indians there with the consent of the Cherokees, who made the title to the lands? Government of the United States, but the Government of the United States clothed the Cherokee Nation with the power to make the title; and I hold in my hand one of the six cessions made by these Cherokee Indians to the Poncas, as a sample of those lying in the records of the Interior Department, conveying to these Indians lands which they now occupy in that Territory, showing that the Government of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and all of the authorities of the Government conceded that the fee-simple title was vested in the Cherokees, and that there was no possibility of getting the title to these friendly or semi-savage tribes except through the Cherokees.

There are six of these tribes. It was done for the benefit of the Pawnees, the Poncas, the Nez Percés, the Ottawas, the Missourias, and the Osages. Every one of them got title. Where? Not from the Government of the United States, because the Government of the United States has not got it. They got it from the Cherokee Nation. That question was settled in the celebrated case of Joy against Holden, where the Supreme Court of the United States says that the Cherokee Nation the Supreme Court of the United States says that the Cherokee Nation took by the grant a fee-simple title; and they assert that the fact of a mere contingent reservation that it shall revert to the Government of the United States if the Indians should abandon it or they should become extinguished was a contingency so remote that it did not, and could not, in law, justice, or equity, affect the right of the Cherokee

Mr. HOOKER. I am indebted to the committee for its courtesy. I have referred to some decisions of the Supreme Court which have been made as to the character of this title, to which I beg to call the attention of the committee, in order to show before creating this Territory what you gentlemen propose. I have characterized this effort to take this property under the forms of law as a grand larceny of a mighty kingdom and territory. It would be, if we pass this bill, a fitting climax to the "century of dishonor" which is about to close upon our Government in reference to these people, whom you have called our Government in reference to these people, whom you have called our wards. It would be a wrong perpetrated under the forms of law that could find no sanction in any just tribunal in all the land, and could find no excuse before any court or tribunal before which there was any and no excuse before any court or tribunal before which there was any final responsibility for our Government. Neither in law nor in equity nor in good conscience could such taking of the property of others be justified. This is evidenced by the court's solemn affirmation. You have renounced not only by the patent you gave them and confirmed by the treaty; but you have renounced all title by the sixteenth section of the treaty of 1886, under which these lands could be ceded to friendly the court of the treaty of the treaty of the treaty of the treaty of the sixteenth section of the treaty of the t tribes, and the title was given them by the Cherokees under the in-denture which I send to the reporters to be embodied in my remarks. It can be seen from this that there is not one iota of title in the Government of the United States to any part of the Cherokee Outlet, but that it is absolutely the land of the Indians.

The deed of conveyance is as follows:

The deed of conveyance is as follows:

This indenture, made and entered into this 14th day of June, A. D. 1883, between the Cherokee Nation, by Dennis W. Bushyhead, principal chief, Richard M. Wolfe, and Robert B. Ross, delegates of said Cherokee Nation, for and in behalf of said nation, of the first part, and the United States of America, in trust for the use and benefit of the Ponca tribe of Indians of the second part, witnesseth that:

Whereas by the sixteenth article of the treaty concluded July 19, A. D. 1886, between said Cherokee Nation and the United States, he said United States acquired the right "to settle friendly Indians on any part of the Cherokee country west of the ninety-sixth degree" of west longitude under certain limitation therein mentioned; and

Whereas by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, $300,000 was appropriated, "to be paid into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation out of the funds due under appraisement for Cherokee lands west of the Arkansas River," provided "that the Cherokee Nation, through its proper authorities, shall execute conveyances satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior to the United States in trust only for the benefit of the Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages now occupying said tract, as they respectively occupy the same before the payment of said sum of money:" Now, therefore,

By authority of an act of the national council of the Cherokee Nation, are hereby authorized and empowered, in the name of the Cherokee Nation, are hereby authorized and empowered, in the name of the Cherokee Nation, are hereby authorized and empowered, in the name of the Cherokee Nation, to execute deeds of conveyance as required by said act (March 3, 1883) for the tracts of Cherokee land for the benefit of the Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages, as they respectively occupy the same; said party of the first part, by the aforesaid principal chief and delegates, and in consideration of the payment of the sum of money mentioned in the interest and the said premises as above described with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, for the use and purposes aforesaid.

In witness whereof the party of the first part hath subscribed this conveyance by the said principal chie and delegates aforesaid, who have also hereunto set their hands and seals this 14th day of June, A. D. 1883.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss:

On this lith day of June, A. D. 1883, before me, a notary public in and for the District aforesaid, personally came Dennis W. Bushyhead, Richard M. Wolfe, and Robert B. Ross, to me known to be the persons who executed the foregoing instrument, and acknowledged the same to be their free act and deed for the purposes and under the authority therein.

[SEAL.]

GEO. M. LOCKWOOD, Notary Public.

It has been said, sir, that these lands are theirs only for the purpose of being used in a particular way. They did agree to sell the lands to the Government of the United States for settlement by friendly Indians, and they received at one time $300,000 and at another time $300,000 more. I will publish the patents and I will publish the deeds made by the Cherokee Nation to the lands now occupied by the savage tribes who are settled there by their consent, under their agreement with the Government, which they have kept at all times in good

Something has been said to the effect that they own no title to these lands, and that the lands are being leased to cattle syndicates. Sir, the lands are more valuable for grazing purposes than for any other; and, as I understand it, they are now leased for $200,000 per annum, $80,000 of which the Indians expect to devote to the erection of a great university of a character higher than that of any educational institution that they have hitherto had, and $40,000 of which they propose to devote to their common-school system. But, Mr. Chairman, the land is theirs usque ad ceclum, in the language of the old Latin law-books—they compile to the beavers. they own it to the heavens. They own the mines of iron, the mines of coal (if there be coal there), the mines of gypsum, and of all other metals. They own it all. It is theirs as absolutely as any man owns property who traces back his title to the patent of the Government of the United States. They have a right, therefore, to use it for whatever purposes they will, to use it in the most profitable manner they can. They get a fair rental for it and it is theirs.

ever purposes they will, to use it in the most profitable manner they can. They get a fair rental for it, and it is theirs.

By what authority, then, can the Congress of the United States, composed of honorable gentlemen who are willing to deal fairly with this question—by what authority can you take the lands of these Indians, whose title is derived from yourselves by the most solemn form of conveyance, and create a Territory out of it against their will and their wish? It is theirs and you have no title to it, and you can convey none. I do not pause, sir, to dispute about the question as to whether these lands will go to the vast railroad corporations that have mortgaged them already to the extent of from $17,000,000 to $20,000,000. mortgaged them already to the extent of from $17,000,000 to $20,000,000. In Amsterdam $14,000,000 of these bonds are held, and they are a cautious, prudent set of people in that city of banks and bankers and not likely to make investments unless there is something in them. A large portion of those bonds, too, are held in our own country. I say I do not stop to argue the question whether these lands will go to the railroads or whether they will go to the settlers, 300,000 of whom you say are now on the borders of Oklahoma waiting for the passage of this bill. You call them "settlers;" you say they are landless and home-less; but you must change the refrain of your song, for landless and homeless as they may be they do not expect you to commit a larceny upon other people in order to give them homes.

Sixteen hundred millions of acres of the public domain lie unoccupied to-day, open to settlement. Why, then, do you fix your greedy eyes upon the land which you once owned, but which by voluntary act eyes upon the land which you once owned, but which by voluntary act you conveyed to the Cherokees, and say that those must be the lands for the landless? You will have to change the refrain of your song since the exposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and instead of winding up your appeals with "land for the landless and homes for the homeless," you had better say "sites for the siteless," because that is the milk in the cocoanut. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Chairman, the thirteenth section of the bill, which I propose to strike out, commits the fraud—I say the fraud, because it declares upon its face that the moment that you pass this bill all title to the Cherokee Outlet ceases and passes away.

open its face that the homeir that you pass and cherokee Outlet ceases and passes away.

By the very passage of this bill ipso facto you strike down the title. You put it in your bill that you must get the consent of the Indians to the creation of this Territory, but you do not put in it the proposition of the indians to the creation of this territory. tion that you are to get their consent to part with the very lands which you yourselves have heretofore conveyed to them by the most solemn forms of conveyance which the Government of the United States can use. As I had occasion to say when speaking before upon this subject, there was once a little nation in Europe which was regarded as desirable by the allied powers, and they assembled their armies and they tore its limbs from their sockets; they used their knives to carve the body into parts, and divided it up among them, and that magnificent country which gave to the world a Sobieski and a Pulaski ceased to exist upon the map of the world.

You propose now, not by the strong arm of power, because you have already, and very properly, had your army there to protect these Indians in the possession of their lands—you propose now, under the guise of law, by a form of legislation, to tear from these Indians, who have relied upon their treaties with you, who have relied upon your solemn patents, who have relied upon their long possession, which in most of the States of the Union would have given them ample title to the lands without a scrap of paper back of it, for in many of the States it requires only ten years? possession to acquire title—you now propose. I say to only ten years' possession to acquire title—you now propose, I say, to tear from these Indians the lands which are theirs. These Indians hold by their patents; they hold by long possession; they hold by a series of treaties and decisions of your own courts, running through half a cent-ury; and to do away with all this and seize their land under the form of law and say that you will make it into a Territory is, as I have before said, simply committing an act of larceny in the name of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

[Hear the hammer fell.]
Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I, in common, I take it, with other members, am in possession of a petition to the Congress of the United States, signed by D. W. Bushyhead and C. J. Harris, claiming to be the duly accredited delegates from the Cherokee Nation of Indians. this petition these delegates protest, as they claim in behalf of the Chero-kee Nation, against the passage of the Oklahoma bill. This so-called petition, from its contents, would be taken as a plea in behalf of the cattle syndicate, which without warrant of law occupies 6,000,000 acres of land in what is known as the Cherokee Outlet, rather than a petition in behalf of the Cherokees

The measure against which these delegates protest, and certain members of this House use every method known to parliamentary law to obstruct, seeks to open to actual settlers, to men who will go upon it for the purpose of making homes, an area of rich land, almost in the for the purpose of making homes, an area of rich land, almost in the center of the Union, containing 23,278,719 acres. In this is included the Public Land Strip, commonly called No Man's Land, containing 3,672,640 acres. About 12,000,000 acres of the proposed Territory of Oklahoma are occupied, Indian fashion, by roaming bands of Indians, who, Oklahoma are occupied, Indian fashion, by roaming bands of Indians, who, as I have heretofore stated, "have neither the energy of the chase nor the genius of the fisherman." They add nothing to the wealth of the nation. "They toil not, neither do they spin," yet live upon the bounty of the Government. The boundaries of the proposed Territory of Oklahoma include 6,022,244 acres of the Cherokee Outlet, now and since 1883 occupied by a cattle syndicate, not for the purpose of cultivating the soil, but as an immense baronial pasturage for the herds of a favored few.

The committee—that is, a majority of it—believed that such holdings were un-American. In accordance with their views the thirteenth section of the bill declares these leases "void and contrary to public policy." It is the including of these lands in the bill and the heroic treatment proposed against the monopoly that has aroused much opposition to the bill under consideration in certain quarters.

Even the Cherokee delegates are compelled to admit the methods proposed in the bill for treating with the Indians for any interest they have in any of the lands in the proposed Territory of Oklahoma are fair and reasonable.

This is their language:

This is their language:

The bill, however, contains a proviso that all territory occupied by any Indian tribe, to which title has been conveyed by patent or otherwise from the United States, or to which such tribe may be entitled by law, Executive order, right of occupancy, or treaty, shall be excepted out of the boundaries and constitute no part of the proposed Territory until such tribe shall signify its assent to the President of the United States to be included therein, in manner thereinafter provided, namely, as to the Oreeks and Seminoles and the Cherokees, through a commission to be appointed by the President to negotiate with them for the purpose of procuring their consent.

They then add:

This provision, on its face, appears fair and reasonable.

Of this there can be no two opinions. It is not only "fair and rea-onable" in appearance, but in letter and spirit.

What objection is there to the bill? The gentleman from Mississippi denounces the thirteenth section; the delegates denounce the thirteenth section; the cattle syndicate denounce the thirteenth section. The grazing leases must be upheld. In whose interest, I ask? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] pays this fervid and eloquent tribute to the leases held by the cattle syndicate:

Sir, the lands are more valuable for grazing purposes than for any other; and, as I understand it, they are now leased for $200,000 per annum, $30,000 of which the Indians expect to devote to the erection of a great university of a character higher than that of any educational institution that they have hitherto had, and $40,000 of which they propose to devote to their common-school system.

Then follows the following opinion as to the Cherokee title to the lands in the outlet and leased to the syndicate at the nominal rent of 31 cents an acre, with an exemption from taxation of the vast herds that roam thereon. He says:

But, Mr. Chairman, the land is theirs usque ad colum, in the language of the old Latin law-books—they own it to the heavens. They own the mines of iron, the mines of coal (if there be coal there), the mines of gypsum, and of all other metals. They own it all. It is theirs as absolutely as any man own property who traces back his title to the patent of the Government of the United States.

They have a right, therefore, to use it for whatever purposes they will, to use it in the most profitable manner they can. They get a fair rental for it, and it is theirs.

This opinion is as inaccurate as it is eloquent. It was never the intent or purpose to give the Cherokees an interest in the soil of this outlet. They were given 7,000,000 acres as a home. In the language of Justice Clifford in speaking for the Supreme Court of the United

Treaties of the kind were concluded with that nation (Cherokee) of Indians on the 6th of May, 1828, and on the 14th of February, 1833, in both of which the United States agreed to possess the Cherokees of 7,000,000 acres of land west of the Mississippi River, bounded as therein described, and to guaranty it to them forever upon the terms and conditions therein stipulated and agreed. (Holden es. Joy, 17 Wall., 237; 7 Stat. at Large, 311; 10., 414.)

After designating by metes and bounds the future home of the Cherokees, the treaty provides that-

In addition to the 7,000,000 acres of land thus provided for and bounded, the United States further guaranty to the Cherokee Indians a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of said 7,000,000 acres as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right of soil extend. (7 Stat., 415.)

The language is "outlet;" it was granted as such. The Indians wanted a passage-way from their home to the then apparently boundless and unoccupied West, abounding in game. They were given the outlet, the passage-way, to enable them to pursue their favored avocation—hunting. Aside from this easement they were to acquire "no right to the soil."

This is plain from the reading of the treaties. It was also the understanding between the Government on one side and the Cherokees on the other. In evidence of this I cite a letter from Hon. J. C. Calhoun, Secretary of War, dated War Department, October 8, 1821, regarding the demands of the Cherokees that certain parties be removed from a portion of the outlet. He wrote:

It is to be always understood that in removing the white settlers from Lovely's purchase for the purpose of giving the outlet promised you to the west, you acquire thereby no rights to the soil, but merely to an outlet, of which you appear to be already apprised, and that the Government reserves to itself the right of making such disposition as it may think proper with regard to the salt springs upon that tract of country.

J. C. CALHOUN.

Teke-e-toke, John Jolly, Black Fox, W. Webber, Thomas Graves, Chiefs of Arkansas Cherokees.

In an able opinion delivered by Judge Brewer in 1887, that distinguished jurist used this language:

Manifestly Congress set apart the 7,000,000 acres as a home, and that was thereafter to be regarded as set aside and occupied, because, as expressed in the preamble of the treaty, Congress was intent upon securing a permanent home; beyond that the guaranty was of an outlet—not territory for residence, but for passage ground, over which the Cherokees might pass to all the unoccupied domain west. But while the exclusive right to this outlet was guarantied, while patent was issued conveying this outlet, it was described and intended obviously as an outlet and not as a home. (U. S. vs. Soule et al., 30 Fed. R., page 918)

The language of Mr. Calhoun with reference to the Cherokee title in and to the outlet was:

Vou-

The Cherokees-

acquire thereby no rights to the soil, but merely an outlet.

The language of Judge Brewer in the opinion just quoted says of the outlet and the intent of Congress:

Congress was intent upon securing a permanent home; beyond that the guaranty was of an outlet—not territory for residence, but for passage ground, over which the Cherokees might pass to all the unoccupied domain west.

With these opinions the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] differs. He says:

They own it-

The outlet-

to the heavens. They own the mines of iron, the mines of coal. * * * They own it all. It is theirs as absolutely as any man owns property who traces back his title to the patent of the Government of the United States.

Without any reflection upon the legal attainments of the distinguished gentleman [Mr. HOOKER], I will be pardoned in following the deliberate opinions of Mr. Calhoun and Judge Brewer rather than his given in the heat of debate. There is nothing in the case of Holden vs. Joy (17 Wall.) in conflict with the position taken by the Secretary of War in 1821 or the opinion of the learned jurist, Judge Brewer, rendered in 1887, the case of Holden vs. Joy having been decided in 1872. The Supreme Court passed on the title which the Cherokees acquired in and to the "Cherokee neutral lands" under the treaty of December 29, 1835 (7 Statutes at Large, 479). None of these lands are or ever were embraced in what is known as the Cherokee Outlet. There were 800,000 acres of these neutral lands. For them the Cherokees paid $50,000; by the terms of the treaty of 1835 they were to be conveyed to the Cherokees "by patent in fee-simple."

But, sir, it is proposed by the terms of this bill to treat with the Cherokees for whatever interest they may have in the outlet. It is but repeating the past legislation in treating with these Indians. In the language of the court in Eastern Band Cherokees vs. United States et al. (20 C. of C., 467):

To carry out that policy immense sums of money, millions of dollars not promised by treaties, have been appropriated by Congress and paid in the spirit of unbounded liberality, yielding to the demands of the Indians in almost every case, perhaps in every case, without exception, and paying in one way and another to an extent more than twice as much as they agreed to pay by the terms of the treaties, as is shown by the numerous appropriation acts scattered through the Statutes at Large.

The proposed legislation is in the same spirit.

The question of title in the outlet is only important, as it would He question of the life of the Cherokee delegates—Bushyhead and Harris—as it affects the lease held by the cattle syndicate. As I have before stated, those who claim to be the duly accredited delegates of the Cherokees admit the fairness of the provisions of the bill for treating with the Indians, and it would seem would be silent were it not for the thirteenth section that declares void the cattle leases.

In their petition they say:

Section 13 of the bill declares voidand contrary to public policy "all leases of lands belonging to the United States or held in common by any of the Indian tribes within the Territory of Oklahoma, as organized by this act, including the Cherokee Strip west of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude, whether controlled by persons, corporations, or others, except such leases as are held for the purpose of enlitvating the soil strictly for farming purposes," and makes it the duty of the President, "immediately after the passage of this act, to cause the lessees of said lands, and any other persons illegally occupying the same, to be removed from said lands," thereby placing the Cherokee lands west of 96° in the same divested and unoccupied condition as the Oklahoma tract proper, in which the Creeks and Seminoles alone are interested.

The words "including the Cherokee Strip west of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude" are italicised in the petition, and have italicised the opposition to this bill.

The gentleman [Mr. HOOKER] says:

But, Mr. Chairman, the thirteenth section of the bill which I propose to strike out commits the fraud—I say the fraud, because it declares upon its face that the moment that you pass this bill all title to the Cherokee Outlet ceases and passes away.

Then in the same connection, speaking of the thirteenth section and his motion to strike it out, he says:

By the very passage of this bill ipso facto you strike down the title.

This section is only declaratory of the law as it now exists. The leases are void. Neither the President nor the Secretary of the Interior can validate them. By inaction-the do-nothing policy-the Administration can in the future as in the past permit a favored few to absolutely control this outlet, 6,000,000 acres, and obstruct the opening of this Territory, and protect them in this by the use of the Army of the United States. It is a contest between a monopoly on one side and the people on the other.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] tells us that of the $200,000 annual lease money paid the Cherokees $80,000 is expected to be expended in the erection of a university, "$40,000 to the common-school system." Therefore the inference is that no action must be taken to open this Territory to actual settlement. Had it occurred to the gentleman that, should the Cherokees sell their interest in the outlet for $1.25 per acre, as provided in this bill, it would give them a fund of over $7,000,000, after deducting the amount heretofore paid them? This, at 4 per cent. interest, would render them $280,000 a ear-$80,000 more than they now receive and $180,000 a year more than was paid by the syndicate for five years, from 1883. All of this would be to the credit and for the benefit of the whole tribe. Under this bill the Cherokees would be the richest people in land and money in the world.

The Cherokees may well ask to be delivered from pretended friends. These lands are no longer needed as an outlet; the game has long since disappeared. The unoccupied West of 1835 has become the occupied in 1889. The Cherokees have neither the right nor have they the disposition to use an acre of these six millions for cultivation. Why, then, should they be withheld from the hands of sturdy husbandmen?

Now, sir, as to the validity of these leases, let me here say that no court has decided that they are valid, but it is true that the law officers of the Government have decided that they are illegal.

I here quote in full the opinion of the present Attorney-General:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, July 21, 1885.

These questions are propounded with reference to certain Indian reservations.

These questions are propounded with reference to certain Indian reservations, namely:

1. The Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude, except such parts thereof as have heretofore been appropriated for and conveyed to friendly tribes of Indians.

2. The Cheyenne and Arapaho reservation in the Indian Territory.

3. The Kiowa and Comanche reservation in the Indian Territory.

Our Government has ever claimed the right, and from a very early period its settled policy has been, to regulate and control the alienation or other disposition by Indians, and especially by Indian nations or tribes, of their lands. This policy was originally adopted in view of their peculiar character and habits, which rendered them incapable of sustaining any other relation with the whites than that of dependence and pupilage. There was no other way of dealing with them than that of keeping them separate, subordinate, and dependent, with a guardian care thrown around them for their protection. (3 Kent Com., 381; Beecher vs. Wetherby, 95 U. S., 517, where most of the cases on this subject are cited and discussed.)

Thus, in 1783 the Congress of the Confederation, by a proclamation, prohibited "all persons from making settlements on lands inhabited or claimed by Indians without the limits or jurisdiction of any particular State, and from purchasing or receiving any gift or cession of such lands or claims without the express authority and direction of the United States in Congress sessembled," and declared "that every such purchase or settlement, gift or cession, not having the authority aforesaid, is null and void, and that no right or title will accrue in consequence of any such purchase, gift, cession, or settlement." By section d' "that no sale of lands made by any Indians, or any nation or tribe of Indians within the United States, shall be valid to any person or persons, or to any State, whether having the right of pre-emption to such lands or not, unless the same shall be made and duly executed at some public treaty, held under the authority of the United States." A similar provision was again enacted in section's of the same shall be made and duly executed at some public treaty, held under the authority of the United States." A similar provision was again enacted in section's of the same shall be made and duly executed at some public treaty, held under the authority of the United States." The provision was further extended by section 12 of the act of May 19, 1786, chapter 39, so as to embrace any "purchases, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto." As thus extended it was re-enacted by the act of March 2, 1799, chapter 30, so as to embrace any "purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto." As thus extended it was re-enacted by the act of March 2, 1799, chapter 30, so as to embrace any "purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of indo, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians," and the provision of the act of 1545, just referred to, has been reproduced in section 2116.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

It will be seen that the first question upon which the opinion of the Attorney-General was asked by the Secretary of the Interior was the lease of-

First. Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude, etc.

This is the Cherokee Outlet now occupied by the cattle syndicate under a pretended lease. The Attorney-General says that such a lease is in "violation of the statute," and that the party claiming to occupy this outlet or any part of it under such a lease for grazing purpose

Is an intruder and may be removed therefrom as such not with standing his entry is with consent of the tribe.

"They may be removed," says the Attorney-General. "They should be removed," says the bill under consideration. It is in the section the gentleman [Mr. HOOKER] moves to strike out.

It is not strange, in view of the law, that people wonder why the Army is employed to keep men out of this Territory who desire to occupy it for homes, and to protect those who are there under their pretended leases, as intruders. These leases have been renewed in the last few months with a full knowledge of the ruling of the Department. They not only had before them the opinion of the Attorney-General, but also ample warning from the Secretary of the Interior. That officer in September last, learning that it was the purpose of certain parties calling themselves the Cherokee Live-Stock Association to secure a lease for the Cherokee Outlet, he wrote the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., September 28, 1883.
Siz: In view of the information of this Department that some steps have been taken by you, or by the council or other authorities of the Cherokes Nation, with a purpose either to renew the lease which was heretofore made with certain parties, calling themselves the Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association, or with an association or corporation of that name, and which it is understood is about to expire or has expired, or to execute some other lease or agreement for the use or occupancy of the lands of the Cherokee Outlet or some part thereof, and that a session of the Cherokee council is about to convene with a view to the enactment of measures to that end, I have the honor to advise and inform you, and through you the Cherokee council and authorities of the Cherokee Nation, that the United States Government will recognize no lease or agreement for the possession, occupancy, or use of any of the lands of the Cherokee Outlet as of any legal effect or validity upon the rights of the United States or as conferring any right or authority or privilege over said lands upon any lessee, but that any such lease or agreement, if any should be made, will be without the authority or consent of this Government thereto, will be subject to cancellation, and any use or occupation by any lessee, or any person under such lessee, subject to instant termination by this Department at any time whenever any such action shall be for any reason deemed proper by the President or this Department, and will be subject to any legislation whatever, general or special, which Congress may enact affecting that portion of the Cherokee country or affecting the occupancy of any Indian lands for any purpose whatever, whether for grazing, pasturage, or otherwise.

I desire that this notice of the views and rights of this Government shall be communicated to the council and to any persons who may be in or contemplating negotiation, or may enter into negotiation, with the authorities of the Cherokee Nation for any such use or occupancy, in order that there may be no misconception or misunderstanding upon the subject.

Very respectfully, yours,

WM. F. VILAS, Secretary,

Hon. J. B. MAYS, Principal Chief, Cherokee Nation, Tahlequah, Indian Territory. (Through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.)

Here they are told:

That any such leases or agreements, if any should be made, will be without the authority or consent of this Government thereto, will be subject to cancellation, and any use or occupation by any lessee, or any person under such lessee, subject to instant termination by this Department.

Mr. Chairman, what is there in section 13 of this bill that such a persistent fight should be made against it; that it should be denounced as a fraud? It is simply this, that it declares void and contrary to public

All leases * * * in the Territory of Oklahoms, as organized by this act, including the Cherokee Strip west of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude whether controlled by persons, corporations, or others, except such leases as are held for the purpose of cultivating the soil strictly for farming purposes.

This in the interest of the actual resident and cultivator of the soil against the syndicate; in the interest of the family against the herds of the cattle king. In the interest of the people this section (13) goes further; it provides that—

It is hereby made the duty of the President, immediately after the passage of this act, to cause the lessees of said lands, and any other persons illegally occupying the same, to be removed from said lands.

Why should this not be done? The lands now occupied by this cattle syndicate with its herds is capable of furnishing homes to nearly two hundred thousand people, giving to each family of five persons 160 acres of land, almost in the heart of the Union; a mild, delightful climate, and soil unsurpassed in fertility. Therefore, if the Executive neglects to use the power he now has in the interest of the people it should be made his duty to act as herein provided.

In 1880 Attorney-General Devens held that the Cherokees had no right to settle those of their own nation on the lands in this outlet, and

No person attempting a settlement on these lands can justify under any authority given by the Cherokee Nation. (16 Attorney-Generals' Opinions, 470.)

Mr. Chairman, I have done. It is my hope, my trust in the intelligence of the members of this House, that this bill will pass this body, and that the Senate may soon send it to the Executive for his approval.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the time before the committee rise be ex-

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the time before the committee rise be extended for ten minutes; that is, until ten minutes after 4.

Mr. REED. I do not object, if it is to be taken out in speeches.

Mr. OWEN. I object, unless the time is to be divided, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] can get an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. LANHAM. Let the time be taken up in offering amendments.

Mr. REED. I shall object to that.

Mr. OWEN. I shall object to extending the time for debate unless the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] has a chance.

Mr. BARNES. I want a portion of that time.

Mr. BARNES. I want a portion of that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask by unanimous consent that all gentlemen desiring to print remarks on this bill shall have the right to do so.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask only for one moment to reply to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WARNER. I had only five minutes in which to reply to your twenty minutes' speech.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to call attention to this decision:

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to call attention to this decision:
The United States Supreme Court, December term, 1872, in the case of Holden es. Joy (17 Pat., 250), in referring to the clause in the patent issued the Cherokees which provides that the lands conveyed thereby shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same, said:
"Strong doubts are entertained whether that condition in the patent is valid, as it was not authorized by the treaty under which it was issued. By the treaty the United States covenanted and agreed to convey the lands in fee-simple, and it may well be held that, if that condition reduces the estate to less than a fee, it is void." * * *
This Indian title being a base, qualified or determinable fee, with only the possibility of reversion, and not the right of reversion in the United States, all the estate is in the Cherokee Nation of Indians.

The effect of the conveyance by the United States to the Cherokee Nation of this tract of land upon the purchase made by them under the treaty of 1835 was to vest in the tribe a fee-simple to the said tract (Holden vs. Joy, 17 Wall., 211). This tribe did not hold this tract by the ordinary Indian title, which is one of occupancy only, which may be continued indefinitely. In such a case the fee-simple to the land is in the United States. The effect of this sale (to the Cherokees) was to separate distinctly the tract from the public lands of the United States and vest it in private ownership.

The sixteenth article of the treaty of 1866 (14 Stat., 804) provides that "the United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of the ninety-sixth degree, to be taken in a compact form, in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of said tribes thus to be selected; the boundary of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land to be conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes, to be held in common or by their members in severally, as the United States may decide. * * * The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession and jurisdiction over all of said country west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude until thus sold and occupied."

This article does not change or modify the title of the Cherokees or vest any title in the United States to the lands west of 96°. It simply gives the United States the right, with certain conditions to follow, to settle friendly Indians in that country. This is the country which is supposed to have been leased.

The Department has not considered it the duty of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior to interfere with the affairs of the Cherokee Nation, except in cases especially provided for by the treaty with that nation.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]
Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the amendments to the bill be read in regu-

Mr. ROGERS. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the order of the House the committee will rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HATCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing were received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced the approval of bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 9211) for the relief of Jesse Durnell;
An act (H. R. 5985) to increase the pensions of Mrs. Mary Ann Cross, Mrs. Minnie L. Gardiner, and Mrs. Lilla May Pavy to $30 per month;

An act (H. R. 5349) for the relief of Richard Trabue, executor of James Trabue, deceased, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callaban, and the widow of John Waters.

Also, that the following bills, having been presented to the President on the 7th instant and not returned to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Consti-tution, had become laws without his signature:

An act (H. R. 7305) granting a pension to Aaron R. Gilkerson; An act (H. R. 9176) granting a pension to Charlotte Taylor; An act (H. R. 9668) granting a pension to Joseph Rozier; An act (H. R. 10253) granting a pension to Emmanuel P. Steed; and

An act (H. R. 10647) granting a pension to Samuel J. Wright.

OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tho Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Thursday, January 24, 1889, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be, and is hereby, set apart for the consideration of House bill 10614, entitled "A bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and at 4 o'clock on said day the said bill shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments and upon ordering said bill to be read a third time and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall then be taken in the House; and in case said bill shall not be taken up on said day, then this shall be a continuing order until one day shall be taken in the House on the pending amendment relating to Union soldiers' homesteads and an amendment to be offered by Mr. Payson to the town-site section of said bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Is it in order now to move to recommit this bill? If so, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not at this stage, but it will be when the vote comes to be taken on the passage of the bill.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

In line 8, section 2, after the words "United States," insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That all such officers appointed and selected for said Territory after the said Territory has been organized for a period of five years shall be appointed and selected from the bona fide residents therein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In the fourth line, section 4, after the word "only," insert the following:
"But the provisions of section numbered 2301 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any entry of any of said lands,"

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 15, section 5, after the words "United States or," strike out the following:
"Have resided in the United States for two years, and."

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 6, section 6, after the word "longitude," insert "as agreed to be," and in line 7 strike out "to the United States by the said tribe of Indians by" and insert in lieu thereof "according to the provisions of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 17 and 18, section 6, strike out "have resided in the United States two years, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 13 and 14, section 7, strike out "and if it shall appear that said claim was not made in good faith" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The entryman shall be required to make full proofs, and unless it shall appear that the claim was taken in good faith, and that there has been full performance of all the terms and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:
In section 7, line 19, after the word "land," strike out the word "and," and in line 20 insert "and to break up and plow not less than 40 acres of the land filled upon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After section 7 insert the following:

"But if the said highway shall be vacated by any competent authority the title to the respective strips shall inure to the then owner of the tract of which it formed a part by the original survey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

It is expressly provided that the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war to make homes on the public lands under the existing homestead law shall not in any degree be impaired by the passage of this bill, and the right of such honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all lands which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order a yea-and-nay vote is to be taken upon this provision, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. PAYSON. But, Mr. Speaker, I am content with a division, reserving, however, the right of a yea-and-nay vote in case the amendment is rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that under the terms of the order a yea-and-nay vote can be dispensed with except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that a division may be taken first, reserving the right to take a yea-and-nay vote if necessary.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do not object. We may save time.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order. We will save time by proceeding in the regular way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would have been compelled to sustain the point of order, as the Chair thinks that except by unanimous consent the gentleman could not vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that it had passed a resolution providing for the printing of 32,000 additional copies of Miscellaneous Document No. 43, Fiftieth Congress, second session, being meetings before the Committee on Education and Labor on the bill (S. 2983) known as the "Sunday-rest bill;" in which concurrence was requested.

AFFAIRS AT SAMOA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications received from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress:

I had the honor on the 15th instant to communicate to your honorable body certain correspondence and documents in relation to affairs in the Samoan Islands, and having since that date received further dispatches from the vice-consulat Apia and the commander of the United States naval vessel Nipsic in those waters, I lose no time in laying them before you.

I also transmit herewith the full text of an instruction from Prince von Bismarck to the German minister at this capital, which was communicated to the Secretary of State on the afternoon of the 28th instant.

This appears to be an amplification of a prior telegraphic instruction on the same subject communicated through the same channel, and being set forth in the note of the Secretary of State to Count von Arco-Valley, the German minister, of the 12th instant, was duly laid before Congress with my last message in relation to Samoan affairs.

It is also proper to inform you that on Monday, the 28th instant, the occasion of the communication of the note of the Prince Chancellor, the Secretary of State was given to understand by the German minister that a proposition from his Government to that of the United States for a conference on the Samoan subject was on its way by mail, having left Berlin on the 20th instant, so that its arrival here in due course of mail could be looked for in a very short time.

In reply to an inquiry from the Secretary of State whether the proposition referred to was for a renewal of the joint conference between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, which was suspended in July, 1887, or for a consideration of Samoan affairs ab novo, the German minister stated his inability to answer until the proposition, which left Berlin on the 20th instant, should have been received.

I shall hereafter communicate to the Congress all information received by me in relation to the Samoan status.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 30, 1889.

The accompanying papers are as follows:

No. 1 (b). Mr. Blacklock to Mr. Rives.

[Extracts.]

No. 168.]

Consulate-General United States of America, Apia, Samoa, December 31, 1888.

(Received January 26, 1889).

Sir: I have the honor to transmit my "record of current events" and inclosures of letters, etc., mentioned in said record.

The political state of affairs, you will notice, is gradually reaching the crisis, and American lives and property are in the greatest danger. Things have become so serious that I found it necessary, in conjunction with Captain Mullan, United States steam-ship Nipsic, to send a special messenger to Auckland to cable the Department and answer any questions that the Department might wish to ask.

I have, etc.,

W. BLACKLOCK, United States Vice-Consul,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

[Inclosure No. 1 in dispatch No. 168.] RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS

December 4 .- H. B. M. Royalist arrives from Australia and the West Coast of Africa.

As the Lizard has to leave at once, the hospital tents which belong to her will have to be taken down. The wounded who can stand moving are being brought into the Apia native church, where the members of the London Missionary Society are going to attend to their wounds.

December 5.—The tents are being taken down; the wounded, too bad to be moved, are laid on the veranda of the British consulate; it is a pitable sight to see these noble fellows lying around with all imaginable wounds, many minus limbs, and most of them sure to die if good care is not given them.

H. B. M. Lizard leaves for Fiji and New Zealand.

December 6.—No news from the "front;" everything apparently quiet; a good many natives about town.

December 7.—A great number of natives still in town. The Adams is flying her homeward-bound pennant. She intends to leave for "Frisco" to-day via Tutulla and Honolulu. A report just come that Suatele has been killed by the Mataafa men. I can hardly credit it.

The United States steamer Adams leaves for home.

December 8.—No fighting to speak of to-day, only scattered firing from the forts. The Tamasese loss since the engagement on the 7th of November has been over eighty. The Mataafa people from their elevated position can fire down into the Tamasese forts. A Mataafa woman just brought in wounded. December 9.—Nothing of importance to-day; a number of Mataafa people in town.

December 9.—Nothing of importance to-day; a number of Mataafa people in town.

December 10.—The Mataafa people, I hear, have imported twenty thousand cartridges, and have taken them to the "front." A firm here has also received some guns and cartridges which the Mataafa people are purchasing.

December 11.—It is reported that three large villages of the Tamasese party on Upolu refuse to fight any more for Tamasese or Brandels, and are now at their respective homes.

The Tamasese natives say that they have bought guns from the German manof-war Eher. These are no idoubt some that were taken away by said vessel from some of the Line islanders spoken of in Mr. Morgan's (consular agent) report, Inclosure 0, dispatch 164, December 3, 1885, W. Blacklock to Department of State. Three woundedmen have just come in, shot from the Tamasese forts. December 12.—Great numbers of natives going to the "front" all day to-day, armed and carrying food. It looks like the eve of another, battle. It is said another attack will be made by the Malietoa party on the remaining Tamasese forts this week. Then we can expect more dead and wounded.

December 13.—Another man just arrived mortally wounded. The Mataafa natives report having captured a portion of Tamasese's large fort last night.

December 14.—The German man-of-war Ogla just arrived from Aden (where she took Malietoa off the German mail steamer), via the Marshall Islands, where she left Malietoa.

If the Germans undertake to capture Mataafa and his chiefs there is going to be very serious trouble here and all white residents are going to be placed in the greatest danger, as I am positive the natives will retailate on the German property, and this can not be done (injured) without that of the British, American, etc., sharing the same fate if fire is used, as I have no doubt it will be.

December 15.—The captain of the Olga calls on the British and American menofewar.

This evening a young baker, a Swede, is stabbed in the arm by a German offi-

Observed the Community of the arm by a German officer. After the stabbing the officer offered the baker $25 to say nothing of the affair to the German consul, but the baker told him that he intended to report the matter to the German consul in the morning.

December 16.—The baker stabbed last night reports the affair to the German consul, who would not listen to him at all.

This afternoon about one hundred and fifty sailors came on shore from the German men-of-war. They get very drunk and disorderly and then commence to raid the native houses, beating, maltreating the women in a shameful style. An old woman about fifty has her arm broken, her head cut, and her body all marked up with clubs.

The marshal of this office had his house entered by these drunken fellows, and afterwards on the street was beaten and stabbed several times by them; several others are cut and bruised, and are now in the native hospital being treated by the doctor of the United States steamer Nipsic.

Several street-lamps are broken by the Germans; also the glass of a light-tower creeted by the Tamasese-Brandeis party. There are only old Samoan men, women, and children in town, all able-bodied men being at the "front." It was with difficulty that I managed to prevent a squad of armed natives being brought in and attacking the Germans. I knew that it would only complicate matters still more, and endanger the lives and property of Americans and others.

men, women, and children in town, all abic-bodied men being at the "front." It was with difficulty that I managed to prevent a squad of armed natives beplicate matters still more, and endanger the lives and property of American and others.

December 17.—The German man-of-war Olga, with the German consul on board, goes up to the "front" this morning. She returns again this afternoon. To-night Mamea, who is kept prisoner in Tamassee's camp by Brandeis, writes a letter to his wife in Apia, telling her to let Mataafa know that the Germans have told the Tamassee people that there is now non-cutral territory, and that an attack would be made before morning on Mataafa.

December 18.—The Germans have now commenced war on the Samoans in entering the control of the contr etc.

The Olga has gone out and now the shelling is going on about 2 miles from here. Natives have just come in to warn British and Americans to put a black band on their arms so that they will be known from Germans, as they intend to retaliate on them if they attack the Samoans again.

The village of Matafagele is now in flames. This town is in a terrible state of excitement; women and children are rushing on board the ships in the harbor for safety. Matafafa's sister, who is married to a Tamasese chief, arrives in Matafafa's camp, bringing the news that three districts of Atua, namely, Aliafata, Lefa, and Falealile, have left Tamasese and refuse to fight any more; that he has nothing to fear from Tamasese, as the war is no longer a civil strife.

No one has been killed to-day and no property destroyed except by the Germans.

No one has been killed to-day and no property destroyed except by the Germans.

A native boat is attacked and fired into by a German boat about 100 yards from this consulate, and people crossing the Vaisigano River are in danger of being shot, several bullets passing close to them. Captain Hand, H. B. M. S. Royalist, is nearly shot while crossing over the stream in a boat. He at once sends off to the German man-of-war, and the captain apologizes and promises it will not happen again.

December 22.—Capt. E. L. Hamilton, late United States vice-consul here, brings in the remains of the flag which was flying on his property at Matafagatele, and which the German men-of-war's men burned yesterday.

A meeting is held this afternoon at the British consulate between the three consuls and the three representative captains in harbor to try and arrange so that the inhabitants within the neutral boundary established by Admiral Fairfax would be more secure.

The German consul would agree to nothing, but wanted the assistance of the other two against Mataafa's people, so that he could do as he pleased with the natives and native property within the neutral limits, and we were to help hold the natives back and prevent them from defending their own.

Of course the British consul and myself could not comply with his request.

We fear nothing from the natives within the neutral limits if left alone. Our danger is from the Germans, and they are exasperating the natives to such an extent that we can hardly blame them whatever they may do.

December 23.—Everything comparatively quiet to-day. The German guard at the German firm shot one of their own black boys, thinking him a Samoan. December 24.—The American schooner Orion arrives, thirty-eight days from San Francisco. The German consul hears she has some ammunition on board and wants me to seize it, and I tell him I can not lawfully do any such thing. Then he says he'd be willing to purchase it, and I tell him that of course that is a matter between him and the owner.

December 25.—Nothing exciting to-day. The German consul sends an agreement reneutral territory for signature, which I decline to sign.

December 26.—The cutter Emelina (German) arrives from Manua, bringing the shipwrecked crew of the American ship John Brice, 1,968 tons, built at Thomaston, Me., by Ed. O. Brian, 1869, master Timothy Murphy; sailed from Port Townsend, Puget Sound, on the 9th of October for Melbourne, with 1,462,000 feet of rough lumber, valued at $17,45.25; struck by a gale on the 7th of December, which increased to a hurricane, and she was abandoned on the 8th in latitude 20° south, longitude 165° 50′ west. One man was lost overboard, Martin Nillson, seaman, on the night of the 7th; boat with twenty-three men all told made Manua on Sunday, 16th December; captain and all hands left there is the above-named cutter for Apia on the 2th of December.

The British brigantiñe Marshall S. arrives here with two hundred odd tons of coal for the United States war vessels, from Newcastle, New South Wales. Said coal was ordered some time ago by Commander R. P. Leary, United States steamer Adams.

December 23.—An American in his boat in Apia harbor, flying the American flag, is seized by an armed German crew and taken in his boat alongside and on board the German man-of-war Adler, and after some talk is sent on shore to the German consul, and after more talk is allowed to go and get his boat back, minus one oar, however. I report the matter to Captain Mullan. The Adler and Nipsle leave for Tuituila to intercept the mail steamer,

PROCLAMATION.

My opinion of the way by which Samoa will get happy again is as follows:
The difficulties and misfortunes have arisen in Samoa because there are so many fire-arms on the islands.
Therefore I order:
The warriors in Tanumamanouo, and Apia, and Matuata, and Telepa, and Matafagatele have to bring their arms to-day on board the German man-of-war in the harbor of Matafagatele. When a red flag will be hoisted in the top of the foremast of the man-of-war this will be the sign that you have to bring your arms on board the man-of-war in your boats, which may hoist a white flag.
When the arms will be delivered Samoa will live and prosper. But when one hour has passed after the red flag being hoisted and you have not begun with bringing the arms on board the man-of-war, the latter will fire into the village of Matafagatele.

I hope you will obey my orders.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,

Apia, Samoa, December 21, 1888.

Sire: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication inclosing a proclamation issued by yourself to a small portion of Mataafa's people, stating that if a certain demand is not obeyed the German man-of-war will fire into the village of Matafagatele.

I would respectfully call to your notice that in that village there is considerable American property, and that I shall hold you responsible for all damage done to said property.

As I have before mentioned, I consider you are making a very grave mistake in the manner of procedure and are putting the lives and property of Americans as well as Germans and all other foreigners in Apia in the greatest danger.

I hereby again in the name of the United States protest against your action.

I have the honor, etc.,

W. BLACKLOCK.

Dr. KNAPPE, Imperial German Consul, Apia, Samoa.

W. BLACKLOCK, United States Vice-Consul.

[Inclosure D 1.]

It is hereby mutually agreed between the undersigned representatives of the three treaty powers in Samoa that in regard to the neutral territory of Apia, as arranged by regulations issued in October last by Tamasese and Mataafa and surveyed by instructions emanating from the three consuls, the following regulations shall be strictly adhered to:

ulations shall be strictly adhered to:
That is to say:
First. That the aforesaid arrangements in terms of the proclamation issued by Tamasese and Mataafa shall be enforced in their entirety.
Second. That should it be found on official inquiry by the three consuls that Mataafa's forces are occupying military positions within the boundaries of the said neutral territory he, the said Mataafa, shall be required to remove such without loss of time outside the lines of such limit.
Third. That should the Imperial German consul require to operate within the aforesaid neutral territory he shall except the case of an attack by the natives, give notice to the consular representatives of Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the United States of America:
First. Forty-eight hours in case of desire to bombard Mataafa's position immediately in the vicinity of the boundaries of the aforesaid neutral territory.
Second. Ninety-six hours in case of desire to bombard any position within the neutral lines.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Apia, Samoa, December 26, 1888.

Apia, Samoa, December 26, 1888,

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of yesterday's date, inclosing a draught of agreement you wish me to sign.

I beg to differ with your opinion as regards said agreement being in conformity with our verbal declarations.

I do not deem it necessary for the benefit of Americans that such an agreement need be signed by me.

The two belligerent parties in Samoa, Mataafa and Tamasese, made a certain agreement at the request of the foreign representatives in Samoa to lay out a certain tract within which boundaries there should be no hostilities whatever. During all the native fights since the agreement was made the citizens of Apia have felt perfectly safe, believing that the natives would keep it; and they have done so. The danger we are in now is from the German men-of-war and their men firing their guns indiscriminately into our midst and about the harbor.

I beg to inform you most respectfully that I am not disposed to sign your document.

With regard to the ammunition that you have speken to me about we have

With regard to the ammunition that you have spoken to me about purchasing, I have seen the owner and beg to refer you to him, Mr. H. J. Moors.

CONSULATE-GENERAL, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Apia, Samoa, January 4, 1889. (Received January 26.)

Sir: I have the honor to inclose herewith my record of current events for the few extra days since the time for closing the regular mail.

Owing to the quarter and year closing so close to the departure of this mail, and the busy times I have had, it has been absolutely impossible for me to make

RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

January 1, 1839.—Nipsic and Adler arrive back from Tutuila with the mails. Captain Mulan having written to the captain of the German vessel which seized the American boat the other day, received a reply to the effect that there was no flag flying in the boat. This is not true, as the boat was seen from this office, also by others in other parts of town, plainly flying the American flag. This is the usual way the Germans adopt for straightening out the outrages they commit

This is the usual way the Germans adopt for straightening out the Castelland commit.

January 2.—Everything quiet to-day; it may be just a lull before a storm.

The German firm did not send the regular mail cutter out yesterday, but it is said the German man-o-war Adler will go on Friday.

January 3.—Captain Mullan and I have decided that it is necessary to have the Nipsic go over to Tutuila on Friday to meet the mail steamer to insure our dispatches getting on board; it will not do to take any chances these times.

January 4.—A reliable native has just informed me that the German consul sent word to Mataafa yesterday by the wife (a Samoan) of the clerk of the German consulate, that he would like to see him anywhere he would name; that he wanted to shake hands and be friends. Mataafa sent him back word that he did not want to see him.

The United States steam-ship Nipsic will leave at 6 o'clock p. m. for Tutuila.

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP NIPSIC (THIRD RATE),
Apia, Samoa, December 26, 1888. (Received January 30, 1889.)
Sir: I have the honor to report that the United States steam-ship Adams, under the command of Commander R. P. Leary, left this port on December 7, 1888; and, upon the course of events since his departure, I have to report as follows:

On the night of December 17, 1888, a number of German sailors (said to have been about eighty), were landed at Matuata from the German man-of-war Olge (which vessel arrived at Apia on December 14, 1888, from the Marshall Islands where she lauded the deposed King Malietoa), and forty more were sent in boats along the coast. The eighty sailors marched inland to meet Mataafa. When this shore party arrived in the vicinity of a German plantation called the Vaiele it is reported they were joined by all the imported laborers (New Britain men) on this said plantation.

It has been currently reported that the Olga brought down about two hundred men of the Tamasese party to this, German plantation, and on Mataafa's party seeing the German sailors and Tamasese men armed and coming towards them, and knowing the great danger of interfering with German men-of-war's men, they retired inland. The sailors of the Olga followed them and, according to good information, fired into Mataafa's party, killing first the son of a chief and afterwards the chief himself, after which the fight became general. The loss of the Germans was eighteen killed and thirty-four wounded, including in the former a lieutenant of the German warship Olga. The loss on the Mataafa's side was ten killed. The Tamasese party fled and the laborates on the Mataafa's side was ten killed. The Tamasese party fled and the laborates. This plantation is situated to the eastward of Apia about 3 miles, and is superintended by a Mr. Hufnagel, a German subject.

After this action the followers of Mataafa who were in this fight came towards Apia and intrenched themselves back of the neutral ground surrounding Apia. On the following morning, December 18, 1888, I received a communication from the United States vice-consul here, informing me that he had that morning received a letter from the German consul, Dr. Knappe, to the effect that the German warships would leave the harbor of Apia that day in order "to put an end to the present state of war on behalf of an effective protection of the German interests in Samoa, and to disarm both the rebels and the army of King Tamasese." Upon receiving this communication I immediatel one-half hour, after which she landed armed boat's crews and burned the village and then returned to Apia. A copy of my protest to the commanding officer is herewith inclosed.

Early on the morning of December 21, 1883, the German consul at Apia issued publicly a proclamation (a copy of which he sent to me) to the effect that his opinion was that, in order to stop the war in Samoa, the warriors in Tanumamanou, Apia, Matuata, Telepa, and Matafagatele should bring their arms on board the German man-of-war in Matafagatele harbor, and if they did not, at a certain time and at a certain signal, do so, the village of Matafagatele would be bombarded. A copy of this proclamation I also inclose. Within three hours after the receipt of this proclamation the guns of the German man-of-war Olga were heard bombarding the village of Matafagatele. Certainly no sufficient notice was given to the warriors and their followers to obey the injunctions of this proclamation issued by the German consul, even if they had been so disposed as to conform to the terms of his proclamation, and had any foreigners been living in this said village, sufficient time was not given for the representatives at Apia to give them timely warning to have removed their families, effects, etc. Happily, I do not think any lives were lost, either in the bombardment of the village of Laulii or that of Matafagatele. Two or three native houses, said to have been the property of an American citizen—Mr. E. L. Hamilton, of Apia—were destroyed at Matafagatele.

On the afternoon of this same day, December 21, 1883, an armed boat's crew from one of the German men-of-war attacked a boat containing natives and fired several shots among them in this harbor, near the Vaisagano River. Three shots came very near the persons of Captain Hand and Lieutenant Plumer, of Her Majesty's ship Royalist. The Germans commanding officer apologized and has promised that no such demonstration would again occur in the harbor. During the past five or six days great excitement has prevaile orward on the 24th instant from San Francisco with pay master arrived on the 24th instant from San Francisco with pay master and its such that I deem it necessary, after consultation with our vice-consul-general here, Mr. W. Blacklock, to send an officer to Auckland, New Zealand, for the purpose of telegraphing the Navy Department the present state of affairs here and the latestaccounts. This officer, Lieut, John M. Hawley, United States Navy, will take passage in the mail steamer from San Francisco which passes Tutuila Island about December 29. I am of the opinion that our Government should have at this point more vessels, especially at this time. I have caused to be posted in the town of Apia a notice, to wit, that the lives of all American citizens will find protection on board this vessel under my command, and, at the first intimation or outburst of hostilities in Apia, I shall land my force for the protection of their property.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. MULLAN, Commander, Commanding.

D. W. MULLAN, Commander, Commanding

UNITED STATES STEAM-SHIP NIPSIC (THIRD RATE), Apia, Samoa, December 24, 1888. SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of your proclama tion, dated December 21, 1888, which copy was delivered on board the United States steam-ship Nipsic at 6.10 o'clock on the morning of that date. I am surprised, sir, that you, as the representative of one of the three great powers in Samoa, should have seen fit to arrogate to yourself, without any consultation whatever with the consular authorities of the other powers, or with the chiefs of the contending forces in Samoa, the right to issue a proclamation couched in language so authoritative and peremptory. Nor was I less surprised to hear within three hours after the receipt of the above-mentioned copy the guns of the Olga bombarding the village of Matafagatele, in fulfillment of the threat expressed in the proclamation, an act for which I fail to find the slightest justification in the acknowledged principles of international law.

Against that assumption of authority in Samoan affairs which the issuing of such a proclamation, as well as its wording, evinces, to the entire disregard of the Samoan nation and the inviolability of its sovereignty, as assured its yreaty and the mutual consent of the powers; against the unprovoked and therefore unjustifiable act of bombarding the village of Matafagatele because of the non-compliance of the natives with the requirements of a proclamation issued by a power having no recognized authority over them; against the disregard of the rights of humanity and the privileges of an independent national existence, I enter my emphatic protest, in the name of my Government and of humanity at large.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. MULLAN, Commander U. S. Navy, Commanding U. S. S. Nipsic.

Dr. KNAPPE, His Imperial German Majesty's Consul, Apia, Samoa.

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Apia, Samoa, December 26, 1888.

SIR: Affairs have become so serious here now that I find it necessary to cable to the State Department and ask for instructions and an increased naval force. The Department will likely want to ask some questions, and I would respectfully urge upon you the necessity of your going over to Tutuila, to intercept the mail steamer, and request you to send an officer to Auckland to forward dispatches and answer questions.

I would also ask that you allow all marines at this consulate to remain during your absence.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

United States Steam-ship Nipsic (Thied rate),

Apia, Samoa, December 29, 1888.

Sir: You will take passage for Auckland, New Zealand, in the mail steamer from San Francisco, which passes Tutuia Island on about December 29, 1888. Upon your arrival in Auckland, you will please send the inclosed cablegrams to "Secretary of Navy, Washington, D. C.," and will answer, to the best of your ability, all cablegrams from the honorable Secretary which may come to Auckland relating to the condition of affairs in Samoa. Your stay in Samoa has allowed you to have very good information as to the state of affairs, and I inclose you herewith copies of all my correspondence had with the honorable Secretary of the Navy and others touching upon the condition of affairs here; also, copies of letters and proclamation of the German consul. Call upon our consul in Auckland and inform upon what duty you are [sent], and request his assistance in anything you may wish. It may be well to consult him in all matters. Sign your name to all cablegrams saying "per order Commander Mullan." Just prior to leaving Auckland cable if any answers to your messages.

After remaining in Auckland a sufficient length of time—leaving it to your judgment and discretion—you will return to the Nipsic at this place by the first favorable opportunity. Passed Assistant Paymaster Corwine has been instructed to secure you a passage to Auckland, and will advance you sufficient funds for all Government expenses connected with the duty assigned you. You will keep a strict and accurate account of all your necessary expenses, and obtain the necessary receipts and vouchers for such moneys as you may expend, and make the necessary return upon your rejoining the Nipsic. The paymaster will furnish you with the necessary blanks and vouchers. Your duty will be more of a confidential nature than otherwise. I would not inform any one on board the steamer what your mission is, nor any one in Auckland, except the United States consul. Request the consul, please, to forward, after

Consulate-General of the United States,
Apia, Samoa, December 28, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to inform you that an armed German boat seized today and took alongside the Adler an American in his boat flying the American flag in Apia harbor. After a good deal of talk the American was taken to the German consul, and after more talk he was allowed to go and get his boat back.
The Germans also broke one of his oars. I have no doubt you will inquire into this matter, get satisfaction, and prevent a recurrence of such outrages.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

United States Vice-Consul.

Commander MULLAN, Commanding U. S. S. Nipsic, Apia Harbor,

United States Steam-ship Nipsic (third rate), Off Tutuila, Samoa, December 31, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter which I received on December 28, 1888, from Mr. W. Blacklock, the United States consul at Apia. I would respectfully request to be informed why this American citizen, in a boat flying the American flag, was taken on board the Adler by an armed German boat, and all the circumstances under which this unparalleled proceeding took place. I will thank you for an immediate reply, in order that I may acquaint my Government with all the attending facts and transmit a copy of your reply.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. MULLAN, Commander U. S. Navy, Commanding U. S. S. Nipsic.

Captain FRITZE, Commanding H. I. G. M. S. Adler,

SOUTH SEA, December 31, 1888.

RIGHT HONORABLE SIR: I have the honor, in answer to your honor's letter, dated the 31st of December current, respecting the communication of the United States vice-consul, Mr. Blacklock, to say that the boat in question, which, on the 28th of this month, was brought alongside H. I. M. cruiser Adler by a boat, showed no colors. After the correctness of the deposition of the man in question had been ascertained at the imperial consulate, he was let go without further trouble. As to outrages—as that an oar had been broken—absolutely nothing is known about it, and against this I must enter my protest.

Your honor, very respectfully,

FRITZE, Corvette Captain and Commander,

Captain MULLAN, Commander of the United States Corvette Nipsic.

United States Steam-ship Nipsic (Third rate),
Apia, Samoa, December 15, 1888.

Sir: I have to inform you that on November 27, 1888, Commander R. P. Leary, United States Navy, commanding the United States steam-ship Adams, addressed a letter to the commanding officer of the German man-of-war Eber—then at Saluafata harbor—inquiring into the hoisting of German mercantile flags over certain works and fortifications erected by the Tamasses forces at Eva, in said harbor; also inquiring into a report said to have been delivered to the Matafa forces to the effect that said forces should not fight on German property in Samoa, nor erect forts thereon; and, if said forts were erected, that they would be taken by force.

moa, nor erect forts thereon; and, if said forts were erected, that they would be taken by force.

Commander Leary saw with his own eyes the German mercantile flags over these fortifications and it also came to his knowledge that word had been sent to the Mataafa forces not to fight on German property nor to erect forts thereupon. This letter of Commander Leary's was, I understand, referred to you as the political agent in Samoa of the German Government. When Commander Leary left this port on December 7th, 1888, he had not received a reply to his letter. Having now relieved him here, and being the senior United States naval officer in Samoan waters and having waited for one week (since his departure) for a reply, I would now respectfully request a reply to his letter and beg to be informed if one of the belligerents has been informed that he must not erect forts upon German property nor fight thereon, etc. I will say that I hardly believe such instructions emanated from the consul representing the German Government in Samoa; for certainly I must believe he is too well versed in the laws of nations to have promulgated such an order.

But as to the German mercantile flags floating over the fortifications of one of the belligerents, both Commander Leary and myself saw them. For what purpose they do so I am now unable to say, but wish to be informed, as I consider it a duty to so inform myself in order that my Government may be informed of all that is transpiring in Samoa. I hardly need bring to your notice that, in reference to the hoisting of flags in Samoa, they can only protect your consulate; if they should fly elsewhere, with a view to protect the property of your countrymen, or property in which they may be interested, it is done at the risk of having that emblem disregarded by the belligerents of Samoa. Undoubtedly the authority of Samoa within its own territory is absolute and exclusive, and no restriction whatever can, by any nation, be placed upon it.

I now have the honor to request an answer to Command

D. W. MULLAN, Commander U. S. Navy, Commanding U. S. S. Nipsic.

Dr. KNAPPE, H. I. G. M. Consul, Apia, Samoa.

APIA, December 16, 1888.

Sin: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of yesterday's date.

I am sorry to be obliged to inform you that the letter mentioned therein, addressed by Commander R. P. Leary, United States Navy, commanding the United States steam-ship Adams, to the commander of His Majesty's gun-boat Eber, and dated November 27, 1888, has not been referred to me, and therefore I was not in the condition to answer the same.

As much as I learn, Captain Wallis has given a reply to that effect, that according to instructions being in force for German officers the correspondence in political affairs is reserved to the political agents.

I regret it very much that by the same reason I can not enter in a dispute about the questions started in your letter of yesterday's date, as Mr. Blacklock is appointed political representative of the United States in Samoa.

Sir.: I have just been informed by an officer of the Adler that it is your intention this afternoon to bombard the village of Laulii, the headquarters of King Mataafa. I have the honor to inform you that Laulii now contains a large number of women and children, besides wounded persons. In the name of my Government, the laws of nations, and the laws of humanity, I most emphatically protest against such action on your part until the proper declaration of war has been made in accordance with the laws of nations and the customary notice sent to King Mataafa, in order that he may have ample opportunity to remove the sick, wounded, and other non-combatants.

Unless you give this notice you will place yourself beyond the pale of the laws of civilized nations.

United States Steam-ship Nipsic (third rate), Apia, Samoa, December 23, 1888.

Apia, Samoa, December 23, 1888.

Sin: I have to inform you that on the 21st instant I received a copy of the proclamation issued by the Imperial German consul at Apia, to the effect that it was his opinion that in order to stop the war nowgoing on in Samoa, his plan was to have the warriors in Tanumamanouo, and Apia, and Matuata, and Telepa and Matafagatele bring in their arms on board of the German men-of-war in the harbor of Matafagatele, and in case they did not that the village of Matafagatele would be bombarded.

Immediately after receiving said proclamation your vessel got under way and proceeded off the village of Matafagatele and began bombarding, and hence I was not sufficiently notified so I could send a communication to you, but I now, upon your return, protest, in the name of my Government, against your said action, as American property at that place was destroyed.

The American consul at Apia has notified Dr. Knappe, the Imperial German consul here, of this latter fact.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. W. MULLAN.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Berlin, January 13, 1889.

MINISTEY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Berlin, January 13, 1889.

I have already notified your excellency that, according to telegraphic communications from Apia on the 18th December of last year, a detachment of German naval forces which had landed at the requisition of the imperial consul for the protection of the German settlements which were endangered by the conflicts between the native parties there, was attacked by armed Samoans belonging to the party of Chief Mataafa. This unprovoked attack is said to have taken place under the leadership of an American named Klein. On this occasion more than fifty German soldiers and officers were killed and wounded.

In consequence of this we have been transplanted from the territory of mediatorial negotiations, by which the imperial consul in Apia was trying to reconcile the contending parties, and for which he had sought the co-operation of his English and American colleagues, into a state of war with the assailants, to our regret.

onle the contentary of the contest which has been forced upon us by Mataafa and his followers, with the utmost consideration for English and American interests. Our military measures have in view only the punishment of the murderers of German soldiers and the protection of our countrymen and their property. As they, on their part, are at war with Tamasese, our interference will necessarily assume the character of assistance to Tamasese.

In the endeavor for the just punishment of a murderous crime we hope for the co-operation of the treaty powers in Samoa in friendship with us, and we ask the Government of the United States to be good enough to furnish the consuls and the commanders of its ships of war in Samoa with suitable instructions. Our armed forces there are instructed to avoid and to prevent all injury to neutral commerce and property, and to adopt measures of reprisal and destruction only against the followers of the party which initiated the contest against our troops by a murderous attack.

We shall, of course, abide by the agreements with America and England with respect to Samoa, and pay due regard under all circumstances to the rights of those powers as established by treaty.

I beg your excellency to bring this communication to Mr. Bayard's knowledge by reading it to him, and to leave a copy of it with him, if he requests it.

During the reading, Mr. SPRINGER said: How does this come up at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is an executive document that the Chair desires to lay before the House before adjournment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to it being printed in the

Mr. McCREARY. I hope it will be read. [Cries of "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the communication would have been completed had there not been interruption.

The reading was resumed and concluded; and the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular order, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, January 30, 1889.

*Copy and translation left at the Department of State, January 28, 1889, by Count von Arco-Valley.

Mr. TAULBEE said: I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. My point of order order is that this reading of this document is not in order, as we are now proceeding under a special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been the universal practice of the House when an important communication is received from the executive department to see that it is promptly referred, even if it be necessary to stop a roll-call.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to know who is to determine the importance of the documents and say that it is to interrupt business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In this instance the Chair will determine that on this occasion at any rate. [Applause.]

The reading was resumed and concluded; and the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed. Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the next amendment to the bill under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That no provision of this act shall be construed to authorize the extinguishment of the Indian title to any of the lands in said Indian Territory which by virtue of any existing law would inure to the benefit of any railroad corporation, or the title to which would vest in any such corporation for the extinguishment of the Indian title thereof, or on the same becoming part of the public lands of the United States; but all such lands shall be held by said Indians as tribes or in severalty, or shall be held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the Indians interested therein, in pursuance of such agreement with such tribes in said Territory as shall be entered into consistent with this provision and in conformity with the several provisions of this act; but such lands shall not become a part of the public lands of the United States or inure to the benefit of or vest in any such railroad corporation or any assignee or mortgages thereof. No act hereafter done by any officer or agent of the United States, or treaty, contract, or agreement entered into by any such officer or agent or any Indian tribe in conflict with the foregoing provisions, or which shall validate or give effect to any grant of land in said Indian Territory made by any railroad corporation, or shall tend to validate or give effect to any such grant or to any assignment or mortgage of any such land, shall be null and void; and this provision shall be constructed as controlling any other provision of this act that may be in conflict therewith; that all lands and rights granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by an act approved January 27, A. D. 1866, for the construction of a branch road from the point at which the line of said road strikes the Canadian River eastwardly to a point in the western boundary line of Arkansas, at or near the town of Van Buren, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited for the failure of said company to perform the conditions of said grant.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that amendment. It was agreed to unanimously in committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Page 9, lines 15, 16, and 17, strike out the words "be liable to taxation after the first installment of the purchase-money shall have been paid; but the same shall."

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Speaker pro-tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for a division.
Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amendment, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has read the amendment and the House has voted upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have it read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that. Mr. BUCHANAN. There is objection to that.

Mr. HOOKER. I call for a division.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I make the point of order that the vote had been taken and duly declared by the Chair, and that the call for a division is

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote had been taken, but there was much confusion in the Hall. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a division, and the Chair is always disposed to give the greatest latitude to the exercise of the right of a member to demand a division.

The House divided on the amendment; and there were-ayes 44, noes

Mr. HOOKER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to act as

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. There seems to be a disposition on the part of some gentlemen to adjourn, and I desire to ask whether, if the House should now adjourn, it would be in order to resume this business at the point where we now are immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the motion to adjourn in order?
Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To settle the question raised by the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair will have read the decision of the Speaker of the House upon a similar order, when a like question arose upon what is known as the "direct-tax bill." The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Johnston, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

The Speaker. That is not in order. The Clerk will read the latter portion of the order made by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

"And at 4 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments and upon ordering the said bill to be read a third time and upon the passage of the same, and the votes thereon shall then be taken in the House."

The Speaker. It will be observed that under the terms of this order, after the Committee of the Whole has risen and reported the bill, nothing is in order except to take the votes upon those questions on which the previous question has been ordered. The language is, "the votes thereon shall then be taken in the House;" and the Chair thinks the word "thereon" relates to all the questions on which the previous question has been ordered. The question is now upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

me.
The question being on the passage of the bill,
Several Members. Yeas and nays.
Mr. OATES. On the passage of this bill I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. Johnston, of North Carolina. I would like to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that under the order of the House that motion is not in order. The Clerk will call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will observe that the Speaker of the House ruled on that occasion (the language of the order being identically the same as that of the order in this case) that no motion was in order which was not embraced in the order itself.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the motion to adjourn is not involved, not relating to the disposition of the subject before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is true that there was not a motion to adjourn pending, but the motion to adjourn, being always in order, is no more in order than a motion to recommit a bill after the previous question has been ordered upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the regular order.
Mr. BLOUNT. The question is so important that I prefer to take an appeal and have the House determine it.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to submit the question to the House. The Chair decides that under the present order order no motion except those embraced in the order is in order.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some doubt as to the right to make this motion at this time, yet I know that gentlemen do not desire to overrule the decision of the Chair—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the regular order. The decision has already been made.

already been made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is in order, because there is an appeal pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an appeal pending, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. As I have said, there seems to be some doubt about this question, yet I am sure that gentlemen do not desire to overrule the decision of the Chair. I suggest, therefore, with deference both to the Chair and to the House, that the Chair submit the question to the House for decision without an appeal being taken. Members to the House for decision without an appeal being taken. Members are in doubt, but if the Chair will submit the question the House can determine it for itself.

Mr. HOOKER. With all due respect to the present occupant of the chair, I desire to submit that his decision in this case is not in conformity with the uniform rulings on this point as made by the permanent Speaker and by other gentlemen who have occupied the chair. Clause 5 of Rule XVI provides—

A motion to fix the date to which the House shall adjourn, a motion to adjourn and to take a recess shall always be in order.

So that I take it for granted the special order does not deprive the House of a power without which we might be compelled to remain perpetually in session for the consideration of this strange bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair fully appreciates the importance of the proposition submitted as well as the argument of the remain of tance of the proposition submitted, as well as the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi. But while a motion to adjourn is always in order, a motion to recommit after the previous question has been ordered is likewise, under the rules of the House, always in order. The Speaker, as will be observed, did not confine himself in his ruling to the simple proposition then submitted to the House, but stated broadly that no motion was in order except those specified in the special order, which would of course exclude the motion to adjourn. But if the genwhich would of course excitate the motion to adjourn. But it the gentle-man from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], after the statement of the gentle-man from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], will withdraw his appeal, the Chair will submit to the House the motion to adjourn, so that the House by its vote may determine the question as to the right to adjourn now under this order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw the appeal so that the sense of the House may be taken on this question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us get through with this matter first.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman of Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has the right to make the motion to reconsider, provided he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. TAULBEE. I voted against the proposition, and I want the opportunity to do so again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules the gentleman has not the right to make the motion to reconsider, if he did not vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my appeal, so that the House may be free to decide this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then submit the motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House do now adjourn, so that the House may determine by its vote as to its right under the order to adjourn at this time.

The question was put; and the Speaker protempore said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were-ayes 134, noes 37. So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. GUENTHER, from the Select Committee to Inquire into the Importation of Contract Laborers, Convicts, Paupers, etc., submitted the following as the views of the minority:

[To accompany bill H. R. 12291.]

The undersigned, member of the Select Committee to Inquire into the Importation of Contract Laborers, Convicts, Paupers, etc., agrees with the majority of the committee in reaching the conclusion that some law should be enacted which would, more effectually than the present laws, restrict and if possible stop entirely the influx into the United States of all such persons who, instead of benefiting our country, as the large majority of immigrants undoubtedly do, are a direct source of evil in many ways.

The undersigned thinks that a large number of people who now fill our poorhouses, insane asylums, hospitals, and other charitable institutions, as well as the hordes of the most ignorant, most wrethed, and least desirable people of certain parts of Europe, who now crowd some of our largest cities, and whose presence enables selfish employers of labor to force and keep down the wages of American laborers, both native and adopted, should never have been admitted to land in the United States. He is, however, of the opinion that no law should be passed to lessen the immigration of industrious, law-abiding people, who come here in good faith with the intention of making this country their permanent home, who bring their families with them, and who in due course of time become useful and valuable citizens of the Republic, especially when every unprejudiced mind must admit that that class of immigrants for the last fifty years has been one of the main causes of our unexampled progress in every field of industry and enterprise.

The undersigned opposes any measure that would unnecessarily annoy the desirable immigrant, but he is in favor of all such measures as would most likely result in excluding all such foreign elements whose coming is not a benefit to our country, but rather the opposite. He is of the opinion that exemption from the contract-labor law should apply to professors in universities.

The penalty for any violation of the provisions of this act should apply to all persons, citizens of the United States in

The undersigned is also in favor of paying the head-tax, which he would fix at $1, into a separate fund, out of which the expense to carry out this law and similar ones should be met, and whatever surplus accumulates should be used for the benefit, comfort, and protection of immigrants.

He does not believe that the consular inspection, as provided for in section 5, affords the best and most practical method for the purpose of regulating immiaffords the best and most practical method for the purpose of regulating immigration.

The additional duties that would be imposed upon our consuls and consular agents would be such as to require a considerable increase of their clerical force. The immigration into our country during the fiscal year 1887 was 546,889. In 1882 it reached 788,992.

Under the proposed law it would become necessary for about eighty of our diplomatic representatives, consuls, and consular agents to make inquiries into the previous and present physical and moral condition of from 500,000 to 800,000 records resumment.

people per annum.

How they will be able to obtain reliable information does not clearly appear. The foreign authorities might or might not furnish the same; they might suppress what they would see fit. They might pay no attention whatever to inquiries made by our diplomatic or consular officers. What then? The said officers would be obliged to send special messengers to the places where applicants for consular certificates had resided, which might be hundreds of miles away.

It is evident that if the spirit and intent of the proposed legislation were carried out so as to make it of any practical use, it would imposes a large amount of work and very great expense.

The undersigned has therefore substituted a different method, which he believes to be more simple and practical. (See substitute proposed, sections 4 and 5 of amended bill.) He believes that the provisions contained therein would effectually exclude just those foreign elements that do not readily assimilate with the American people.

The undersigned has proposed some other amendments which he believes would perfect the bill, so that the same as amended would read as follows:

To the Congress:

To the Congress:

I had the honor on the 15th instant to communicate to your honorable body certain correspondence and documents in relation to affairs in the Samoan Islands, and having since that date received further dispatches from the vice-consul at Apis, and the commander of the United States naval vessel Nipsic in those waters, I lose no time in laying them before you.

I also transmit herewith the full text of an instruction from Prince von Bismarck to the German minister at this capital, which was communicated to the Secretary of State on the afternoon of the 28th instant.

This appears to be an amplification of a prior telegraphic instruction on the same subject communicated through the same channel, and being set forth in the note of the Secretary of State to Count von Arco-Valley, the German minister, of the 12th instant, was duly laid before Congress with my last message in relation to Samoan affairs.

It is also proper to inform you that on Monday, the 28th instant, the occasion of the communication of the note of the Prince Chancellor, the Secretary of State was given to understand by the German minister that a proposition from his Government to that of the United States for a conference on the Samoan subject was on its way by mail, having left Berlin on the 20th instant, so that its arrival here in due course of mail could be looked for in a very short time.

In reply to an inquiry from the Secretary of State whether the proposition referred to was for a renewal of the joint conference between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, which was suspended in July, 1887, or for a consideration of Samoan affairs ab now, the German minister stated his inability to answer until the proposition, which left Berlin on the 20th instant, should have been received.

I shall hereafter communicate to the Congress all information received by me in relation to the Samoan status.

Mr. BLAIR. I find upon my desk a bundle of memorials. Ido not Mr. Blair. I find upon my desk a bundle of memorials. I do not know how they came to be transmitted to me, but they have evidently been among my papers for some time. They must have come during my absence. They are memorials numerously signed and evidently with a great deal of care, for they are the original signatures throughout of men who respectfully protest against the passage of Senate bill 650, introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], "to suppress cotton-seed oil as a substitute for hog's land." The memorialists set out their reasons at considerable length, and subscribe themselves as cotton-plantars of the South. I believe, or as largely interested. selves as cotton-planters of the South, I believe, or as largely interested in the cotton-seed-oil business.

I do not know how long these memorials may have been here. They have never been called to my attention before. I find them among my papers and I now present them. I think there has been no action upon the bill. There is nothing on the memorials to indicate from what States they come, or I would give them to the Senators representing the States where the memorialists reside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials will be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAWES. I have not seen those memorials. I have no recollection of introducing any bill making war on cotton-seed oil. If I have done so I have been made the innocent instrument of somebody.

Mr. BLAIR. The memorials were evidently prepared with a great deal of care, and the signatures indicate that they are gentlemen who are in earnest. That is all I can say about it.

Mr. DAWES. I wish they were prepared with as much regard to the actual facts as they seem to have been prepared as indicated by Mr. BLAIR. I present the petition of Evaline R. Clarke, a native-born citizen of the United States and of the State of New York, wherein she resides, most earnestly petitioning Congress for the removal of her political disabilities, and that she may be invested with the right of suffrage and of holding office, and also inclosing a form of a bill. I move that both the petition and draught of a bill be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. mittee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also hold in my hand an envelope addressed to me personally, headed "Please present the inclosed petition for Sunday-rest law from Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Knights of Labor Assembly "—that is in print. I suppose there was a mistake probably made in it, as this petition is from the Congregational Church in Windsor, Mo. This petition is of the same kind, and is signed "Congregational Church, Windsor, Mo., Frank Wilfield Hullinger, pastor; P. D. McAvery, clerk; 88 adult members." I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The paper was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as fol-

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Home-Market Club, Boston, Mass., held on Tuesday, January 29, at headquarters, No. 55 Bedford street, the following resolution was unanimously passed:
Whereas it is important that the evil of undervaluations of imports and maladministration of the customs laws should be remedied as quickly as possible, and the Senate bill in its administrative features provides legislation in the main desirable, which, if at once enacted, would place in the hands of the incoming administration the proper machinery wherewith this great reform could be eammenced: We respectfully urge upon our representatives in Congress that they exert their influence to secure the passage of a tariff measure which shall embody the best features of the Senate bill. We also appeal to all members of Congress, regardless of party, to unite upon this much-needed measure to protect the Government against fraud, and place all ports and all importers upon an equality.

Mr. MANDERSON presented resolutions adopted by the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, favoring the passage of House bills 11027 and 11266, in relation to the adulteration of food, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Private Dalzell, of Ohio, praying for commutation of rations to soldiers of the war of the rebellion while on furlough; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALLEGED UNDERVALUATION OF IMPORTED CUTLERY.

Mr. VEST. During the debate on the tariff bill I had occasion to refer to the testimony of Mr. Saxton, of the firm of Alfred Field & Co., and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] then stated that an affidavit was on file in the Treasury Department by Mr. Taussig, who was also a witness before the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. who was also a witness before the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and myself in regard to the cutlery items of that bill, to the effect that Alfred Field & Co. had been guilty of undervaluation of imported cutlery goods to the extent of 46 per cent. As I was to some extent responsible for having brought the name of Mr. Saxton, of the firm of Alfred Field & Co., before the Senate, I want to present an affidavit, which I find upon my return to the Senate this morning, signed by this Mr. Taussig, which is as follows:

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, SS:

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, 88:

Walter M. Taussig, being duly sworn, says:
It having been stated by Senator Platt, of Connecticut, in the debate on the cutlery schedule January 19, and published in the Record of January 20, that I have made an affidavit, and that such affidavit is on file in the Treasury Department, charging that the house of Alfred Field & Co. had undervalued cutlery 46 per cent., I hereby swear that I have never made any such affidavit, and I also swear that I believe I am the man referred to by Senator Platt as being one of the witnesses before Senators Vest and Vance.

W. M. TAUSSIG.

A bill (H. R. 10691) to increase the pension of Mary A. Bedel.
Mr. BLAIR. I also report back adversely the bill (S. 3489) to increase the pension of Mary A. Bedel. This is a Senate bill identical with the House bill which has passed the other House, and that bill being reported favorably, the Senate bill should be indefinitely post-

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

PENSION FOR LOSS OF BOTH HANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report back the bill (S. 379) to allow soldiers and sailors in the United States service who have lost both hands an increased pension, with the recommendation that the Senate concur in the amendments thereto of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having passed the Senate, and having been amended in the House of Representatives and reand having been amended in the House of Representatives and returned with the amendments, the Committee on Pensions recommend that the Senate agree to the amendments made by the House of Representatives. The amendments of the House will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "hands," strike out the words "or the use of both hands;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all persons who, in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, have lost both hands, shall be entitled to a pension of $100 per month.

And amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill to increase pensions in certain cases."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. EVARTS. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report back certain papers referred to that committee, that they may be preserved in the archives of the Senate, with a written report, which I ask may be read and printed.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which were referred the copies of the certificate of the ascertainment of the vote of the State of Kansas, and of similar certificates from other States, for electors for President and Vice-President, transmitted to the two Houses by the Secretary of State, reports:

That the purpose and effect of the provisions of section 3 of the act of February 3, 1887, under and in pursuance of which the certificate of the ascertainment of the electors appointed in these several States has been communicated to the Secretary of State, and of which copies have been transmitted to the two Houses of Congress by the Secretary of State, have been completely satisfied by Houses of Congress by the Secretary of State, have been completely sausued by this proceeding.

The promptitude and authenticity and publicity of the ascertainment of the appointment of electors in the several States, provided by the statute, have been thus secured, and these documents form no part of those that are by law provided for in respect of the transaction of the count of the votes for President and Vice-President.

The committee therefore reports back the papers referred to the committee for their preservation in the archives of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed, and the certificates will be placed on the files of the Senate.

PRINTING OF REVENUE BILL

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following order; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Ordered, That 5,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue be printed with the amendments of the Senate, in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3886) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Arizona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3887) to amend an act entitled "An act He also introduced a bill (S. 3887) to amend an act entitled "An act to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1875," approved August 13, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3888) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States and to pay said Willbur such sum of money expenses.

with the United States, and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as may be found due to him thereon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 3889) for the relief of W. P. Wilson, administrator of Eliza M. Dawson, deceased, of Marshall County, Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. REAGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing for the purchase of the site of Fort Elliott, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAMPTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROCEEDS OF CAPTURED AND ABANDONED COTTON.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate a statement showing the total gross amount of the proceeds in money of cotton and other property which were received into the Treasury or by Treasury officials under the so-called captured and abandoned property acts: and the total gross amount of such proceeds which have been restored to claimants or otherwise paid out from the Treasury under authority of the Secretary of the Treasury or upon judgments of the Court of Claims; together with an estimate, if it be practicable to make one, of the total gross amount of claims now pending for the recovery of portions of the proceeds aforesaid.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4961) to provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the follow-

A bill (S. 2441) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of James R. Berry as late auditor of the State of Arkansas; and

A bill (S. 3794) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company a right of way through a part of the Crow Indian reservation, in Montana Territory.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 83 of the Revised Statutes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CASWELL, Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, and Mr. LANHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.
